To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia:

Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia, and a citizen of said State, having its principal office at Wheeling, in said State and District, brings this, its bill of complaint, against John Mitchell, of Indianapolis, Indiana, and a citizen of the State of Indiana, individually, and as President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; and T. L. Lewis of Bridgeport, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as Vice-President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; and W. And, therefore, your orator complains and says:

First. Your orator, Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, is a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia, having its principal office at Wheeling, in Ohio County, in said State; that it is the owner of about five thousand (5,000) acres of coal situated contiguous to its coal mine which is at Benwood; that its coal mine is equipped with the necessary plant for mining coal and has shipping facilities on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and its various shipments by rail originate on that road and at its mine; that your orator has been for some time past and is now engaged in mining coal and shipping the same to the open markets of the United States; that the product of its mine is large amounting to about fourteen hundred tons per day, and that it has customers residing in all parts of the United States, and that a large portion of its trade is during the summer and fall months when coal is carried to the northwest by steamers upon the lakes while navigation is not interrupted by ice, while another portion of its trade has been for years and now is supplying coal for fuel for engines of the said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company delivered by a coaling device to the engines at its tipple and likewise from large storage bins which have been erected and are in use by your orator and by said railroad company wherefrom to coal their engines, said storage bin being located at the end of a considerable steel structure, trestle or viaduct located near the round house of said Railroad Company at Benwood, in the construction of which steel trestle and coal bins your orator has expended and now has invested a large sum of money; that on mining coal, the coal as mined is brought to the surface and mouth of the mine and then for interstate commerce is delivered to the common carrier and by it carried to its destination within the United States but without the State of West Virginia; that your orator has made large contracts for the future delivery of coal to points within and without 4 the State of West Virginia, but within the United States, especially for lake trade; that your orator alone furnishes daily to said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company between five hundred and six hundred tons, engine coal; that the profits and earnings of your orator depend largely upon its mining and producing coal during the summer and fall seasons of the year, and especially is this true of this year as to its said contracts not yet filled, but which it has the ability and unless unlawfully interfered with by the defendants expects to fill; that prior to April 1st, 1906, your orator operated its said mine by employing a large number of men who were affiliated with said United Mine Workers of America, but on April 1st, 1906, a strike having been ordered by said association the employees of your orator who were working for it at that time continued to work until April 16th, 1906, and on that day under renewed demands of said United Mine Workers of America went out on a strike and ceased to work for your orator, and said strike so declared is still in force so far as your orator and its mine is concerned; that at the time your orator's said employes went out on said strike they had no grievance, had made no complaint to your orator, and your orator had not failed to comply with its then contracts with its said employes with reference to their work; that said strike was ordered by the said association and your orator's said employes went out on said strike as aforesaid in pursuance thereof for the reason that certain coal operators in other sections of the country had refused to accede to certain demands of said association, and the ordering out of your orator's said employes and their going out on a strike as aforesaid were means amongst others used by said association at that time for the purpose of compelling said coal operators to sign a certain scale of wages which had been prepared and was being insisted upon by said association as the price of its permission being given to its members to remain at work for said coal operators; that at that time your orator being advised of the controversy between said association and said coal operators proposed to its said employes that they continue at work for your orator pending the signing of the scale by said coal operators, and that on the signing of the scale your orator would pay its said employes any additional sum that would have been earned by them during the time intervening between April 1st, 1906, and the signing of the scale, provided that the scale when signed should provide for an advance in wages on work done on and after said April 1st, 1906; that while your orator's said employes were ready and willing to accept your orator's proposition, nevertheless the said employes being members of the United Mine Workers of America were by that association ordered to 5 strike, and after having continued in your orator's employ until April 16th, 1906, went out on a strike as aforesaid

under the renewed orders of said United Mine Workers of America that they should strike, which going out on strike on April 16th, 1906, was without justification and without excuse, and greatly to your orator's injury, embarrassment in business and financial loss, owing to its inability to carry out its contracts which it then had for the sale and delivery of coal and for supplying coal to the engines of said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company at its tipple and bins aforesaid; that your orator's said mine was shut down and was not operated after April 16th, 1906, until June 12th, 1906, but upon resumption of operation on June 12th, 1906, your orator started to run its mine on a non-union basis and which every man who accepted employment at the mine was told at the time of entering your orator's service that there was no union at the mine, that the company would not allow any, and that no union man could remain in the employ of the company while recognizing and giving paramount allegiance to the union and obeying its orders, and if any employe of the company joined the union he could not work any longer for the company; that under those circumstances and with full knowledge of the said conditions of employment many men applied to your orator for work and being employed entered the employment of your orator under an express contract not to join the United Mine Workers of America and worked in its mine and have continued so to work until the present time with satisfaction to themselves and to your orator, although from time to time since your orator has been operating its said mine on a non-union basis, efforts have been repeatedly made by officers and agents representing the United Mine Workers of America and its subordinate associations or branches to induce your orator to agree to re-unionize its mine and to sign the scale of the United Mine Workers of America; that your orator has repeatedly refused to have anything to do with the United Mine Workers of America, or any of its subordinate associations or branches, or with any of its officers, agents, employes, or servants, and has made known to them and to each of them your orator's determination to run its mine non-union and its purpose not to permit any interference by said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, its officers, agents, employes and servants, with its operation of its mine or with its business, whereupon said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches by its officers, agents, employes and servants have sought and are now seeking by inducements, threats and intimidation, but so far without physical violence, to cause the employes of your orator to leave its service and to cause others who have 6 engaged to enter their service to break their engagements of service and not work for your orator, and to prevent others from working for your orator, all with the professed, avowed and actual purpose which your orator says is an unlawful purpose, of compelling your orator to recognize the union, to force your orator to employ none but persons who are members of the United Mine Workers of America, to compel your orator to pay such scale of wages as said United Mine Workers of America arbitrarily fix and demand, and to submit your orator's business and its property to the jurisdiction and control of said union, becoming by the union's rules obliged to employ or to discharge whom the said union, its subordinate associations or branches, and its officers, agents, employees, and servants shall direct or require.

Your orator says that the said United Mine Workers of America, including its said subordinate associations or branches is a secret voluntary organization having certain expressed objects, some lawful and others unlawful, and that it is in the endeavor to carry out its unlawful purposes that the matters and things herein complained of by your orator have arisen.

Your orators says that the said United Mine Workers of America, although not incorporated as aforesaid, was organized on or about January 25th, 1890, that from the proceedings of its last annual convention, which was held in Indianapolis, Indiana, from January 15th to January 22d, inclusive, 1907, it appears that it had a membership of 230,667 in 1906; that its income for the fiscal year ending November 30th, 1906, was $1,081,408.32, its expenditures for the same period were $1,232,994.01, and that its balance on hand December 1st 1906, was $337,960.71, and that it is claimed for it that it is the largest labor organization in America.

Indicative of the character and purpose of said United Mine Workers of America and its said subordinate associations or branches, your orator refers to and says that the following are some of the provisions of their respective constitutions.

Sec. 1. That our Initiation Fee must conform with the National Constitution.

Sec. 3. Any member of our organization working in or around the mine, working on idle days or extra time, in violation of our Constitution or agreements, shall be fined $2.50 for each offense.

Further indicating some of the purposes of said United Mine Workers of America, your orator refers to and says that the following are some of the provisions contained in the manual of District No. 6 of the United Mine Workers of America and of the manual of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America.

Opening.

The hour of the meeting having arrived, the President shall take the chair and give one rap with the gavel, upon which all officers and members shall be seated.

If no regular door keeper has been appointed, the President shall appoint one of the brothers to see that none but members of the Union are admitted.

The oath administered to each member on his admission and initiation is:

"I do sincerely promise, of my own free will, to abide by the laws of this Union; to bear true allegiance to, and keep inviolate the principles of the United Mine Workers of America; never to discriminate against a fellow worker on account of creed, color or nationality; to defend freedom of thought, whether expressed by tongue or pen, to defend on all occasions and to the extent of my ability the members of our organization.

"That I will not reveal to any employer or boss the name of any one a member of our Union. That I will assist all members of our organization to obtain the highest wages possible for their work; that I will not accept a brother's job who is idle for advancing 18 the interests of the Union or seeking better remuneration for his labor; and, as the mine workers of the entire country are competitors in the labor world, I promise to cease work at any time I am called upon by the organization to do so. And I further promise to help and assist all brothers in adversity, and to have all mine workers join our Union that we may be able to enjoy the fruits of our labor; that I will never knowingly wrong a brother or see him wronged if I can prevent it. To all of this I pledge my honor to observe and keep as long as life remains, or until I am absolved by the United Mine Workers of America."

Your orator further says that the paid up membership of said District 6 United Mine Workers of America was in 1906, 36,372, and on March 1st, 1907, Sub-District 5 of District 6 U. M. W. of A. had 108 locals in good standing and paid up membership of 12,500.

Your orator says that the defendant, John Mitchell, is President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant, T. L. Lewis, is Vice-President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant, W. B. Wilson, is Secretary-Treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant, William Green, is President of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant, D. H. Sullivan, is Vice-President of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant, George W. Savage, is Secretary-Treasurer of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant, A. R. Watkins, is President of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant, John Zelenka, is Vice-President of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant,

Lee Rankin, is Secretary-Treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District United Mine Workers of America; and that the defendant, Thom Hughes, is an organizer of the United Mine Workers of America and that each and all of the said defendants, John Mitchell, T. L Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullican, George W Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, Lee Rankin and Thom Hughes, have agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselv into a conspiracy, under the name of the United Mine Workers America, to unlawfully persuade, entice and procure your orator miners or mine workers, employed by your orator and working fo your orator in or around your orator's mine, to break, violat 19 and disregard their several contracts with your orator, a with the avowed purpose of compelling your orator to unioniz its plant, without your orator's consent, and to such end have unlaw fully and maliciously agreed, confederated, combined and forme themselves into a conspiracy to compel by threats and intimidatio and by other unlawful means your orator's said employees to joi the Union and to apply to their own relation with your orator, i the matter of their employment, the rules of the Union, and t enable said Union to apply its rules and regulations to your orato under penalty of closing down your orator's mine, provided you orator still refuses to unionize its plant and recognize the Union.

Your orator says that it has no contractual relation whatever with any one of the defendants hereto and that each of said defendant is fully aware that your orator is operating a non-union mine and will not consent to operate a Union mine; that its employees are non-union; that said employees are required by your orator at the time of entering service to agree not to become connected with the Union, while employed by your orator, and that if they do join the Union, their employment with the orator shall cease; that with such understanding your orator's employees enter into its employment and that they are now working for your orator under such contract and with such conditions, all of which is known to these defendants and to each of them, as aforesaid.

Your orator further says that the said John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, Lee Rankin and Thomas Hughes, individually, and as officers, agents, employees and servants, as aforesaid, of said United Mine Workers of America and of its said subordinate associations or branches are fully aware that your orator's said employees are satisfied with their employment; that your orator is engaged in mining coal and in fulfilling contracts for coal; that it would be impossible to fulfill those contracts without the labor of its said employees and that it would entail upon your orator great financial loss to have its ability to fulfill its contracts interfered with by the failure of its men to work longer for your orator, and likewise would entail great loss and damage to your orator to have its mine shut down and to have a strike declared, yet your orator says that the said defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out and are now about to finally accomplish, namely: to cause your orator's mine to be shut down, its plant to remain idle, its contracts to be 20 broken and unfulfilled until such time as your orator shall submit to the demand of the Union, that it shall unionize its plant and having submitted to such demand unionize its plant by employing only union men who shall become subject to the orders of the Union, paramount to the orders of your orator, their employer, and until in thus unionizing its plant your orator shall surrender its control and the management of its business to the Union of the various rules and regulations laid down by the Union and accede in advance to every demand the said Union by its said officers, agents, employees and servants may make.

Your orator says the effectuating of this purpose is imminent and the damage threatened is great and irremediable, and that your orator's loss so far has been in excess of $2,000.00 exclusive of interest and costs, while on the accomplishment of said purpose of said defendants and the shutting down of your orator's mine the damage to your orator would be still greater and incapable of definite ascertainment, being incalculable, but amounting to many thousands of dollars.

Your orator further says that it pays as much as the Union scale of wage to its said employees, and that the said defendants in thus unlawfully and maliciously agreeing together, confederating, combining and conspiring to effectuate by unlawful means the unionizing of your orator's mine are simply seeking power, for the purpose of strengthening the Union in future contests with employers of labor, to compel all miners and mine workers to join the Union, establish a monoply and force employers of that kind of labor, and especially to force your orator, to yield to the Union's demands, or else to give up its business.

Your orator says that the Union is not a competitor of your orator in the labor market; that the Union does not employ labor and is not an employer of labor.

Your orator says that at the Annual Convention of the United Mine Workers of America, held at Indianapolis, Indiana, January 15th to January 22nd, inclusive, 1907, the said defendants, John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka and Lee Rankin, were present and participated in its proceedings, during which it was openly stated with reference to the objects of the Union,—"Organized labor contends that as industry cannot exist labor, labor has the right to say under what conditions it shall be employed, thereby dictating the management of the productive end of the business."

Your orator says that at the same convention the defendant, T. L. Lewis, stated that he had charge of the organizing force 21 under the direction of the President; that there has been a tremendous loss in the membership of the Union as a result of the strike of April 1, 1906; that he had been instrumental in building up three national organizations of mine workers and was one of the delegates and had attended the Convention which laid the foundation of the United Mine Workers of America; that the Union had "closed shop" wage agreements with operators whereunder 181,384 persons were employed in the year 1905, and that all of those men were required to be members of the Union; that the American continent is not large enough to maintain two organizations of miners, and that he favored one organization of the mine workers of the American continent and a complete recognition of the Union's right to organize in every mining district in the country.

Said defendant, W. B. Wilson, at said Convention, read his report as Secretary-Treasurer, in which he said—that resultant from the strike of April 1, 1906, the Union had had a large number of men on strike and a comparatively small amount of money in the Treasury and that the Union had been unable to contribute sufficient money to the various districts to enable the payment of very large strike benefits; that this created dissatisfaction and that the question was frequently asked—"What has become of our money;" that he had been in charge of the finances of the organization and that there was paid for aid to strikers in the years 1900 to 1906, inclusive, $5,191,554.77, and that to this amount the cost of organizing was to be added.

Your orator says that at said convention a Committee's Report was unanimously adopted, which contained the following: "Your committee recommend that this convention heartily approve of the Board's action in withdrawing a part of our organizing force from active service, as a result of a depleted treasury, but we further recommend that the force be increased whenever, in the discretion of the Board, our fund would warrant."

Your orator says that at said Convention said defendant, T. L. Lewis, in making an address in speaking of organizing West Virginia and the unorganized sections of Pennsylvania, said:

"We will organize them by a strike movement"; while another delegate in his address at the same convention, at the same time, said: "I agree with President Green and Vice-President Lewis that you never can get those men organized except at the end of a general strike, but I warn you not to go into it until you are thoroughly prepared"; and in addressing the Convention at the same 22 time in the same discussion another delegate in recommending and explaining organization said, speaking of the Union's method,—"If we are able at a colliery to force all the men to become members of the Union we do so. If we are too weak, we do not attempt it, but keep gradually working among the men until we are able to accomplish our end," while John Mitchell in addressing the Convention as President said: "I believe it is possible, indeed I believe it is probable, that in the not distant future we will be able to inaugurate a movement in West Virginia and the other unorganized fields that will involve them in a strike, and then we will expect you to furnish the sinews of war, as you have done in the past, to keep these men in idleness"; and again, "If one year hence it is my judgment that a suspension of mining throughout the United States would be best, I will favor that policy."

Your orator says that at a Convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America held at Wheeling, March 14-19, 1907, the said defendants, A. R. Watkins, Lee Rankin, T. L. Lewis, John Zelenka and Thomas Hughes were present and participated in the proceedings.

Said defendant, A. R. Watkins, in his report which he submitted to the Convention as President of Sub-District 5 of District 6 U. M. W. of A. said: "The general strike in our sub-district last year was characterized by a great deal of bitter feeling by a few operators trying to operate their mines on a non-union basis. The attempt of those operators to operate their mines was defeated by the splendid loyalty of our members in standing shoulder to shoulder in that bitter struggle. You and those who stood so loyally to the organization deserve great credit for your conduct, under the trying conditions that existed in some sections of the district during the strike." * * * "At our last Annual Convention it was unanimously decided that the Eastern Ohio scale should apply to the West Virginia Pan Handle counties. The operators of those counties refused to meet us in joint convention to sign a general scale. Some of the operators even refused to sign a contract and this resulted in several local strikes, all of which were settled except the one now on at Elm Grove where the men are on strike and are standing firm. It is with regret that some of the locals in the Pan Handle broke away and the members went to work without any union or without getting a scale signed.

I am of the opinion that there are many good active union men in the Pan Handle counties, and if we all work together we can organize every mine worker in that section and establish scale rates," and expressed his wish that "Time may enable us by active 23 work, to make the United Mine Workers the most glorious and powerful of all trades unions."

The defendant, Lee Rankin, in his report to that Convention as Secretary-Treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District 6 U. M. W. of A. said, in speaking of the strike declared April 1, 1906,—"After several attempts to reach an agreement with the Operators of sub-district 5 our members were compelled to strike and that strike developed into the most bitter struggle that has taken place since the formation of our sub-district.

The failure of the district organization to provide each striking member with benefits to the amount of $3.00 per week caused considerable friction and this was taken advantage of by the enemies of the organization. What for a time seemed to be a division in our ranks encouraged certain operators with the hope that they could crush organization. In this hope they were doomed to disappointment, as later developments fully demonstrated.

When the district organization found that they could not comply with the constitution in the payment of strike benefits, a system of paying relief in orders was established. This policy was condemned and denounced by a few men, who did not stop to consider why the system was established.

After a great deal of work on the part of your representatives, the reason for adopting such a policy was made clear to the members, who then took renewed courage and showed a determination to win in the struggle that then existed.

With all the obstacles that we had to overcome last year, we have reason to feel proud that sub-district 5 came out of the strike with such credit to itself and the principles of unionism that it represents.

To the fidelity, unity and activity of the mine workers of this sub-district is due the credit for winning in the struggle of last year. If any mistakes were made in that contest, let us profit by the experience of the past and be that much better prepared for the future," and again said "We have one mine at Bellaire, O., and five mines in the Pan Handle district which I believe should be organized. I believe those mines can be organized and in my opinion this convention should adopt some plan to organize those mines."

Your orator says that the five mines referred to in the statement above made by said defendant, Lee Rankin, are Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, Glendale Coal Company, Elm Grove Coal Company, Richland Coal Company and Beech Bottom Coal Company.

Adopting that suggestion of the defendant, Lee Rankin, the following resolution was then adopted by the Convention.

24 Resolution No. 8.

"Whereas, there are miners in the Pan Handle District and Ohio that are not organized, and believing every mine should be organized, be it

Resolved, by this Ninth Annual Convention that the Sub-District officers together with the District officers, be authorized to take up the work of organizing every mine in the Sub-District as quickly as it can be done," and

Your orator says that at said convention last mentioned a resolution was also adopted as follows:

Resolution No. 10.

"Whereas, There is a growing tendency among some operators in Eastern Ohio to violate contract provisions, and having more than one mine, leave the mine idle rather than comply with agreements or settle disputes.

Whereas, be believe "an injury to one is the concern of all," and believing that disputes should be settled promptly,

Resolved, That we, the delegates of this Ninth Annual Convention, authorize the officers to close all mines of one company when such company fails to comply with contracts or settle disputes."

Your orator says that in the foregoing quotation of the language of the defendant, T. L. Lewis, reading—"It is with regret that some of the locals in the Pan Handle broke away and the members went to work without any union or without getting a scale signed," the said defendant, T. L. Lewis, referred to the Locals of the United Mine Workers of America which existed at the mine of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company and at the mine of the Glendale Coal Company at the time the said strike was declared, April 1, 1906.

Your orator says that the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company and the Glendale Coal Company are owned by the same persons; that the same persons are members of the Board of Directors of each corporation and that W. H. Koch is a stockholder, a director and General Manager of each of said mines, while the business of the Glendale Coal Company is managed from the office of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company.

Your orator says that the said defendants and each of them treated the two mines as a single concern, and have so dealt with your orator, and your orator in filing this bill refers to and makes a part of it, so far as the same may properly be done, a similar bill, coincidently prepared and filed in this court, seeking the same redress against 25 said defendants and each of them on behalf of the Glendale Coal Company as your orator in this proceeding seeks on its own behalf and makes such reference and use of all supporting exhibits and affidavits.

Your orator says that in refusing to recognize the Union after the declaration of said strike April 1, 1906, and after its men had left your orator's employment, pursuant to said strike, and in thereafter and now running its mine non-union your orator did not seek to reduce the wages of its said employees nor cause its said employees to work for less than the scale of wages established by said United Mine Workers of America, nor does your orator now seek nor contemplate any reduction in the wages of its present employees. Your orator's sole purpose in running non-union and in now insisting upon its right to do so, unhampered by and without interruption from said defendants, acting individually and as representative of the said United Mine Workers of America was and is to escape from the intolerable oppression and vicious intermeddling of the said defendants.

Your orator says that these same defendants have for some years last past been in business such as it is herein shown they are now engaged in; that they are well acquainted one with the other, and that they constitute a part of certain upper officials of the United Mine Workers, in whose hands the management of the affairs of said Union have been centralized.

Your orator says that while your orator's mine remained idle after the shut down April 16, 1906, efforts were frequently made by some one or more of said defendants to induce your orator to sign the scale and run Union, but every request of that kind met with a refusal. After your orator started up non-union about June 12th, 1906, as aforesaid, efforts were repeatedly made by one or more of the defendants to induce your orator to unionize its mine, and, failing in that, efforts were made by some one or more of said defendants to bring about by inducement, persuasion, threats, and intimidation, and by various means and devices unlawfully to induce your orator's employees to cease working for your orator, and by use of like means, devices, intimidation, threats, persuasion and inducements to prevent men willing to work for your orator not to engage to work, or if having engaged to work, then not to go to work, for your orator; but despite their efforts, your orator was able to increase the number of its employees and to increase its business, which is conducted successfully and peacefully and lawfully from that time until the present.

Your orator says that upon different occasions, since starting up non-union, as aforesaid, the different officials of the United Mine Workers of America, amongst them the defendants, John 26 Zelanka, A. R. Watkins, D. H. Sullivan and William Green, visited the General Manager of your orator at his office at the Hitchman mine and talked to him on the subject of the recognition of the Union, the signing of the scale and a reemployment of your orator's employees under the technical guise of thus entering into contract relations with your orator's employees as members of the United Mine Workers of America, and for the purpose of doing away with the express provision of your orator's contract with each of its employees that they should not become members of the Union, and if they did that their employment should thereby cease, and proposed to your orator that it recognize the Union, sign the scale and so reemploy its men. Your orator refused each and all of these propositions.

Your orator says that about July 1, 1907, the defendants, William Green, John Zelanka and A. R. Watkins, came to the office of your orator's General Manager, and had a conversation with him regarding the forming of a Miner's Union or rather the putting of your orator's employees under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America, and while your orator on that occasion, through its General Manager, distinctly stated that the proposition of said defendants would not be considered at all, still said Zelenka subsequently reported to your orator's employees, and caused that report to be spread amongst them, that he, Zelenka, Green and Watkins had had a conference with your orator's General Manager and that said General Manager had agreed to allow the United Mine Workers of America to put all of your orator's employees into the Union, and made the further statement, which he caused to be circulated amongst your orator's employees, that it was up to the employees of your orator to join the Union, or else that they would be out of a job at an early day, because only Union men would be permitted to work at the mine and that those of your orator's employees who did not join the Union would not be permitted to get a job any place else. Your orator says that its General Manager shortly after this occurence complained of the action mentioned and that said Zelenka, Green and Watkins each denied making any such statement or circulating any such report. Yet your orator says its statement in this respect is true and that in the action referred to and complained of to said defendants, said defendants were simply carrying out their unlawful purpose heretofore formed, as aforesaid, to unionize your orator's mine without its consent, there being involved in the said unionizing the doing of the many unlawful acts and for the many unlawful purposes herein stated.

Your orator says that its employees are non-union men who have entered into employment with your orator with the 27 understanding that your orator shall continue to run a non-union mine; that some of your orator's employees, employed under such condition and with such understanding, have bought property and homes and expect to have permanent employment with your orator, so running its mine non-union, and with the understanding and expectation on their part that while in the employ of your orator they shall be protected in such employment.

Your orator says that sometime during the middle of this summer of 1907, the defendants, Green, Watkins and Zelenka, called on your orator's General Manager at his office, and said Green was spokesman. He said he would like to talk organization. Your orator's General Manager stated to them then that while unionizing of the mine was out of the question yet if they had any business proposition to submit it would be listened to. Green urged that under your orator's present arrangement or contract with its employees the men felt at liberty to do as they pleased and did not feel any restraint, while if your orator would make a contract with him as president of the United Mine Workers (he is President of District 6, U. M. W. of A.) he could hold the men in check, see that all agreements incorporated in the scale were fulfilled and carried out to the letter and generally that he would see that the men lived up to their contract. To this, your orator's General Manager replied that from personal experience in the past, in dealing with the Union, he had found the facts in reality to be just the opposite from the way Green put it, and that if that was all Green had to offer there was nothing worth considering. Green then requested your orator's General Manager to think the matter over and said he would see him again about it within a couple of weeks. Several weeks after this said Green, Watkins and Zelenka met your orator's General Manager, while the latter was at the McClure House, in Wheeling, and the latter then told Green that he could see nothing in the Union's proposition that would interest him in any manner. Green then asked said General Manager if he would not put the proposition up to your orator's Board of Directors. This he did, and your orator's Board unanimously refused to have anything whatever to do with the United Mine Workers of America. Shortly after that, said defendant, Green, telephoned your orator's General Manager, asked if he had submitted the Union's proposition to your orator's Directors and was told that the proposition had been submitted and that the Directors refused absolutely to consider the matter in any manner whatever.

Your orator says that in the dealings that antedated the declaration of the strike of April 1, 1906, your orator's General Manager talked with the defendant, D. H. Sullivan, and also with 28 the defendant, William Green, and told them both that in case they brought your orator's men out on strike they would be taking away from them something they would never be able to give back, that is—reemployment with your orator. Yet despite this warning, the Union ordered the strike. Your orator's same official made the same statement to the defendant, Watkins, at about the same time and before April 1, 1906. And these statements have been by your orator's General Manager called to the attention of these same men during the repeated conferences they have had on the subject of reunionizing the mine since the declaration of the strike aforesaid.

Your orator says that under the rules of said United Mine Workers of America enforced against your orator and its employees, while your orator ran its mine Union, certain moneys, being wages earned by your orator's employees, then members of the Union, were withheld by your orator from their pay and paid over with the consent of the employees to the Secretary-Treasurer of the Local Union at your orator's mine; and at your orator's mine there was paid over by your orator to the Secretary-Treasurer of the Local Union during the two years ending April 1, 1906, a total of $9,155.88. A very much less amount was paid over by the Glendale Coal Company inasmuch as the owners of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company had become owners of the Glendale Coal Company only a few months prior to said strike, April 1, 1906. On one or more of the occasions heretofore referred to when some one or more of said defendants besought your orator to unionize its mine, your orator's General Manager stated to said defendants that with them as officers of the Union it was not so much a question of looking after the interests of the men employed by your orator as it was a question of money and that they, these defendants, were in the business for what they could get out of it, and their attention was called to the fact that nearly $10,000.00 had been turned over to them from the Hitchman mine alone in the two years just prior to the strike.

Yet your orator says that although it has refused to permit it, still the said defendants, further proceeding to carry out their conspiracy, are now endeavoring to unionize your orator's mine, and threaten, and your orator has reasonable ground to fear that they will, and so alleges, close down your orator's mine and keep it closed until your orator will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor.

Your orator says that on or about September 7th, 1907, the defendant, Thomas Hughes, was noticed about the Glendale mine and about the Hitchman mine intercepting the miners, taking lists of names of employees and trying to induce the men by 29 persuasion, threats, coercion and intimidation, and by various other unlawful methods and devices, to quit working for your orator and to join the Union, and such efforts said Hughes is keeping up at each mine, although he has been ordered off of the premises of each mine and has been directed to stay off and to let your orator's employees alone.

Your orator says that as a result of the labors of the defendant, Hughes, who has been assisted by others of the defendants, from time to time, by their counsel and advice aiding and abetting him, with their presence, about your orator's mine and about the Glendale mine, the said defendants succeeded in getting twenty-four of the employees of the Glendale mine to agree to join the Union and to quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company. And your orator says that while the said defendants have so far been unable to bring about or induce your orator's employees to quit its service, still the said Hughes has recently stated to one of your orator's miners whom he was trying to induce to leave your orator's service and join the Union, that he, Hughes, had succeeded in having one hundred and twenty-five men at the Hitchman mine sign their names agreeing to become members of the United Mine Workers of America and that just as soon as he got twenty-five more names he was going to shut the Hitchman mine down; and in this connection your orator says that fifty-four of your orator's present employees have in writing signed a statement that they are satisfied with their employment with your orator, with the wages paid to them, and with their work, and that they would like to remain in your orator's employ. Your orator employs from one hundred and seventy-five to two hundred men at its mine as a general rule and now has in its employ one hundred and sixty to one hundred and seventy-five men.

Your orator says that the said United Mine Workers of America, the said International Union United Mine Workers of America, the said District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, and the said Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, voluntary associations as aforesaid are under their Constitutions violating the common and statutory law of the State of West Virginia as well as the Constitution of said State; especially in this, to-wit; in the provisions of Section 1, Section 3 and Section 4 of Article X., Constitution International Union, U. M. W. of A.; and in the provisions of Section 1, and Section 2 of Article VIII, and Section 15 of Article IX., Constitution District No. 6, U. M. W. of A.; and in the provisions of Section 2 and Section 3 of Article 1, Section 1 of Article IV., Section 6 of Article VI. and Sections 2 and 3 of Article IX., Constitution Sub-District 5 of District 6, U. M. W. of A.; and as well in the said oath which is administered to each member of the U. M. W. of A. on his initiation.

Your orator filed herewith as part hereof the Constitution of the International Union United Mine Workers of America, the Constitution of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, the Constitution of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, the proceedings of the Eighteenth Annual Convention of the United Mine Workers of America, held in Indianapolis, Indiana, January 15th to 22d, 1907, and the proceedings of the Ninth Annual Convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, held at Wheeling, W. Va., March 14-19, 1907, to the extent only that they show the constitutional provisions hereinbefore quoted, the members' oath and the statements made during said several conventions particularly pointed out and alleged herein, as well as the said Resolutions No. 8 and No. 10 of the said Convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6, U. M. W. of A., held at Wheeling, March 14-19, 1907, as aforesaid; but asks to be permitted to withdraw the said Constitutions and the said proceedings of said Conventions, upon filing with the Clerk of this Court copies of such portions of said Constitutions and of said Conventions proceedings, as are made part hereof, certified to be such copies by such Clerk.

Your orator says that the said John Mitchell, the said T. L. Lewis, the said W. B. Wilson, acting in their several official capacities hereinbefore stated; the said William Green, the said D. H. Sullivan, the said George W. Savage, acting in their several official capacities hereinbefore stated; the said A. R. Watkins, the said John Zelenka and the said Lee Rankin, acting in their several official capacities hereinbefore stated, are representative of the said United Mine Workers of America, the said International Union United Mine Workers of America, the said District 6 United Mine Workers of America, and the said Sub-District of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, respectively; and that the said Thomas Hughes is acting as an organizer of said United Mine Workers of America, all voluntary associations; that the principal office of said United Mine Workers of America and of said International Union U. M. W. of A. is at Indianapolis, Indiana, the office of said District No. 6 U. M. W. of A. is at Columbus, Ohio, and that said Sub-District 5 of District 6 U. M. W. of A. has no office, business being transacted at the places of residence of the said A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka and Lee Rankin, President, Vice-President and Secretary-Treasurer, respectively, all residing within the State of Ohio as aforesaid; that the jurisdiction of this court is invoked on 31 the ground that your orator is a resident of the Northern District of West Virginia and a citizen of said State, and that each of the said defendants is a resident of a different state, to-wit; no defendant is a resident of the State of West Virginia, and that the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of two thousand dollars.

Your orator says that while membership of the said United Mine Workers of America, of the said District No. 6 U. M. W. of A. and of said Sub-District 5 of District 6 U. M. W. of A. is large as hereinbefore stated, yet the names and addresses of the said members of the said several associations are to your orator unknown; that if any of them should happen to be residents of the State of West Virginia they are not necessary parties hereto, are not interfering with your orator in the matters herein complained of, and that they cannot be joined without ousting the jurisdiction of this court as to the other parties, the said defendants hereto, of whose actings and doings, purposes and proposed acts and doings, your orator herein complains as hereinbefore set forth.

Your orator further says that unless enjoined by this court, the said defendants acting individually and agreeing, confederating, combining and forming themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America as aforesaid, will, in pursuance of their unlawful purposes and designs, by enticement, persuation or coercion, in one form or the other, bring about the shutting down of your orator's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business, and will without the consent and against the will of your orator compel your orator to recognize said defendants and said associations in the further transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal, and will compel your orator to contract with its employees through the said defendants as officers of the said associations under such rules and regulations made and enforced by said associations and by said defendant officers as will enable the Union to dictate the persons whom your orator shall employ and those whom your orator shall discharge, the wages your orator shall pay, and further will compel your orator to agree that each of its future employees as members of the said United Mine Workers of America shall owe and yield to said Union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employees would owe to your orator, and that they will thus take charge of, dictate the management of, and virtually control, your orator's business, and thereby perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon your orator which distinctly violate your orator's contractual common law, statutory and constitutional rights as a citizen of the state of West Virginia.

32 Your orator further says that in effecting their said object of unionizing your orator's mine the said defendants propose and threaten to, and your orator being so informed and believing it to be true, alleges on such information and belief that said defendants will and are about to, indulge in all of the many methods of accomplishing their result by the use of threats, intimidation, force, violent or abusive language, picketing your orator's premises, picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to your orator's premises and going to the homes or boarding houses of your orator's employees for the purpose of intimidating or coercing them to leave your orator's employment and to picket railroad and street cars passing to and from or through your orator's premises for the purpose of intercepting your orator's employees in going to or from your orator's premises and for the purpose of intercepting and preventing persons coming to your orator's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering into your orator's employment.

To the end, therefore, that your orator may have that relief which it can only obtain in a Court of Equity, and that the said defendants may each answer the premises, but not upon oath or affirmation, an answer under oath being hereby expressly waived by your orator, your orator now prays the court that the said John Mitchell, the said T. L. Lewis and the said W. B. Wilson, each, individually, and as President, Vice-President and Secretary-Treasurer, respectively, of the said United Mine Workers of America and of the said International Union United Mine Workers of America; the said William Green, the said D. H. Sullivan and the said George W. Savage, each, individually, and as President, Vice-President and Secretary-Treasurer, respectively, of the said District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America; the said A. R. Watkins, the said John Zelenka and the said Lee Rankin, each, individually, and as President, Vice-President and Secretary-Treasurer, respectively, of the said Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America; and the said Thomas Hughes; and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates and associates, be restrained and strictly enjoined from interfering and from combining, conspiring or attempting to interfere with employees of your orator for the purpose of unionizing your orator's mine, without your orator's consent, by representing or causing to be represented in express or implied terms, to any of your orator's employees, or to any person who might become an employee of your orator, that such person will suffer or is likely to suffer some loss or trouble in continuing in or entering the employment of your orator, assigning, representing or causing to be represented in express or implied 33 terms to such employee or employees that such loss or trouble will or may come by reason of your orator not recognizing the United Mine Workers of America, or because your orator runs a non-union mine; that the said defendants and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates and associates, be restrained and strictly enjoined from interfering and from combining, conspiring or attempting to interfere with employees of your orator for the purpose of unionizing your orator's mine, without your orator's consent, and in aid of such purpose knowingly and wilfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by your orator's employees of contracts of service known to them at the time to exist, which your orator now has with its employees, and from knowingly and wilfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by your orator's employees of contracts of service which may hereafter be entered into by persons with your orator and be known to them while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so brought to break his contract, exists, and especially from knowingly and wilfully enticing your orator's employees, present or future, knowing of such relationship, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so enticed, exists, to leave your orator's service, giving or assigning directly or indirectly as a reason for any such act so brought about, or enticement and leaving of your orator's service, that your orator does not recognize the United Mine Workers of America, or that your orator runs a non-union mine, or that the interest of the United Mine Workers of America requires that your orator shall not be permitted to run a non-union mine, or that the interest of the Union will be best promoted thereby; that the said defendants and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates and associaties, be restrained and strictly enjoined from interfering and from combining, conspiring or attempting to interfere with the employees of your orator so as knowingly and wilfully to bring about in any manner the breaking by your orator's employees of contracts of service, known to them at the time to exist, which your orator now has with its employees, and from knowingly and wilfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by your orator's employees of contracts of service which may hereafter be entered into by persons with your orator, and be known to them, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so brought to break his contract, exists, and especially from knowingly and wilfully enticing your orator's employees, present or future, knowing of such relationship, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee

34 so enticed, exists, to leave your orator's service, without your orator's consent, against your orator's will, and to your orator's injury; that the said defendants and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates and associates, may be by this court ordered and commanded to desist and refrain from in any manner interfering with, hindering or obstructing any of the business of your orator or its agents, servants or employees, in the discharge of their duties as such, at and about your orator's mine or elsewhere by trespassing on or entering upon the grounds and premises of your orator, or within its mine, for the purpose of interfering therewith, or hindering or obstructing its business in any manner whatsoever, or with the purpose of compelling or inducing, by threats, force, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, or persuasion, any of the employees of your orator to refuse or fail to perform their duties as such employee; also from compelling or inducing or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, intimidation, force, or violence, or abusive or violent language, any of the employees of your orator to leave its service or fail or refuse to perform their duties as such employees, or to compel or attempt to compel, by threats, intimidation, force, violent or abusive language, any person desiring to seek employment in or about your orator's mine and works from so accepting employment therein; also from entering upon or establishing a picket or pickets of men on or patrolling railroad or street cars passing through or adjacent to your orator's property for the purpose of inducing or compelling by threats, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, or persuasion, any employee of your orator to fail or refuse to perform his duties as such, or for the purpose of interviewing or talking to any person or persons on said railroad or street cars coming to your orator's mine to accept employment with your orator, for the purpose and with the intention of inducing or compelling them, by threats, violence, intimidation, violent or abusive language, persuasion, or in any other manner whatsoever, to refuse or fail to accept service with your orator; also from compelling or inducing or attempting to compel or induce by threats, force, intimidation, or violent or abusive language, any employee of your orator to refuse or fail to perform his duties as such employee, and from compelling or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, intimidation, force, or violence, or abusive or violent language, any such employee to leave the service of your orator, and, by like methods, to prevent or attempt to prevent any person desiring to accept employment with your orator in or about its mine or works or elsewhere, from doing so by threats, violence, 35 force, intimidation, or violent or abusive language; also from interfering in any manner whatsoever, either by threats, violence, intimidation, persuasion or entreaty with any person in the employ of your orator who has contracted with and is in the actual service of your orator to entice or induce him to quit the service of your orator or to fail or refuse to perform his duties under his contract of employment, and from ordering, aiding, directing, assisting, or abetting in any manner what-oever any person or persons to commit any or either of the acts aforesaid; that the said defendants and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates and associates, may be by this court forbidden and restrained from congregating at or near the premises of your orator, and from picketing or patrolling said premises for the purpose of intimidating your orator's employees or coercing them by threats, intimidation, violence, abusive or violent language, or preventing them, in the manner aforesaid, from rendering their service to your orator, and, in like manner, from inducing or coercing them to leave the employment of your orator, and from in any manner so interfering with your orator in carrying on its business in its usual and ordinary way and from interfering by threats, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, any person or persons who may be employed or seeking employment by your orator in the operation of your orator's mine and works; and that the said defendants and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates and associates, may be by this court restrained and forbidden, either singly or in combination with others, from collecting in and about the approaches to your orator's mine and works, for the purpose of picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to the property of your orator for the purpose of intimidating, threatening or coercing any of the employees of your orator from work in its said mine or works, or any persons seeking employment therein from entering into such employment, and from so interfering with said employees in going to and from their daily work in and about the mine and works of your orator; and that said defendants and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, and associates, may be by this court enjoined and restrained from going, either singly or collectively, to the homes or boarding houses of your orator's employees, or any of them, for the purpose of intimidating or coercing any or all of them to leave the employment of your orator; and that your orator may have such further or other relief in the premises as the nature of the circumstances of the case may require.

May it please your Honors to grant to your orator a writ of subpœna to be directed to the said John Mitchell, and a citizen 36 of the State of Indiana, individually, and as President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; T. L. Lewis of Brideport, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as Vice-President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; W. B. And your orator will ever pray.

Savage, of Columbus, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Secretary-Treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; A. R. Watkins, of Yorkville, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; John Zelenka, of Warrenton, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Vice-President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; Lee Rankin, of Dillionvale, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Secretary-Treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and Thomas Hughes, of Shadyside, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Defendants.

At a Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia held at Philippi, on the 26th day of May, 1908, came in the above entitled cause the plaintiff, by George R. E. Gilchrist, its counsel, and Adam B. Littlepage and Charles E. Hogg, appearing specially for the purpose set forth in the order of January 14, 1908, and for no other purpose, for the unserved defendants, John Mitchell and W. B. Wilson, individually, and in their official capacities, and Thomas Hughes; the plaintiff, by its counsel, asked and was granted leave to withdraw its motion made March 18th, 1908, respecting the said appearance of the defendant George W. Savage, individually, and in his said official capacity, it appearing that service was obtained upon said Savage on May 13th, 1908; and said Adam B. Littlepage and Charles E. Hogg still appearing specially for said remaining unserved defendants renewed their motion as made on their behalf January 14th, 1908, as set 39 forth in said order of January 14th, 1908, and the plea in abatement filed at that time on behalf of each of said unserved defendants; and plaintiff, by its counsel, then filed its motion in writing that said motion to dismiss be denied, that said plea in abatement be overruled, and that each of said unserved defendants be assigned to appear and answer over to the merits of the cause, all of which motions were argued by counsel and briefs to be filed on or before June 1st, 1908, leave of court for that purpose having been given, and the pleas and motions were then submitted to the court, said pleas of Mitchell, Wilson and Hughes being required to be filed when the brief of defendant's counsel is filed, and to be of the same character as the plea of Green, filed with the affidavit of Gilchrist accompanying plaintiff's motion of this date, and the court may consider the plea of Green as the counterpart of said other pleas mutatis mutandis.

And, thereupon, on said 26th day of May, 1908, at Philippi, at two o'clock P. M., came the plaintiff, by its said counsel, and the said Adam B. Littlepage and Charles E. Hogg appearing generally for all of the served defendants in this cause, and plaintiff's said motion for an injunction in this suit came on to be heard. Plaintiff, by its said counsel, then filed in support of its motion for an injunction the affidavits of W. H. Koch, dated January 7th, 1908, James Stewart, dated March 6th, 1908, Clyde Round, dated January 7th, 1908, J. M. Hart, dated January 11th, 1908, Robert Meyers, dated January 7th, 1908, S. A. Round, dated January 7th, 1908, E. C. Pickett, second affidavit, dated January 7th, 1908, Wes Corns, dated January 11th, 1908, E. C. Pickett, third affidavit, January 7th, 1908, William Daugherty, dated January 7th, 1908, John Hull, dated January 7th, 1908, J. W. Logston, dated January 13th, 1908, C. G. Davis, dated January 7th, 1908, C. G. Davis, second affidavit, dated January 7th, 1908, R. J. Cotts, dated March 13th, 1908, E. T. Hitchman, dated January 10th, 1908, Howard Hazlett, dated January 9th, 1908, E. C. Pickett, dated March 12th, 1908, William Daugherty, dated January 11th, 1908, John Oliver, dated January 11th, 1908, Albert Jarrett, dated January 11th, 1908, James Jarrett, dated January 11th, 1908, Conrad Weiss, dated January 11th, 1908, Clyde Round, dated January 13th, 1908, Wes Corns, dated March 11th, 1908, R. J. Cotts, dated January 7th, 1908, R. J. Cotts, second affidavit, dated January 7th, 1908, Mike Popage, dated December 31st, 1907, E. T. Hitchman, dated May 26th, 1908, and E. C. Pickett, dated January 7th, 1908.

Said motion for an injunction was thereupon argued by plaintiff's counsel, defendants' said counsel stating they did not 40 desire to be heard in opposition to said motion so far as the granting of a temporary injunction at this time was concerned and not consenting but objecting thereto.

Upon consideration whereof, it appearing to the court that a temporary injunction should be allowed as prayed for in said bill of complaint, it is therefore adjudged, ordered and decreed by the court that said defendants, and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates and associates, be, and until the further order of this court, inhibited, restrained and strictly enjoined from interfering and from combining, conspiring, or attempting to interfere with the employees of the plaintiff for the purpose of unionizing plaintiff's mine, without plaintiff's consent, by representing or causing to be represented in express or implied terms, to any of plaintiff's employees, or to any person who might become an employee of plaintiff, that such person will suffer or is likely to suffer some loss or trouble in continuing in or in entering the employment of plaintiff, assigning, representing, or causing to be represented in express or implied terms to such employee or employees that such loss or trouble will or may come by reason of plaintiff not recognizing the United Mine Workers of America, or because plaintiff runs a non-union mine.

From interfering and from combining, conspiring or attempting to interfere with employees of plaintiff for the purpose of unionizing plaintiff's mine, without plaintiff's consent and in aid of such purpose knowingly and wilfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by plaintiff's employees of contracts of service known to them at the time to exist, which plaintiff now has with its employees, and from knowingly and wilfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by plaintiff's employees of contracts of service which may hereafter be entered into by persons with plaintiff and be known to them while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so brought to break his contract, exists, and especially from knowingly and wilfully enticing plaintiff's employees, present or future, knowing of such relationship, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so enticed, exists, to leave plaintiff's service, giving or assigning directly or indirectly as a reason for any such act so brought about, or enticement and leaving of plaintiff's service, that plaintiff does not recognize the United Mine Workers of America, or that plaintiff runs a non-union mine, or that the interest of the United Mine Workers of America requires that plaintiff shall not be permitted to run a non-union mine, or that the interest of the Union will be best promoted thereby.

41 From interfering and from combining, conspiring or attempting to interfere with the employees of plaintiff so as knowingly and wilfully to bring about in any manner the breaking by plaintiff's employees of contracts of service, known to them at the time to exist, which plaintiff now has with its employees, and from knowingly and wilfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by plaintiff's employees of contracts of service which may hereafter be entered into by persons with plaintiff, and be known to them, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so brought to break his contract, exists, and especially from knowingly and wilfully enticing plaintiff's employees, present or future, knowing of such relationship, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so enticed, exists, to leave plaintiff's service, without plaintiff's consent, against plaintiff's will, and to plaintiff's injury.

From interfering with, hindering or obstructing any of the business of plaintiff, or its agents, servants or employees, in the discharge of their duties as such, at and about plaintiff's mine, or elsewhere, by trespassing on or entering upon the grounds and premises of plaintiff, or within its mine, for the purpose of interfering therewith, or hindering or obstructing its business in any manner whatsoever, or with the purpose of compelling or inducing, by threats, force, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, or persuasion, any of the employees of plaintiff to refuse or fail to perform their duties as such employees.

From compelling or inducing or attempting to compel or induce by threats, intimidation, force, or violence, or abusive or violent language, any of the employees of plaintiff to leave its service or fail or refuse to perform their duties as such employees, or to compel or attempt to compel by threats, intimidation, force, violent or abusive language, any person desiring to seek employment in or about plaintiff's mine and works from so accepting employment therein.

From entering upon or establishing a picket or pickets of men on or patrolling railroad or street cars passing through or adjacent to the plaintiff's property for the purpose of inducing or compelling by threats, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, or persuasion, any employee of plaintiff to fail or refuse to perform his duties as such, or for the purpose of interviewing or talking to any person or persons on said railroad or street cars coming to plaintiff's mine to accept employment with plaintiff, for the purpose and with the intention of inducing or compelling them, by threats, violence, intimidation, violent or abusive language, persuasion, or in any other manner whatsoever, to refuse or fail to accept service with plaintiff.

42 From compelling or inducing or attempting to compel or induce by threats, force, intimidation, or violent or abusive language, any employee of said plaintiff to refuse or fail to perform his duties as such employee, and from compelling or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, intimidation, force, or violence, or abusive or violent language, any such employee to leave the service of plaintiff, and, by like methods, to prevent or attempt to prevent any person desiring to accept employment with plaintiff in or about its mine or works or elsewhere, from doing so by threats, violence, intimidation, or violent or abusive language.

From interfering in any manner whatsoever, either by threats, violence, intimidation, persuasion or entreaty with any person in the employ of plaintiff who has contracted with and is in the actual service of plaintiff to entire or induce him to quit the service of plaintiff or to fail or refuse to perform his duties under his contract of employment, and from ordering, aiding, directing, assisting, or abetting in any manner whatsoever any person or persons to commit any or either of the acts aforesaid.

From congregating at or near the premises of plaintiff, and from picketing or patrolling said premises for the purpose of intimidating plaintiff's employees or coercing them by threats, intimidation, violence, abusive or violent language, or preventing them, in the manner aforesaid, from rendering their service to plaintiff, and, in like manner, from inducing or coercing them to leave the employment of plaintiff, and from in any manner so interfering with the plaintiff in carrying on its business in its usual and ordinary way, and from interfering by threats, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, any person or persons who may be employed or seeking employment by plaintiff in the operation of plaintiff's mine and works.

From either singly or in combination with others, collecting in and about the approaches to plaintiff's mine and works, for the purpose of picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to the property of plaintiff for the purpose of intimidating, threatening or coercing any of plaintiff's employees from working in its said mine or works, or any person seeking employment therein, from entering into such employment, and from so interfering with said employees in going to and from their daily work in and about the mine and works of plaintiff.

And from either singly or collectively, going to the homes or boarding houses of plaintiff's employees, or any of them, for the purpose of intimidating or coercing any or all of them to leave plaintiff's employment.

43 This injunction shall not take effect until said plaintiff or some responsible person for it shall enter into a bond in the penal sum of two thousand dollars, with surety therein satisfactory to the clerk of this court, conditioned that said plaintiff shall pay all such costs and damages as are sustained by the defendants, or any of them, by reason of this injunction should it be hereafter dissolved.

Service of a copy of this order on the defendants, their committees, agents, servants, confederates and associates, or any of them, shall be deemed and held sufficient notice of this order.

The served defendant A. R. Watkins, by his counsel, thereupon filed his answer, and moved the dissolution of said injunction, and the other served defendants shall file their answers on or before the 1st Monday in July, 1908.

Plaintiff, by its said counsel, thereupon, asked leave to reserve and was given the right to take any lawful exceptions or make any proper objections to said answer, or those that shall hereafter be filed.

Said served defendants, by their said counsel, then moved the court that this cause be continued to the next regular term of this court to be held at Philippi November 3d, 1908, and it is so ordered.

45 District 6 United Mine Workers of America, by Charles E. Hogg, their counsel, and moved the court to dissolve the temporary injunction awarded in this case on the 26 day of May, 1908, on the face of the bill and its exhibits, in so far as the said injunction inhibits, restrains and enjoins the said defendants or any of them from the use of argument, reason and persuasion to induce the employees of the plaintiff, the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, or any of them, to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches; and also in so far as said injunction inhibits, restrains and enjoins the said defendants or any of them from interviewing or talking to any person or persons in the employment of the plaintiff, or about to enter the employment of the plaintiff, for the purpose of inducing such persons to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches, in a peaceable and law-abiding manner and unaccompanied by intimidation, force, fraud, violence or coercion; and also in so far as said injunction inhibits, restrains and enjoins these defendants or any of them from visiting the homes of the plaintiff's employees or any of them, for the purpose of inducing such employees, by reason, persuasion and argument and unaccompanied by force, fraud, intimidation, violence or coercion, to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches; and in so far also as the said injunction inhibits, restrains and enjoins the defendants or any of them from going near or approaching the premises of the plaintiff for the purpose of interviewing or talking to or inducing the employees of the plaintiff or any of them to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches; and in so far also as said injunction inhibits, restrains and enjoins the said defendants or any of them from unionizing or attempting to unionize plaintiff's mine without its consent, if by the term "unionizing" is meant action on the part of these defendants or any of them to induce the employees of the plaintiff or any of them to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches by the use of argument, reason and persuasion unaccompanied by force, fraud, violence, coercion or intimidation in any form whatsoever; and in so far also as said injunction inhibits, restrains and enjoins these defendants or any of them from interfering with plaintiff's employees or any of them, if by the term "interfering," is meant that these defendants or any of them shall be precluded from interviewing and visiting plaintiff's employees in a peaceable and law-abiding manner for the purpose of inducing such employees to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches.

any intention of conceding by said motion for partial dissolution and modification, the truth of the allegations of the plaintiff's bill whereby fraud, coercion, intimidation or violence in any form whatsoever is imputed to these defendants with reference to the relationship of plaintiff to its employees or with reference to the transaction of plaintiff's business, as alleged in said bill, in any manner whatsoever.

And upon motion of said defendants, the said motion for a partial dissolution and correspondent modification of said temporary injunction is hereby set down for argument to be had thereon on the 30 day of January, 1909.

On this fifteenth day of December, 1908, came the plaintiff, by George R. E. Gilchrist, its counsel, and all the served defendants, by Charles E. Hogg, their counsel, and the plaintiff, by its counsel, filed its motion in writing that the defendant, A. R. Watkins, be refused permission to file his amended answer which he tendered for filing August 20, 1908, and to the filing of which plaintiff's counsel at that time objected, and asked to be heard; and plaintiff, by its counsel, then filed its motion in writing that costs be not allowed for the separate answer of William Green, individually, and as President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, nor for the separate answer of D. H. Sullivan, individually, and as Vice-President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, nor for the joint and several answer- of all the served defendants assigning as grounds that all of these defendants have been and are represented by the same counsel and that such separate answers were not necessary and that they could all have been joined 48 together and that in filing all of said answers the defendants have violated Equity Rule 62; and plaintiff, by its counsel, then filed its motion in writing to strike from the separate answers of the defendants William Green and D. H. Sullivan certain portions which are contradicted by the admissions of the defendant A. R. Watkins in his original answer filed in this cause May 26, 1908, particularly mentioned in said written motion, and also moved to strike from the joint and several answers of all the served defendants certain portions that are contradicted by the admissions of the defendant A. R. Watkins in his original answer filed May 26, 1908, particularly mentioned in said written motion; and plaintiff, by its counsel, then filed its exceptions to the separate answer of the defendant William Green, individually, and as President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, and its exceptions to the separate answer of the defendant D. H. Sullivan, individually, and as Vice-President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, and its exceptions to the separate answer of the defendant A. R. Watkins, individually, and as President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and its exceptions to the joint and several answer- of the defendants T. L. Lewis, individually, and as Vice-President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America, William Green, individually, and as President of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, D. H. Sullivan, individually, and as Vice-President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, George W. Savage, individually, and as Secretary-Treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, A. R. Watkins, individually, and as President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, John Zelenka, individually, and as Vice-President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and Lee Rankin, individually, and as Secretary-Treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America.

Plaintiff's counsel then filed his brief in support of plaintiff's motion to refuse Watkins permision to file his amended answer, and also filed his brief in support of plaintiff's motions to strike the portions of the answers hereinbefore referred to.

And further consideration of these motions and these exceptions was deferred until the further order by the court, and pending the court's decision upon a motion this day made by the defendants by their said counsel that the injunction granted herein on May 26, 1908, be modified by dissolving the same in certain particulars.

49 Opinion of Court.

(Filed Sept. 21, 1909.)

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL COMPANY
vs.
JOHN MITCHEL et al.

Upon Motion to Modify Injunction.

Upon October 24, 1907, the plaintiff corporation presented its bill for injunction to a judge of this court against John Mitchell and nine others, alleging itself to be a corporation under the laws of West Virginia and the defendants to be citizens and residents of several different states other than West Virginia; that nine of said defendants first named are Presidents, Vice-Presidents and Secretary-Treasurers, respectively of the United Mine Workers of America, and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America, of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America and of sub-district 5 of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, and the defendant Thomas Hughes to be an organizing agent of said organizations; that plaintiff is the owner of about 5,000 acres of coal, has a mine and mining plant on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, that is mining and shipping a daily output of about 1,400 tons of coal, largely under contracts, between 500 and 600 tons to the railroad for its daily engine fuel, has large contracts for future delivery; that prior to April 1st, 1906, it operated its mine by employment of men affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America but, on that day, a strike was ordered by the officers of the Union, and, on April 16, 1906, the men so employed, in obedience to the demands and orders of defendants, went out and ceased to work. It is charged that this strike was ordered because certain other operators refused to sign the scale demanded by the Union, that so far as plaintiff was concerned it was wholly without justification or excuse because it distinctly agreed to pay the scale price and any increased price fixed thereby from April 1st, 1906, the date of the strike order, whenever it might be fixed and agreed upon, with which proposition the miners themselves, whose labor was involved, were entirely satisfied; that notwithstanding this, at the instance of defendants, its mine was shut down from April 16th to June 12th, 1906, to its great financial loss and embarrass-50 ment by reason of its inability to comply with its existing contracts. The bill then sets forth in detail in effect that on the last named date in order to be able to run said mine it entered into a contract with its men whereby it agreed with them to run its mining operation wholly upon non-union basis, refusing absolutely to employ any union men, and whereby the men on their part agreed not to join or become members of this union and to work for plaintiff as non-union men; that plaintiff has since that time been running its mine under this contract with its men to the entire satisfaction of both, paying its men as high wages as paid in any of the union mines. It then charges the officers and agents of the Union with full knowledge of the existence of this contract, to have repeatedly sought to have plaintiff violate it and agree to reunionize its mine which plaintiff has refused to do, whereupon such union officers and agents are seeking by inducements, threats and intimidation, to induce plaintiff's employees, bound by said contract with it, to leave its service, break their contract, join the union and also to prevent other men from engaging in its employ, and this it is charged with the unlawful purpose to prevent any but union men to work in its mine, compel it to employ none but union men and to submit its business and its property to the jurisdiction and control of said union and its officers. The bill then proceeds to charge the United Mine Workers Union of America and its subordinate organizations to be unincorporated organizations, having unlawful purposes and designs to create a monopoly and trust in coal mining labor and in support of these allegations sets forth in extenso, what purports to be excerpts from the constitutions and by-laws of the supreme and subordinate unions, together with the obligation required to be taken by its members and extracts from the proceedings of its national conventions. A distinct conspiracy on the part of defendants as individuals is charged to secure, by reason of their positions as officers of this union, the abandonment by the men of their contract with plaintiff, their joining the union, the inability of plaintiff to employ others, and the entire shutting down of its mine to its irreparable loss and injury. Presented with this bill were some twenty-eight affidavits in support of its allegations. A temporary restraining order was granted until the next regular term of court to be held at Parkersburg on January 14, 1908, for which date plaintiff's motion for a temporary injunction was set down for hearing. This hearing, on motion of defendants, was continued until May 26, 1908, when plaintiff presented more than twenty additional affidavits and argued its motion for temporary injunction, counsel for defense stating they "did not desire 51 to be heard in opposition to said motion so far as the granting of a temporary injunction at the time was concerned and not consenting but objecting thereto." The temporary injunction was on that day granted in exact accord with the terms of the restraining order.

Answers have been filed, exceptions entered thereto, motions as to certain unserved defendants to have said bill dismissed as to them have been made and a motion by defendants, disclaiming "any intention of conceding the truth of the allegations of the plaintiff's bill whereby fraud, coercion and intimidation or violence in any form whatsoever is imputed to them," has been entered to dissolve the injunction, "on the face of the bill and exhibits," in so far as said injunction restrains said defendants or any of them from the use of argument, reason and persuasion, to induce the employees of the plaintiffs or any of them to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches; so far as it restrains them from interfering or talking to any person or persons in the employment of the plaintiff, or about to enter the employment of the plaintiff, for the purpose of inducing such persons to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches, in a peaceable and law abiding manner and unaccompanied by intimidation, force, fraud, violence or coercion; also in so far as it restrains defendants from visiting the homes of plaintiff's employees for the purpose of inducing them by reason, persuasion and argument, unaccompanied by force, fraud, intimidation, violence or coercion, to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches; in so far as it restrains defendants from going near the premises of plaintiff for the purpose of talking with or inducing the employees of plaintiff to become members of the United Mine Workers of America; in so far as it as it restrains from unionizing or attempting to do so plaintiff's mine if by 'unionizing' is meant action on the part of defendants to induce the employees of plaintiff to become members of the United Mine Workers of America by the use of argument, persuasion and reason unaccompanied by force, violence, coercion or intimidation; and also in so far as it restrains defendants from interfering with plaintiff's employees if by the term 'interfering' is meant that defendants shall be precluded from interviewing and visiting plaintiff's employees for the purpose of inducing them to become members of the union." This motion on April 7, 1909, was argued and submitted and is now to be determined.

52 DAYTON, District Judge:

That this motion has been most thoroughly and ably argued goes without saying, when the character and ability of counsel engaged is considered. It is a source of regret that because of a multitude of duties, I have not had even more time to consider the questions involved than I have taken, but the fact that all these questions may again be presented and considered upon a final hearing, and above all may be finally reviewed by a higher court with full power to correct any error I may commit, has led me to comply with request of counsel for an early decision as to this motion.

It is to be borne in mine that this motion is made only for partial dissolution and that too, without prejudice to defendants' right to move for full dissolution upon final hearing. It is based solely upon the ground that the allegations of the bill on its face warrant, if they do not demand it. Under these circumstances, while I am entitled to construe the allegations of the bill and all of them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff as upon demurrer, I am not inclined, at this time, to consider the charges, substantially made, that the United Mine Workers of America is an unlawful organization seeking to establish a monopoly in labor contrary to the common law, or a trust therein contrary to the Sherman Act. Such questions deserve more consideration than I have had time yet to give them and may well be postponed to the final hearing after the case has been fully made up, if it then becomes necessary to decide them under the conditions at that time existing. Nor do I regard it necessary to discuss the utility or futility of labor organizations. The right of labor to organize for its mutual benefit and protection is as well settled and determined by law as the right of capital to organize for the same purpose. That one may resort to the voluntary association of individuals without incorporation and the other to articles of incorporation is wholly immaterial, provided the voluntary association be one for lawful purposes and be conducted in lawful manner. That such associations may be secret in character, may have and enforce by-laws, act through officers and agents, cannot longer be disputed. Their members may stand together, they may accumulate funds for the support of those of their number not employed, may unite with other unions, may advise with their officers and others as to their interests and employment, may expel those who refuse obedience to the authority of the association's laws, and may individually or collectively peaceably leave their employer's service when the terms thereof become unsatisfactory to them, as so clearly set forth by Taft, Judge, in Thomas v. C. N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 62 Fed., 803, by Thayer, Judge, 53 in Hopkins v. Oxley Stave Co., 28 C. C. A., 99, and by Mr. Justice Harlan in Arthur v. Oakes, 11 C. C. A., 209, 63 Fed., 310.

It is absolutely needless to add that, under ordinary circumstances, the right of the members of a labor union to solicit others and, by reason, argument and persuasion, induce them to join their labor association is just as clear a right as that of members of fraternal organizations such as Masons, Odd Fellows and the like to do the same thing. While all these things are true, it is not to be be forgotten, that associations organized for the best and noblest purposes, church organizations even, may be misused by those who have secured control for the purpose, and prostituted them to unlawful purposes and designs. When this is done, it becomes as much the duty of the law to restrain them from lawlessness as is its duty to stay the hand of the legally incorporated company of capital that has perverted its lawful purposes to lawless deeds. It is necessary for us in this case to recognize that this is not a controversy between plaintiff and its employees, it is not a strike,—it is not a case where the Labor Union has longer any legitimate interest or concern. If the allegations of this bill are true the employees of this company are not members of this union, have actually contracted with the company not to become members of it as a condition precedent to their employment.

Mr. Justice Harlan, in Adair v. United States, 208 U. S., 161, speaking for the Supreme Court, says:

"While as already suggested, the right of liberty and property guaranteed by the constitution against deprivation without due process of law is subject to such reasonable restraints as the common good or the general welfare may require, it is not within the functions of government—at least, in the absence of contract between the parties—to compel any person, in the course of his business and against his will, to accept or retain the personal services of another, or to compel any person, against his will, to perform personal services of another. The right of a person to sell his labor upon such terms as he deems proper is, in its essence, the same as the right to the purchaser of labor to prescribe the conditions upon which he will accept such labor from the person offering to sell it. So the right of the employee to quit the service of the employer, for whatever the reason, is the same as the right of the employer, for whatever reason, to dispense with the services of such employee. It was the legal right of the defendant, Adair,—however unwise such a course may have been,—to discharge Coppage because of his being a member of a labor organization, as it was the legal right of Coppage, if he saw fit to do so,—however unwise 54 such a course on his part might have been,—to quit the service in which he was engaged, because the defendant employed some persons who were not members of a labor organization. In all such particulars the employer and the employee have equality of right, and any legislation that disturbs that equality is an arbitrary interference with the liberty of contract which no government can legally justify in a free land."

And many cases are cited in support of these principles. It necessarily follows that if the employer can discharge his employee because he belongs to a labor organization, and if the employee can quit his employment because his employer employs non-union men, they two, having these personal and individual rights, can contract with each other as to what the status of the employment in this particular shall be. The employee on his part may require as a condition precedent to the sale of his labor, that the employer shall buy it under the terms and upon the conditions prescribed by the labor union and moreover shall employ his other labor upon the same terms. If the employer contracts to do this he must be held to his contract for he has accepted the labor upon those conditions. Per contra, the employer may contract with his employee to buy his labor upon terms other than the union ones and, in order that the union ones may not be disturbing elements in the conduct of his business, may bind his employee not to become a member of the union and thereby disqualify himself, it may be by reason thereof, from continuing his employment upon the terms and conditions of the contract. These views seem to be clearly established in principle by this Adair case and the authorities cited therein. With full knowledge that such a contract has been legally consummated between employer and employee, what legal status has the union in the premises? It may regret that its advice, help and assistance was not sought by the employee in disposing of his labor but now that it is disposed of can it come forward and incite either to break the contract? Its mission it claims is to aid and uplift labor but it could hardly fulfill this mission by persuading men to become breakers of contracts and the repudiators of their lawful promises and pledges, and if they do, their legitimate functions are prostituted into a conspiracy to destroy others' vested contract rights.

In Arthur v. Oakes, 11 C. C. A., 209, it is held:

According to the principles of the common law, a conspiracy upon the part of two or more persons, with the intent, by their combined power, to wrong others or to prejudice the rights of the public, is in itself illegal, although nothing be actually done in the execution of such conspiracy. This is fundamental in our jurisprudence. So,

a combination or conspiracy to procure an employee or body
55 of employees to quit service in violation of the contract of service would be unlawful, and in a proper case might be enjoined, if the injury threatened would be irremediable at law. And the Supreme Court of the United States in Angle v. C. St. P. M. & O. R. Co., 151 U. S., 1, and Bitterman v. L. & N. R. Co., 207 U. S., 205, have distinctly set forth this same general principle in cases involving a different state of facts.

In Transportation Co. v. Oil Co., 50 W. Va., 611, the Supreme Court of Appeals of this state has held:

If one wantonly and maliciously, whether for his own benefit or not, induce a person to violate his contract with a third person to the injury of that third person, it is actionable.

And in Thacker Coal Co. v. Burke, 59 W. Va., 253, this doctrine as to contracts generally is re-affirmed and applied to labor contracts. It is there held:

One who maliciously entices a servant in actual service of a master to desert and quit his service is liable to action therefor.

And again: The act found in Code of 1899, section 14, appendix, p. 1053, does not authorize any individual, or number of individuals, to maliciously entice servants to desert service in which they are engaged, or to prevent them from engaging in such service under a contract for such service.

These cases, recent in date, decided by its court of last resort without dissenting voice, would seem absolutely to settle the law of this matter in this state. But it is insisted that to ask and induce, by reason, argument and persuasion, plaintiff's employees to join a labor union is not asking them directly to violate their labor contracts. It is, so far as this organization is concerned. They have not only contracted, as a condition to their employment, that they will not join this particular union, but if they do join it they must absolutely quit such employment because the plaintiff has contracted not to employ members of this union, and this union has on its part, by its laws, solemnly declared that none but its members shall be employed at the mine.

But in addition to this question of inducing the violation of lawful contracts, it seems to me very clear that no matter how meritorious an organization this United Mine Workers of America may be in purpose and intent, the allegations of this bill if true, and they must be conceded to be so upon the determination of this motion, disclose as plain a conspiracy upon the part of these defendants to injure and ruin the plaintiff as could well be conceived of. They have secured control of this organization; they have bound its members to obey their orders and do their will; clothed with this power they have said to plaintiff notwithstanding you have complied with all the requirements of the organization, have 56 agreed to all its terms and conditions, have employed only union men, have secured near $10,000 to the union's funds in the way of dues from your miners, we propose to stop your operations, require your men to cease working for you, shut down your mine, compel you to violate and lose your contracts, and in accordance with this purpose to injure, have actually carried out these declarations, have stopped operations, have called out the men and compelled them, against their will, to cease work, have shut down the mine and held it in this condition from April 16th to June 12th, some fifty working days, at a loss, judging from the output of the mine, that may be estimated, from $300 to $700 per day, and with then no promise to let-up before plaintiff's final ruin should be accomplished. What excuse is set up for so foul and injurious prostitution of this organization, claimed to be in existence for philanthropic and lawful purposes, to a conspiracy so glaringly designed to injure and destroy? The sole excuse is alleged to be that some of plaintiff's rival operators refused to comply with the union's demands and exactions! Rival operators whose actions plaintiff necessarily could not control! Rival operators who under many conditions might design and scheme to bring about this very condition of things in order to ruin plaintiff and destroy its rivalry! Such an excuse, if it be the only one that can be advanced, adds only insult to injury and makes more clear and irrefutable the existence of the conspiracy alleged. Actuated by a natural sympathy for labor and an earnest desire to uplift and aid it, which we all have, many sincere but misguided persons would concede to it an estate superior to and above that possessed by other classes in this republic of liberty and equal rights, and they are fond of denouncing courts of equity for staying the hands of labor leaders in their unlawful exercise of power to achieve this end. We must not forget that we have a constitution guaranteeing these equal rights and that courts established thereunder have no discretion in enforcing its guarantees in favor of all those who are denied them and may appeal for redress. As said by Snyder, Judge, in State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va., 179, "A person living under the protection of this government has the right to adopt and follow any lawful industrial pursuit, not injurious to the community, which he may see fit. And, as incident to this, is the right to labor or employ labor, make contracts in respects thereto upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the parties, to enforce all lawful contracts, to sue, to give evidence, and to inherit, purchase, lease, sell and convey property of every kind. The enjoyment or deprivation of these rights and privileges constitutes the essential distinction between freedom and slavery; between liberty and op-

57 pression. * * * The vocation of an employer, as well as that of his employee, is his property. Depriving the owner of property of one of its attributes is depriving him of his property, under the provisions of the constitution. People v. Otis, 90 N. Y., 48. The right to use, buy and sell property, and contract in respect thereto, including contracts for labor—which is, as we have seen, property—is protected by the constitution."

And again: "The rights of every individual must stand or fall by the same rule of law that governs every other member of the body politic under similar circumstances."

These principles were enunciated in a decision holding unconstitutional a legislative act, passed at the instance of labor organizations, which sought to regulate the method of payment of labor wages. The Adair case to which I have referred held unconstitutional an act of congress seeking to restrict the right of an employer to discharge his employee because of his membership in a labor organization. These are but two of many cases illustrating how carefully these inalienable property rights have been and must be guarded by the courts in order that our liberties under constitutional government may be perpetuated.

It seems clear that under the allegations of this bill a conspiracy has existed between these defendants to injure and destroy the plaintiff's business; that it has already occasioned a damage of many thousand dollars to it, which, it would seem from the authorities we have cited, plaintiff has a clear right to institute its action at law to recover against them personally and independent of their connection with the labor organization and any relation it, as such, may have to the controversy. The important question now arises whether, this injury being an accomplished fact, there remains any reason for the exercise of the restraining power of equity through the intervention of this injunction. Is this conspiracy a thing of the past or does it continue at the present time for the same original purpose to injure and destroy? Here the allegations can have no uncertain meaning. It is charged in effect that these defendants, thwarted in their purpose for the time being by the making of the contracts with the employees direct, now are actively seeking with renewed effort to achieve their unlawful purposes; that they have the same control over the labor organization; that its by-laws still require the same exclusion from work at the mines, under its control, of all non-union labor; that its members are to be bound by the same obligation to cease labor when ordered to do so by these defendants as its officers; that they were at the time the injunction was granted, actively seeking to persuade plaintiff's em-58 ployees to break their contracts and become members of this organization bound by such laws and obligations; that their organizing agent has been sent upon the ground and has stated as shown by affidavit filed, that "he had succeeded in having one hundred and twenty-five men at the Hitchman mine sign their names, agreeing to become members of the United Mine Workers, and that just as soon as he got twenty-five more names he was going to shut the Hitchman mine down."

Surely these things if true negative any idea of abandonment of the conspiracy, and they would, if true, fully justify the charge that plaintiff is in imminent danger of irreparable loss and injury unless equity shall intervene. It would then seem that such intervention is necessary for the protection of all parties concerned. The language of the Circuit Court of Appeals (Fourth Circuit) in Atwell v. United States, 89 C. C. A., 97, applied there to the court's discretionary power to punish for contempt, may well be here applied to the necessity for it to exercise the injunctive power to a case like this:

Very frequently those who complain the loudest against its exercise are ultimately benefited the most. Men, inflamed by passion, are frequently not capable of rightly judging of their own conduct or of foreseeing the consequences thereof. In such case the restraining power on the part of judges, acting under solemn obligations to do "equal right to the poor and to the rich," chastened and humbled by the sense of the weighty responsibilities laid upon them, may save such persons from liability to civil and criminal actions, calculated to bring to them ruin and loss of liberty.

The motion to modify or dissolve this injunction in any particular must at this time at least be overruled.

(Filed Sept. 5, 1910.)

In the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE COMPANY
vs.
JOHN MITCHELL AND OTHERS.

The joint and several answer of the defendants, T. L. Lewis, individually and as vice-president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; William Green, individually and as president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; D. H. Sullivan, individually and as vice-president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; George W. Savage, individually and as secretary-treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; John Zelenka, individually and as vice-president of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; Lee Rankin, individually and as secretary-treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, to the bill of complaint of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia and a citizen of said state, filed in said court.

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Northern District of West Virginia:

These respondents, now and at all times hereafter saving to themselves and each to himself all manner of benefit and advantage of exceptions which can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties and imperfections in said bill contained, for answer thereunto, or to so much and such parts thereof as these defendants are and each of them is advised it is material for them or him to make answer unto, answering say:

That they admit that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company is a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia, having its principal office at Wheeling, in Ohio County, in said State; that they have — knowledge, information or belief as to whether or not it is the owner of about 5,000 acres of coal situated contiguous to its coal 63 mine, which is located at Benwood; that they admit that its coal mine is equipped with the necessary plant for mining coal and has shipping facilities on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that its various shipments by land originate on that road and at its mine; that while these respondents are not informed as to such fact, yet they believe that it is true that the plaintiff has been for some time past, and is now, engaged in the mining of coal and shipping the same to the open markets of the United States; these respondents also say that while they are not informed as to such matter yet they believe that it is true that the product of the plaintiff's mine is large, amounting to about 1,400 tons per day, but that they have no information, knowledge or belief, and therefore cannot deny or admit, that it has customers residing in all parts of the United States, and that a large portion of its trade is during the summer and fall months when coal is carried to the northwest by steamers upon the lakes while navigation is not interrupted by ice, while another portion of its trade has been for years and now is supplying coal for fuel for engines of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, delivered by a coaling device to the engines at its tipple, and likewise from large storage bins which have been erected and are in use by the plaintiff and by said railroad company wherefrom to coal their engines, said storage bins being located at the end of a considerable steel structure, trestle or viaduct located near the round-house of said railroad company at Benwood, in the construction of which steel trestle and coal bins plaintiff has expended and now has invested a large sum of money; these respondents admit that in mining coal the coal as mined is brought to the surface and mouth of the mine, and then for interstate commerce is delivered to the common carrier and carried by it to its destination within the United States but without the state of West Virginia; these respondents have no information, knowledge or belief as to the matter, and therefore can neither admit nor deny, that plaintiff has made large contracts for the future delivery of coal to points within and without the state of West Virginia but within the United States, especially for lake trade; that defendants are not informed, nor do they know, and therefore can not admit or deny, that plaintiff alone furnishes daily to said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company between 500 and 600 tons engine coal; these respondents have no knowledge, information and belief, and therefore can neither admit nor deny, that the profits and earnings of the plaintiff depend largely upon its mining and producing coal during the summer and fall seasons of the year, and especially of this year as to its said contracts not yet filled, but which it has 64 the ability, and unless unlawfully interfered with by the defendants expects, to fill, as alleged in said bill; but these respondents deny and each of them denies that they or any of them have unlawfully interfered in any manner with the operations of the plaintiff in the fulfillment of any of its contracts; these respondents admit that prior to April 1, 1906, plaintiff operated its said mine by employing a large number of men who were affiliated with said United Mine Workers of America, and admit that on April 1, 1906, a strike having been ordered by said association, the employees of the plaintiff who were working for it at that time continued to work until April 16, 1906, and on that day, under renewed demands of said United Mine Workers of America, went out on a strike and ceased to work for the plaintiff; and admit that said strike so declared is still in force so far as plaintiff and its mine is concerned; but these respondents deny and each of them denies that at the time plaintiff's said employees went out on a strike they had no grievance, had no complaint to plaintiff, and respondents believe and therefore admit that plaintiff had not failed to comply with its then contracts, with said employees with reference to their work; these respondents admit that said strike was ordered by said association, that said plaintiff's employees went upon said strike as aforesaid in pursuance thereof, for the reason that certain coal operators in other sections of the country had refused to accede to certain demands of said association, but deny that the ordering out of plaintiff's said employees and their going out on a strike as aforesaid were means, among other things, used by said association at that time for the purpose of compelling said coal operators to sign a scale which had been prepared and was being insisted upon by said association as the price of its permission being given to its members to remain at work for said coal operators; but aver that the object of going on said strike was not only to aid the other members of said association, but also the employees of the said plaintiff, to secure shorter hours and more favorable conditions for working in the mine of the said plaintiff; that it is true that at that time plaintiff was advised of the controversy between said association and said coal operators, and that it proposed to its employees that they continue at work for the plaintiff pending the signing of the scale by said coal operators, and that on the signing of the scale plaintiff would pay its said employees any additional sum that would have been earned by them during the time intervening between April 1, 1906, and the signing of the scale, provided that the scale when signed should provide for an advance in wages on work on and after April 1, 1906;

but these respondents deny the allegation in said bill con-
65 tained that while plaintiff's said employees were ready and willing to accept plaintiff's proposition, nevertheless the said employees, being members of the United Mine Workers of America, were by that association ordered to strike, and, after having continued in plaintiff's employ until April 16, 1906, went on a strike as aforesaid under the renewed order of said United Mine Workers of America that they should strike, and deny that the going out on a strike on April 16, 1906, was without justification and without excuse, and greatly to plaintiff's injury, embarrassment in business and financial loss, owing to its inability to carry out its contracts which it then had for the sale and delivery of coal and for supplying coal to the engines of the said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company at its tipple and bins aforesaid; these respondents admit that plaintiff's mine was shut down and was not operated from April 16, 1906, until June 12, 1906, and admit that upon resumption of operation on June 12, 1906, plaintiff started to run its mine on a non-union basis, but these respondents say that they do not know of their own knowledge, nor have they any information upon the subject, nor have they any belief relating to the matter, that every man who accepted employment at the mine of plaintiff was told at the time of entering plaintiff's service that there was no union at the mine, that the company would not allow any, and that no union man could remain in the employ of the company while recognizing and giving paramount allegiance to the union and obeying its orders, and if any employee of the company joined the union he could not work any longer for the company; and these respondents says that they have no knowledge, information and belief, and therefore can neither admit nor deny, that under those circumstances and with full knowledge of the said conditions of employment many men applied to plaintiff for work, and being employed entered the employment of plaintiff under the express contract not to join the United Mine Workers of America, and worked in its mine and have continued so to do until the present time with satisfaction to themselves and to the plaintiff, as in said bill is alleged, and respondents admit that from time to time since plaintiff has been operating its said mine on a non-union basis efforts have been repeatedly made by the officers and agents representing the United Mine Workers of America and its subordinate associations or branches to induce the plaintiff to agree to re-unionize its mine and to sign the scale of the United Mine Workers of America; but that in their efforts to accomplish this these respondents aver no fraud, violence, coercion or other wrongful act was done by them, but that they met with the representatives of the plaintiff in a peaceable and friendly 66 manner and discussed the same with them; and respondents deny that plaintiff has repeatedly refused to have anything to do with the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate associations or branches, or with any of its officers, agents, employees or servants, and deny that it has made known to them and each of them plaintiff's determination to run its mine non-union and its purpose not to permit any interference by said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, its officers, agents, employees and servants, with its operation of its mine or with its business, and these respondents deny that they have in any manner improperly or otherwise interfered with the operation of plaintiff's mine or its men, and deny that said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, by its officers, agents, employees and servants, have sought and are now seeking by inducements, threats and intimidation, either with or without physical violence, to cause the plaintiff's employees to leave its service and to cause others who have engaged to enter its service to break their engagements of service and not work for plaintiff, and deny that they have prevented others from working for plaintiff, and deny that either with an avowed or actual purpose or any other purpose they are compelling or are attempting to compel plaintiff to recognize the union, or to force plaintiff to employ none but persons who are members of the United Mine Workers of America, and deny that they are attempting to compel plaintiff or have endeavored to compel plaintiff to pay such scale of wages as said United Mine Workers of America arbitrarily fix and demand, and deny that they are attempting or endeavoring to submit plaintiff's business and its property to the jurisdiction and control of said union, becoming by the union's rules obliged to employ or to discharge whom the said union, its subordinate associations or branches and its officers, agents, employees and servants shall direct or require, as in said bill is alleged.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they deny that said United Mine Workers of America, including its said subordinate associations or branches, is a secret, voluntary organization, having certain expressed objects, some lawful and others unlawful, and that it is in the endeavor to carry out its unlawful purposes that the matters and things in said bill complained of have arisen, as in said bill is alleged, and deny that any of the objects, either expressed or otherwise, of said United Mine Workers of America are unlawful, and deny that they are attempting to do anything unlawful in the work of promoting said organization.

67 These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they admit that said United Mine Workers of America is not incorporated, and was organized on or about January 25, 1890, and admit that from the proceedings of its last annual convention, which was held in Indianapolis, Indiana, from January 15 to January 22, inclusive, 1907, it appears to have had a membership of 230,667 in 1906; that its income for the fiscal year ending November 30, 1906, was $1,081,408.32, its expenditures for the same period were $1,232,994.01, and that its balance on hand December 1, 1906, was $337,960.71, and admit that it is claimed for it that it is the largest labor organization in America.

These respondents admit that indicative of the character and purpose of said United Mine Workers of America and its subordinate associations or branches are the excerpts from the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America, appearing in said bill, taken from articles I., II., III., IV., V., VII., IX., X., XII., XIII. and XIV., and that said excerpts are correct. These respondents also admit that the excerpts from the constitution of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, as taken from articles I., II., III., VI., VIII., and IX., are correct. These respondents further admit that the excerpts from the constitution of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, taken from articles I., II., IV., V., VI., VII. and IX., are correct. These respondents further answering said bill admit that the matters set forth in the bill, showing the formality, used in opening the meetings of said organization, headed "Opening" are correct, including the form of the oath administered to the members.

Respondents admit that the paid up membership of District 6 United Mine Workers of America was in 1906, 36,372, and on March 1, 1907, Sub-District 5 of District 6 U. M. W. of A. had 108 locals in good standing and a paid up membership of 12,500.

These respondents further admit that the defendant John Mitchell is president of the United Mine Workers of America, and that the other defendants therein named are officers of said organization as set forth in said bill; but these respondents deny and each of them denies that said defendants have agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America to unlawfully persuade, entice and procure plaintiff's miners or mine workers employed by plaintiff and working for plaintiff in and around plaintiff's mine to break, violate, disregard their several contracts with the 68 plaintiff, all with the avowed purpose of compelling plaintiff to unionize its plant without plaintiff's consent, as alleged in said bill, and deny that to such end they have unlawfully and maliciously agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy to compel by threats and intimidation and by other unlawful means the plaintiff's said employees to join the union, and apply to their own relation with plaintiff in the matter of their employment the rules of the union, and to enable the said union to apply its rules and regulations to plaintiff, under penalty of closing down plaintiff's mine provided plaintiff still refuses to unionize its mine and recognize the union, as in said bill is charged against these respondents, and deny that they have been guilty of any unlawful conduct or acts with reference to the plaintiff's business mentioned in said bill.

These respondents for further answer unto said bill admit that the plaintiff has no contractual relation whatever with any one of the defendants hereto, and that each of said defendants is fully aware that plaintiff is operating a non-union mine and will not consent to operate a union mine; that its employees are non-union men; but these respondents deny that they are aware that said employees are required by plaintiff at the time of entering its service to agree not to become connected with the union while employed by plaintiff, and deny that they are aware that if they do join the union their employment with the plaintiff shall cease; and deny that they are aware that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered into its employment, and deny that they defendants are aware that plaintiff's employees are now working for plaintiff under such contract and with such conditions, and deny that all of this was known to the defendants and to each of them before and at the time of the institution of this suit. Respondents say that the only thing upon which they were informed or of which they had any knowledge was that plaintiff was running a non-union mine and had declined to unionize its mine.

These respondents for further answer unto said bill say that they deny that the said John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, Lee Rankin, and Thomas Hughes, either individually or as officers, agents, employees and servants of said United Mine Workers of America and its said subordinate associations or branches, are fully aware or have any knowledge that plaintiff's said employees are satisfied with their employment; that they admit that they are aware, however, that plaintiff is engaged in mining coal and in fulfilling contracts for coal, and admit that it would 69 be impossible to fulfill these contracts, if any they have, without the labor of its said employees, and, although they have no information, knowledge or belief on the subject, believe that it would entail upon plaintiff great financial loss to have its ability to fulfill its contracts interfered with by the failure of its men to work longer for plaintiff, and likewise would entail great loss and damage upon plaintiff to have its mine shut down and a strike declared; but these respondents deny that that the said defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out; and now about to finally accomplish, namely: to cause plaintiff's mine to be shut down, its plant to remain idle, its contracts to be broken and unfulfilled, until such time as plaintiff shall submit to the demand of the union that it shall unionize its plant, and, having submitted to such demand by employing only union men, shall become subject to the orders of the union, paramount to the orders of plaintiff, their employer, as alleged in said bill, and deny that in thus unionizing its plant plaintiff shall surrender its control and the management of its business to the union and the various rules and regulations laid down by the union and accede in advance to every demand by said union that its said officers, agents, employees and servants may make, as in said bill is alleged.

These respondents further deny that allegation in plaintiff's bill wherein it says "the effectuating of this purpose is imminent and the damage threatened is great and irremediable, and that your orator's loss so far has been in excess of two thousand dollars, exclusive of interest and costs, while on the accomplishment of said purpose of said defendants and the shutting down of your orator's mine the damage to your orator would be still greater and incapable of definite ascertainment, being incalculable, and amounting to many thousands of dollars."

These respondents further answering said bill say that they do not know, but they believe, that the plaintiff pays as much as the union's scale of wages to its said employees, but deny that the said defendants unlawfully and maliciously are agreeing together, confederating, combining and conspiring to effectuate by unlawful means the unionizing of plaintiff's mine simply for the purpose of seeking power and for the purpose of strengthening the union in future contests with employers of labor, and to compel all miners and mine workers to join the union, and establish a monopoly, and force employers of that kind of labor, and especially to force 70 plaintiff, to yield to the union's demands or else to give up its business as alleged in said bill.

These respondents say that they admit that the union is not a competitor of plaintiff in the labor market; that the union does not employ labor, and is not an employer of labor.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they admit that at the annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America, held at Indianapolis, Indiana, January 15 to 22, inclusive, 1907, the said defendants John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage and A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka and Lee Rankin were present and participated in its proceedings, and admit that it was openly stated with reference to the objects of said union as follows: "Organized labor contends that as industry cannot exist without labor, labor has the right to say under what conditions it shall be employed," but deny that the expression was used in said meeting "thereby dictating the management of the productive end of the business," as in said bill is alleged. These respondents say that the use of the language above quoted does not indicate an intention on the part of said United Mine Workers to dictate the management of the productive end of the business of coal mining, and respondents deny that there was any language used in said convention conveying the idea or intending to convey the idea that said organization has for its object the dictating of the management of coal mines and the business relating thereto; but these respondents aver that said organization should have the opportunity to be heard, and has the right to say, under peaceable methods and the forms of the law, what the conditions ought to be with reference to said mines and the operation thereof to insure health and safety in the mining and production of coal generally, and that this was the matter then before said convention when the language above quoted was used.

These respondents for further answer say that while they do not recollect distinctly what did occur in the said convention they believe that it is true that the defendant T. L. Lewis stated that he had charge of the organizing force under the direction of the president; that there has been a tremendous loss in the membership of the union as a result of the strike of May 1, 1906; that he had been instrumental in building up three national organizations of mine workers, and was one of the delegates and attended the convention which laid the foundation of the United Mine Workers of America; that the union had "closed shop" wage agreements with operators whereunder 181,384 persons were employed in the year 1905, and 71 that all of those persons were required to be members of the union; that respondents admit that it was stated in said meeting that the American continent, meaning however the United States and British America, is not large enough to maintain two organizations of miners, and that he, said Lewis, favored one organization of the mine workers of the American continent and the complete recognition of the union's right to organize in every mining district in the country.

And these respondents further aver that they believe, though they do not remember distinctly, that it was said in said convention by the defendant W. B. Wilson what is stated in said bill, and admit the same to be true for the purposes of this suit; but these respondents further aver that the occurrences and discussions in said convention, alluded to in said bill, only related to the then condition of the United Mine Workers of America and the consideration of the best policy to promote its objects, which objects are expressed in the constitution, and has for its objects the uniting of the mine employees that produce or handle coal or coke in or around the mines, and to ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, and that the proceedings in said convention did not contemplate any interference with the employees of the plaintiff, because they were not then union men, nor are they now union men, and such allegations can only be treated as surplusage for the purposes of said bill.

Respondents further aver that it is true that at said convention a committee's report was unanimously adopted containing the matters set forth in said bill.

These respondents further admit that that part of the bill setting forth, the statements made by T. L. Lewis and John Mitchell are true, but that it was simply a tentative presentation of the situation that then confronted the organization, and did not have for its object the disturbance of plaintiff's mines or the men employed thereat, nor had it anything whatever to do with the plaintiff's business.

These respondents further answering say that at the convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America held in March, 1907, the defendants, A. R. Watkins, Lee Rankin, T. L. Lewis, John Zelenka and Thomas Hughes were present and participated in the proceedings. These respondents also admit that that which appears in the bill as being said by A. R. Watkins in his report is true, and that that part of the bill which sets forth what appears in the report of Lee Rankin as secretary-treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District 6 is also true; that that part of the bill which sets out Resolution No. 8, as well as Resolution No. 10, is true; but these respondents deny that they are in anywise connected 72 with the operation of the plaintiff's mines, or have anything to do with the interference of the plaintiff's employees.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they deny that part of the language imputed to T. L. Lewis reading, "It is with regret that some of the locals in the pan handle broke away and the members went to work without any union or without getting a scale signed," referred to the locals of the United Mine Workers of Ameirca which existed near the mine of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company and the mine of the Glendale Coal Company, as in said bill is alleged.

Respondents further answering say that they have no knowledge, information or belief as to whether or not the Hitchman and the Glendale companies are owned by the same persons or whether the same persons are members of the board of directors of each corporation, or whether W. H. Kok is a stockholder, a director and general manager of each of said mines, while the business of the Glendale Coal Company is managed from the office of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, as in said bill is alleged, and therefore they can neither admit nor deny said allegation.

These respondents further answering said bill, say that they deny that said defendants and each of them treated the two mines as a single concern and have so dealt with plaintiff, as in said bill is alleged.

These respondents for further answer unto said bill say that they have no knowledge, information or belief, and therefore can neither admit nor deny, the allegation made in said bill that plaintiff in refusing to recognize the union after the declaration of said strike of April 1, 1906, and after its men had left plaintiff's employment pursuant to said strike, and in thereafter and now running its mine non-union, did not seek to reduce the wages of said employees or to cause said employees to work for less than the scale of wages established by the United Mine Workers of America, as in said bill is alleged. And these respondents, having no information or belief on the subject can neither admit nor deny the allegatin of said bill that plaintiff's sole purpose in running non-union and in now insisting upon its right to do so, unhampered by and without interruption from said defendants, acting individually and as representatives of said United Mine Workers of America, was and is to escape from the intolerable oppression and vicious intermeddling of the said defendants; but, be that as it may, these respondents deny that they have attempted to op-ress or intermeddle with the business of the plaintiff in any manner whatsoever, but aver that they have 73 only approached the representatives of the said company in a peaceable and law-abiding manner and its employes for the purpose of soliciting membership from the employees of the plaintiff to the United Mine Workers of America.

These respondents says that they do not understand what is meant by the allegation in said bill that "these said defendants have for some years last past been in such business as is here shown they are now engaged in"; if it means an unlawful business, then these respondents deny the said allegation. These respondents admit that they are well acquainted with one another, as in said bill is alleged and that they constitute a part of the higher officials of the United Mine Workers of America, but deny that in their hands the management of the affairs of said union have been or are centralized.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that it is true that while plaintiff's mine remained idle after it was shut down April 16, 1906, efforts were frequently made by some one or more of said defendants to induce plaintiff to sign the scale and run union, but every request of that kind met with refusal, but these respondents deny that they used any force, fraud, violence, intimidation, or unlawful methods of any kind, to induce the plaintiff to sign the scale and run union. These respondents further say that after plaintiff started up non-union about June 12, 1906, efforts were repeatedly made by one or more of said defendants to induce plaintiff to run its mine on a union basis, but these respondents deny that, failing in that, efforts were made by some one or more of said defendants to bring about by inducement, persuasion, threats and intimidation, and by various means and devices, unlawfully to induce plaintiff's employees to cease working for plaintiff, and also deny that by use of like means, devices, intimidation, threats, persuasion and inducements to prevent men willing to work for plaintiff not to engage to work, or after having engaged to work then not to go to work for plaintiff, as in said bill is alleged; and these respondents admit that plaintiff was able to increase the number of its employees and to increase its business, which it has conducted successfully and peacefully and lawfully from the time it started non-union to the present, but deny that this was done despite any efforts or acts of interference with the plaintiff's business on the part of these defendants or any of them.

These respondents for further answer unto said bill say that it is true that upon different occasions after starting up non-union the different officials of the United Mine Workers of America, but not all of them, amongst whom were the defendants John Ze-74 lenka, A. R. Watkins, D. H. Sullivan and William Green, visited the general manager of plaintiff at his office at the Hitchman mine and talked to him on the subject of the recognition of the union, the signing of the scale and the re-employment of plaintiff's employees, but deny that it was under the technical guise of thus entering into contract relations with plaintiff's employees of the United Mine Workers of America and for the purpose of doing away with the express provisions of plaintiff's contract with each of its employees that they should not become members of the union and if they did that their employment should thereby cease, as in said bill is alleged; but these respondents free of any technical guise aver that the said representatives of the United Mine Workers of America openly and fairly visited the general manager of the said plaintiff, was cordially received by him, and informed by him that they could see the men and talk with them, and that if said men desired to join the union he would interpose no objection thereto, and that the said representatives of the United Mine Workers did not seek to have plaintiff unionize its mine under any technical guise, but desired that the plaintiff should employ union men at its mines under the usual and ordinary contracts made by the union in its relations with coal operators; that it is also true that the plaintiff did refuse to enter into any contract with the United Mine Workers having for its object the sole employment of organized labor at its said mines.

These respondents further say that it is true that about July 1, 1907, the defendants William Green, John Zelenka and A. R. Watkins came to the office of plaintiff's general manager and had a conversation with him regarding the forming of a miners' union, or rather the putting of plaintiff's employees under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America, but deny that plaintiff on that occasion through its general manager distinctly stated that the proposition of said defendants would not be considered at all, and deny that said Zelenka subsequently reported to plaintiff's employees and caused that report to be circulated amongst them that he, Zelenka, Green and Watkins had had a conference with plaintiff's general manager and that said general manager had agreed to allow the United Mine Workers of America to put all of plaintiff's employees into the union, and deny that he, said Zelenka, made the further statement, which he caused to be circulated among plaintiff's employees, that it was up to the employees of the plaintiff to join the union or else they would be out of a job at an early day be-that said Zelenka, Green and Watkins each denied making any such statement or circulating any such report, because such statement or report had never been made or circulated by them, and for them to admit such statement would have been to admit that which was untrue. And respondents deny that plaintiff's statement in this regard is true, and in the action referred to and complained of to said defendants deny that said defendants were simply carrying out their unlawful purpose heretofore formed to unionize plaintiff's mine without its consent, and deny that the said respondents or any of them have done anything unlawful with reference to plaintiff's mine or its employees or otherwise.
75 cause only union men would be permitted to work in the mine and that those of plaintiff's employees who did not join the union would not be permitted to get a job any place; nor did he, said Zelenka, use such language or language of like purport of character. Respondents further say that it is also true that plaintiff's general manager did complain of the action mentioned, and

These respondents say it is true that plaintiff's employees are non-union men who have entered into employment with plaintiff, but these respondents have no knowledge, information or belief, and therefore can neither admit nor deny the allegation made in said bill that said employees have entered the employment of the plaintiff with the understanding that plaintiff shall continue to run a non-union mine, nor have these respondents any information, knowledge or belief, and therefore can neither admit nor deny the allegation that some of the plaintiff's employees have bought property and homes and expect to have permanent employment with plaintiff, so running its mine non-union, and with the understanding and expectation that while in the employ of the plaintiff they shall be protected in such employment.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that it is true that some time during the middle of this summer of 1907 the defendants Green, Watkins and Zelenka called on plaintiff's general manager at his office, and that said Green was spokesman. The respondents admit that said Green expressed a desire to talk to said general manager in regard to organizing plaintiff's mines, but respondents deny that said general manager stated to them that while unionizing of the mine was out of the question yet if they had any business proposition to submit it would be listened to, and deny the conversation between said parties as set forth in said bill.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they deny that plaintiff's general manager told said D. H. Sullivan and William Green that in case they brought plaintiff's men 76 out on a strike they would be taking away from them something that they would never be able to give back, that is, reemployment by plaintiff, and deny that the same statement was made to the defendant Watkins, as in said bill is alleged.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that it is true that under the rules of the United Mine Workers of America, there was paid by plaintiff to the secretary-treasurer of the local union the amount specified in said bill.

And these respondents deny that on one or more of the occasions heretofore referred to, as set forth in said bill, when one or more of said defendants sought plaintiff to unionize its mine, plaintiff's general manager stated to said defendants that with them as officers of the union it was not so much a question of looking after the interests of the men employed by the plaintiff as it was a question of money, and deny that they these defendants were in the business for what they could get out of it, and deny that such statement to them was made by said general manager, and deny that their attention was called to the fact that nearly $10,000 had been turned over to them from the Hitchman mine alone in the two years just prior to the strike.

And these respondents further deny that the said defendants or any of them are proceeding to carry out their conspiracy or any other conspiracy, and are now endeavoring to unionize plaintiff's mine, and deny that they threaten so to do, and deny that plaintiff has reasonable ground to feel that they will do so, and deny that they intend to close down plaintiff's mine and keep it closed until plaintiff will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor.

These respondents further deny that on or about September 7, 1907, the defendant Thomas Hughes was noticed at the Glendale mine and about the Hitchman mine intercepting the miners, taking lists of names of employees, and trying to induce the men by persuasion, threats, coercion and intimidation and by various other unlawful methods and devices to quit working for plaintiff and to join the union, and deny that such efforts or any other efforts have been made by the said Hughes to interfere with the employees and operation of the plaintiff in the working of its mine, and deny that the said Hughes had any authority from the United Mine Workers or any organization connected therewith to do anything to induce plaintiff's employees to cease working for plaintiff.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they deny that as a result of the labors of the defendant Hughes, who has been assisted by others of the defendants from time to time 77 by their counsel and advice, aiding and abetting him with their presence, about plaintiff's mine and about the Glendale mine, that the said defendants succeeded in getting 24 of the employees of the Glendale mine to agree to join the union and to quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company, as in said bill is alleged. And respondents deny the further allegation in said bill that while the said defendants have so far been unable to bring about or induce plaintiff's employees to quit its service, still the said Hughes has recently stated to one of the plaintiff's miners whom he was trying to induce to leave plaintiff's service and join the union that he, Hughes, had succeeded in having 125 men at the Hitchman mine agree to become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and that just as soon as he got 25 more names he was going to shut down the Hitchman mine; and it may be true, although these respondents have no knowledge, information or belief relating thereto, and can therefore neither admit nor deny the allegation, that 54 of plaintiff's present employees have in writing signed a statement that they are satisfied with their employment with plaintiff, with the wages paid to them, and with their work, and they would like to remain in plaintiff's employ and respondents admit that plaintiffs employ from 175 to 200 men in its mine as a general rule, and now has in its employ from 160 to 175 men.

These respondents further say that they deny that the said United Mine Workers of America and the said International Union United Mine Workers of America, the said District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, and the said Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America are, under their constitutions, violating the common law and statutory law of the state of West Virginia, as well as the constitution of said state in any manner whatever, and especially in the particulars designated in said bill, but aver that the said organizations are in every respect lawful and that their objects and purposes are lawful.

These respondents further answering say that they admit that the said John Mitchell, the said T. L. Lewis, the said W. B. Wilson are officers of the said organization, and that said Thomas Hughes is acting as an organizer of said United Mine Workers, and that the principal office thereof is at Indianapolis, Indiana, and that the offices of the subordinate organizations are located as in said bill is alleged, and that the defendants reside in the states in said bill alleged, and that no defendant is a resident of the state of West Virginia, but deny that the matter in dispute exceeds exclusive of interest and costs the sum of $2,000.

78 These respondents further say that they have no knowledge, information or belief and can neither admit nor deny the fact that the names and addresses of the members of the said several associations are to the plaintiff unknown, but they aver that a large number of the members of the said organization, from fifteen thousand to twenty thousand or more, are residents of the state of West Virginia, and deny that they are not necessary parties to this bill, inasmuch as the said bill charges that the organization of which they constitute a part is in many respects unlawful, as in said bill set forth, and that before said organization of which they are members can be declared to be unlawful they should be made parties hereto, and that for that purpose they are indispensable parties; and being indispensable parties, it is immaterial that their joinder will oust this court of its jurisdiction, and that they should be made parties hereto, as disclosed by the purposes of said bill.

These respondents for further answer unto said bill say that they deny that said defendants are acting individually and agreeing, confederating, combining and forming themselves into a conspiracy, under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, and deny that they will in pursuance of any unlawful purpose and design, by enticement, persuasion or coercion in any form whatsoever, bring about the shutting down of plaintiff's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business, as alleged in said bill, and deny that they will without the consent and against the will of plaintiff compel plaintiff to recognize said defendants and said associations in the further transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal, and deny that defendants will compel plaintiff to contract with its employees through the said defendants as officers of the said associations, under such rules and regulations made and enforced by said associations and by said defendant officers as will enable the union to dictate the persons whom plaintiff shall employ and those whom its shall discharge, the wages it shall pay, and deny that they will compel plaintiff to agree that each of its future employees as members of the said United Mine Workers of America shall owe and yield to said union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employees would owe to plaintiff, and deny that they will thus take charge of, dictate the management of, and virtually control plaintiff's business, and deny that they will perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon plaintiff which distinctly violate plaintiff's contractual, common-law, statutory and constitutional rights as a citizen of the state of West Virginia.

79 These respondents for further answer unto said bill say that they deny that they are attempting to effect the unionizing of plaintiff's mine, and deny that they propose and threaten to do any unlawful acts or employ any unlawful methods to accomplish any unlawful results, and deny that they are using threats, intimidation, force, violence or abusive language, and deny that they are picketing plaintiff's premises, picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to plaintiff's premises, and deny that they are going to the homes or boarding houses of plaintiff's employees for the purpose of intimidating or coercing them to leave plaintiff's employment, and deny that they are picketing the railroad and street cars passing to and from or through plaintiff's premises for the purpose of intercepting plaintiff's employees in going to or from plaintiff's premises and for the purpose of intercepting and preventing persons coming to plaintiff's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering into plaintiff's employment.

But these respondents aver that they have by peaceable and law-abiding methods sought to interview the employees of the plaintiff at their homes and upon the streets and highways and other places where the respondents had a right to be, for the purpose of using reason, argument and persuasion to induce them to become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and have thus endeavored to show and present to the said employees that it would be greatly to their advantage and welfare to be members of the United Mine Workers, whose object is to protect labor and promote its welfare by securing if possible through lawful methods higher wages, shorter hours, and better condition at the mines for the safety and health of the employees, and in various other lawful methods aiding the coal miner in the prosecution of his employment, and in providing the necessaries of life for himself and family, and to thus make him a more useful factor in society and as a citizen of the state.

And these respondents deny that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed for in its said bill, or to any other specific or general relief whatsoever.

And these respondents deny all unlawful combination, conspiracy, confederacy, and unlawful acts of any sort whatsoever sought by the said bill to be imputed to these respondents or to any of them.

All of which matters and things these respondents are ready to verify, maintain and prove, as this honorable court may direct.

And they humbly pray that the temporary injunction heretofore granted in this cause may be vacated and dissolved, and that 80 they may be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

Separate Answer of A. R. Watkins.

(Filed Sept. 5, 1910.)

In the District Court of the United States in and for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE CO.
vs.
JOHN MITCHELL and Others.

The Separate Answer of A. R. Watkins, Individually and as President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, to the Bill of Complaint of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, a Corporation organized under and by Virtue of the Laws of the State of West Virginia, filed in said Court.

81 To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Northern District of West Virginia:

This respondent now and at all times hereafter saving to himself all manner of benefit and advantage of exceptions which can and may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties and imperfections in said bill contained, for answer thereunto, or to so much and such parts thereof as he is advised it is material for him to make answer unto, answering says that he admits that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company is a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the state of West Virginia, having its principal office at Wheeling, in Ohio County in said State; that he has no knowledge, information or belief as to whether or not it is the owner of about 5,000 acres of coal situated contiguous to its coal mine, which is located at Benwood; that he admits that its coal mine is equipped with the necessary plant for mining coal, and has shipping facilities on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that its various shipments by land originate on that road and at its mine; that this respondent is not informed as to such fact, yet he believes that it is true that the plaintiff has been for some time past, and is now, engaged in the mining of coal and shipping the same to the open markets of the United States; this respondent also says that while he is not informed as to such matter yet he believes that it is true that the product of the plaintiff's mine is large, amounting to about 1,400 tons per day, but that he has no information, knowledge or belief, and therefore can not deny or admit, that it has customers residing in all parts of the United States, and that a large portion of its trade is during the summer and fall months when coal is carried to the northwest by steamers upon the lakes while navigation is not interrupted by ice, while another portion of its trade has been for years and now is supplying coal for fuel for engines of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, delivered by a coaling devise to the engines at its tipple, and likewise from large storage bins which have been erected and are in use by the plaintiff and by said railroad company wherefrom to coal their engines, said storage bins being located at the end of a considerable steel structure, trestle or viaduct located near the roundhouse of said railroad company at Benwood, in the construction of which steel trestle and coal bins plaintiff has expended and now has invested a large sum of money; this respondent admits that in mining coal the coal as mined is brought to the surface and mouth of the mine and then for interstate commerce is delivered 82 to the common carrier and carried by it to its destination within the United States but without the state of West Virginia; this respondent has no information, knowledge or belief as to the matter, and therefore can neither admit nor deny that plaintiff has made large contracts for the future delivery of coal to points within and without the state of West Virginia but within the United States, especially for lake trade; that respondent is not informed, nor does he know, and therefore can not admit or deny, that plaintiff alone furnishes daily to said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company between 500 and 600 tons engine coal; this respondent has no knowledge, information and belief, and therefore can neither admit nor deny, that the profits and earnings of the plaintiff depend largely upon its mining and producing coal during the summer and fall seasons of the year, and especially of this year as to its said contracts not yet filled, but which it has the ability, and unless unlawfully interfered with by the defendants expects, to fill, as alleged in said bill; but this respondent denies that said defendants or any of them have unlawfully interfered in any manner with the operations of the plaintiff in the fulfillment of any of its contracts; this respondent admits that prior to April 1, 1906, plaintiff operated its said mine by employing a large number of men who were affiliated with said United Mine Workers of America, and admits that on April 1, 1906, a strike having been ordered by said association, the employees of the plaintiff who were working for it at that time continued to work until April 16, 1906, and on that day, under renewed demands of said United Mine Workers of America, went out on a strike and ceased to work for the plaintiff; and admits that said strike so declared is still in force so far as plaintiff and its mine is concerned; but this respondent denies that at the time plaintiff's said employees went out on a strike that they had no grievance, had no complaint to plaintiff, and respondent believes and therefore admits that plaintiff had not failed to comply with its then contracts with said employees with reference to their work; this respondent admits that said strike was ordered by said association, that said plaintiff's employees went upon said strike as aforesaid in pursuance thereof, for the reason that certain coal operators in other sections of the country had refused to accede to certain demands of said association, but denies that the ordering out of plaintiff's said employees and their going out on a strike as aforesaid were means, among other things, used by said association at that time for the purpose of compelling said coal operators to sign a scale which had been prepared and was being insisted upon by said association as the price of its permission being given to its members to remain at work for said coal 83 operators, but avers that the object of going on said strike was not only to aid the other members of said association, but also the employees of the said plaintiff, to secure shorter hours and more favorable conditions for working in the mine of the said plaintiff; that it is true that at that time plaintiff was advised of the controversy between said association and said coal operators, and that it proposed to its employees that they continue at work for the plaintiff pending the signing of the scale by said coal operators, and that on the signing of the scale plaintiff would pay its said employees any additional sum that would have been earned by them during the time intervening between April 1, 1906, and the signing of the scale, provided the scale when signed should provide for an advance in wages on work on and after April 1, 1906; but this respondent denies the allegation in said bill contained that while plaintiff's said employees were ready and willing to accept plaintiff's proposition, nevertheless, the said employees, being members of the United Mine Workers of America, were by that association ordered to strike, and, after having continued in plaintiff's employ until April 16, 1906, went on a strike as aforesaid under the renewed order of said United Mine Workers of America that they should strike, and denies that the going out on a strike on April 16, 1906, was without justification and without excuse, and greatly to plaintiff's injury, embarrassment in business and financial loss, owing to its inability to carry out its contracts which it then had for the sale and delivery of coal and for supplying coal to the engines of the said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company at its tipple and bins aforesaid; this respondent admits that plaintiff's mine was shut down and was not operated from April 16, 1906, until June 12, 1906, and admits that upon resumption of operation on June 12, 1906, plaintiff started to run its mine on a non-union basis, but this respondent says that he does not know of his own knowledge, nor has he any information on the subject, nor has he any belief relating to the matter, that every man who accepted employment at the mine of plaintiff was told at the time of entering plaintiff's service that there was no union at the mine, that the company would not allow any, and that no union man could remain in the employ of the company while recognizing and giving paramount allegiance to the union and obeying its orders, and if any employee of this company joined the union he could not work any longer for the company; and this respondent says that he has no knowledge, information and belief, and therefore can neither admit nor deny, that under those circumstances and with full knowledge of the said conditions of employment many men applied to plaintiff for work, and being 84 employed entered the employment of plaintiff under the express contract not to join the United Mine Workers of America, and worked in its mine and have continued so to do until the present time with satisfaction to themselves and to the plaintiff, as in said bill is alleged, and respondent admits that from time to time since plaintiff has been operating its said mine on a non-union basis efforts have been repeatedly made by officers and agents representing the United Mine Workers of America and its subordinate associations or branches to induce the plaintiff to agree to re-unionize its mine and to sign the scale of the United Mine Workers of America; but that in their efforts to accomplish this the defendants aver no fraud, violence, coercion or other wrongful act was done by them, but that they met with the representatives of the plaintiff in a peaceable and friendly manner and discussed the same with them; and respondent denies that plaintiff has repeatedly refused to have anything to do with the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate associations or branches, or with any of its officers, agents, employees or servants, and denies that it has made known to them and each of them plaintiff's determination to run its mine non-union and its purpose not to permit any interference by said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, its officers, agents, employees and servants, with its operation of its mine or with its business, and this respondent denies that said defendants have in any manner improperly or otherwise interfered with the operation of plaintiff's mine or its men, and denies that said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, by its officers, agents, employees and servants, have sought and are now seeking by inducements, threats, and intimidation, either with or without physical violence, to cause the plaintiff's employees to leave its service and to cause others who have engaged to enter its service to break their engagements of service and not work for plaintiff, and denies that said defendants have presented others from working for plaintiff, and denies that either with an avowed or actual purpose or any other purpose said defendants are compelling or are attempting to compel plaintiff to recognize the union, or to force plaintiff to employ none but persons who are members of the United Mine Workers of America, and denies that they are attempting to compel plaintiff or have endeavored to compel plaintiff to pay such scale of wages as said United Mine Workers of America arbitrarily fix and demand, and denies that they are attempting or endeavoring to submit plaintiff's business and its property to the jurisdiction and control of said union, becoming by the union's rules obliged to employ or to discharge whom the said union, 85 its subordinate associations or branches and its officers, agents, employees and servants shall direct or require, as in said bill is alleged.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that said United Mine Workers of America, including its said subordinate associations or branches is a secret, voluntary organization having certain expressed objects, some lawful and others unlawful, and that it is in the endeavor to carry out its unlawful purposes that the matters and things in said bill complained of have arisen, as in said bill is alleged, and denies that any of the objects, either expressed or otherwise, of said United Mine Workers of America are unlawful and denies that the said defendants are attempting to do anything unlawful in the work of promoting said organization.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he admits that said United Mine Workers of America is not incorporated and was organized on or about January 25, 1890, and admits that from the proceedings of its last annual convention, which was held at Indianapolis, Indiana, from January 15 to January 22, inclusive, 1907, it appears to have had a membership of 230,667 in 1906; that its income for the fiscal year ending November 30, 1906, was $1,081,408.32, its expenditures for the same period were $1,232,-994.01, and that its balance on hand December 1, 1906, was $337,-960.71, and admits that it is claimed for it that it is the largest labor organization in America.

This respondent admits that indicative of the character and purpose of said United Mine Workers of America and its subordinate associations or branches are the excerpts from the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America, appearing in said bill, taken from article- I., II., III., IV., V., VII., IX., X., XII., XIII. and XIV., and that said excerpts are correct. This respondent also admits that the excerpts from the constitution of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, as taken from articles I., II., III., VI., VIII. and IX. are correct. This respondent further admits that the excerpts from the constitution of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, taken from articles I., II., IV., V., VI., VII. and IX. are correct. This respondent further admits that the matters set forth in the bill, showing the formality used in opening the meetings of said organization, headed "Opening," are correct, including the form of the oath administered to the members.

Respondent admits that the paid up membership of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America was in 1906, 36,372, 86 and on March 1, 1907, Sub-District 5 of District 6 U. M. W. of A. had 108 locals in good standing and a paid up membership of 12,500.

This respondent further admits that the defendant John Mitchell is president of the United Mine Workers of America, and that the other defendants therein named are officers of said organization as set forth in said bill; but this respondent denies that said defendants have agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America to unlawfully persuade, entice and procure plaintiff's miners or mine workers employed by plaintiff and working for plaintiff in and around plaintiff's mine to break, violate, disregard their several contracts with the plaintiff, all with the avowed purpose of compelling plaintiff to unionize its plant without plaintiff's consent, as alleged in said bill, and denies that to such end they have unlawfully and maliciously agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy to compel by threats and intimidation and by other unlawful means the plaintiff's said employees to join the union, and apply to their own relation with plaintiff in the matter of their employment the rules of the union, and to enable the said union to apply its rules and regulations to plaintiff, under penalty of closing down plaintiff's mine provided plaintiff still refuses to unionize its mine and recognize the union, as in said bill is charged, and denies that they have been guilty of any unlawful conduct or acts with reference to the plaintiff's business mentioned in said bill.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, admits that the plaintiff has no contractual relation whatever with any one of the defendants hereto, and that each of said defendants is fully aware that plaintiff is operating a non-union mine and will not consent to operate a union mine; that its employees are non-union men; but this respondent denies that said defendants are aware that said employees are required by plaintiff at the time of entering its service to agree not to become connected with the union while employed by plaintiff, and denies that they are aware that if said employees do join the union th-ir employment with the plaintiff shall cease; and denies that said defendants are aware that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered into its employment, and denies that the defendants are aware that plaintiff's employees are now working for plaintiff under such contract and with such conditions, and denies that all of this was known to the defendants and each of them before and at the time of the institution of this suit. Respondent says that the only thing upon which the 87 defendants were informed or of which they had any knowledge was that plaintiff was running a non-union mine and had declined to unionize its mine.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that the said John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, Lee Rankin and Thomas Hughes, either individually or as officers, agents, employees and servants of said United Mine Workers of America and its said subordinate associations or branches, are fully aware or have any knowledge that plaintiff's said employees are satisfied with their employment; he admits that the defendants are aware, however, that plaintiff is engaged in mining coal and in fulfilling contracts for coal, and admits that it would be impossible to fulfill these contracts, if any it has, without the labor of its said employees, and, although he has no information, knowledge or belief on the subject, believes that it would entail upon plaintiff great financial loss to have its ability to fulfill its contracts interfered with by the failure of its men to work longer for plaintiff, and likewise would entail great loss and damage upon plaintiff to have its mine shut down and a strike declared; but this respondent denies that said defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out, and now about to finally accomplish, namely; to cause plaintiff's mine to be shut down, its plant to remain idle, its contracts to be broken and unfulfilled, until such time as plaintiff shall submit to the demand of the union that it shall unionize its plant, and, having submitted to such demand by employing only union men, shall become subject to the orders of the union, paramount to the orders of the plaintiff, their employer, as alleged in said bill, and denies that in thus unionizing its plant plaintiff shall surrender its control and the management of its business to the union and the various rules and regulations laid down by the union and accede in advance to every demand by said union that its said officers, agents, employees and servants may make, as in said bill is alleged.

This respondent further denies that allegation in plaintiff's bill wherein it says "the effectuating of this purpose is imminent and the damage threatened is great and irremediable, and that your orator's loss so far has been in excess of two thousand dollars exclusive of interest and costs, while on the accomplishment of said purpose of said defendants and the shutting down of your orator's mine the damage to your orator would be still greater and incapable of definite ascertainment, being incalculable, and amounting 88 to many thousands of dollars."

This respondent further answering says that he does not know, but he believes, that plaintiff pays as much as the union's scale of wages to its said employees, but denies that said defendants unlawfully and maliciously are agreeing together, confederating, combining and conspiring to effectuate by unlawful means the unionizing of plaintiff's mine simply for the purpose of seeking power and for the purpose of strengthening the union in future contests with employers of labor, and to compel all miners and mine workers to join the union, and establish a monopoly, and force employers of that kind of labor, and especially to force plaintiff, to yield to the union's demands or else to give up its business, as alleged in said bill.

This respondent says that he admits that the union is not a competitor of plaintiff in the labor market; that the union does not employ labor, and is not an employer of labor.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he admits that at the annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America, held at Indianapolis, Indiana, January 15 to 22, inclusive, 1907, the said defendants John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage and A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka and Lee Rankin were present and participated in its proceedings, and admits that it was openly stated with reference to the object of said union as follows "Organized labor contends that as industry can not exist without labor, labor has the right to say under what conditions it shall be employed," but denies that the expression was used in said meeting "thereby dictating the management of the productive end of the business," as in said bill is alleged. This respondent says that the use of the language above quoted does not indicate an intention on the part of said United Mine Workers to dictate the management of the productive end of the business of coal mining, and respondent denies that there was any language used in said convention conveying the idea or intending to convey the idea that said organization has for its object the dictating of the management of coal mines and the business relating thereto; but this respondent avers that said organization should have the opportunity to be heard, and has the right to say, under peaceable methods and the forms of the law, what the conditions ought to be with reference to said mines and the operation thereof to insure health and safety in the mining and production of coal generally, and that this was the matter then before said convention when the language above quoted was used.

89 This respondent for further answer says that while he does not recollect distinctly what did occur in the said convention he believes that it is true that the defendant T. L. Lewis stated that he had charge of the organizing force under the direction of the president; that there has been a tremendous loss in the membership of the union as a result of the strike of May 1, 1906; that he had been instrumental in building up three national organizations of mine workers, and was one of the delegates and attended the convention which laid the foundation of the United Mine Workers of America; that the union had "closed shop" wage agreements with operators whereunder 181,384 persons were employed in the year 1905, and that all of those persons were required to be memebrs of the union; that respondent admits that it was stated in said meeting that the American continent, meaning however the United States and British America, is not large enough to maintain two organizations of miners, and that he, said Lewis, favored one organization of the mine workers of the American continent and the complete recognition of the union's right to organize in every mining district in the country.

And respondent further avers that he believes, though he does not remember distinctly, that it was said in said convention by the defendant W. B. Wilson what is stated in said bill, and admits the same to be true for the purposes of this suit; but this respondent further avers that the occurrences and discussions in said convention, alluded to in said bill, only related to the then condition of the United Mine Workers of America and the consideration of the best policy to promote its objects, which objects are expressed in the constitution, and has for its object the uniting of the mine employees that produce or handle coal or coke in or around the mines, and to ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, and that the proceedings in said convention did not contemplate any interference with the employees of the plaintiff, because they were not then union men, nor are they now union men, and such allegations can only be treated as surplusage for the purposes of said bill. Respondent further avers that it is true that at said convention a committee's report was unanimously adopted containing the matter set forth in said bill.

This respondent further admits that that part of the bill setting forth the statements made by T. L. Lewis and John Mitchell are true but that it was simply a tentative presentation of the situation that then confronted the organization, and did not have for its object the disturbance of plaintiff's mines or the men em-90 ployed thereat, nor had it anything whatever to do with the plaintiff's business.

This respondent further answering says that at the convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America held in March, 1907, the defendants A. R. Watkins, Lee Rankin, T. L. Lewis, John Zelenka, and Thomas Hughes were present and participated in the proceedings. This respondent also admits that that which appears in the bill as being said by A. R. Watkins in his report is true, and that that part of the bill which sets forth what appears in the report of Lee Rankin as secretary-treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District 6 is also true; that that part of the bill which sets out Resolutions Nos. 8 and 10 is true; but this respondent denies that the defendants are in anywise connected with the operation of the plaintiff's mines, or have anything to do with the interference of the plaintiff's employees.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that part of the language imputed to T. L. Lewis reading, "It is with regret that some of the locals in the pan handle broke away and the members went to work without any union or without getting a scale signed," referred to the locals of the United Mine Workers of America which existed near the mine of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. and the mine of the Glendale Coal Co., as in said bill is alleged.

Respondent further answering says that he has no knowledge, information or belief as to whether or not the Hitchman and the Glendale companies are owned by the same persons, or whether the same persons are members of the board of directors of each corporation, or whether W. H. Koch is a stockholder, a director and general manager of each of said mines, while the business of the Glendale Coal Co. is managed from the office of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co., as in said bill is alleged, and therefore he can neither admit nor deny said allegation.

This respondent, further answering said bill, says that he denies that said defendants and each of them treated the two mines as a single concern and have so dealt with plaintiff, as in said bill is alleged.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he has no knowledge, information or belief, and therefore can neither admit nor deny, the allegations made in said bill that plaintiff in refusing to recognize the union after the declaration of said strike of April 1, 1906, and after its men had left plaintiff's employ pursuant to said strike, and in thereafter and now running its mine non-union, did not seek to reduce the wages of said employees or to cause them to work for less than the scale of wages es-
91 tablished by the United Mine Workers of America, as in said bill is alleged. And this respondent, having no information or belief on the subject, can neither admit nor deny the allegation of said bill that plaintiff's sole purpose in running non-union and in now insisting upon its right to do so, unhampered by and without interruption from said defendants, acting individually and as representatives of said United Mine Workers of America, was and is to escape from the intolerable oppression and vicious intermeddling of the said defendants; but be that as it may, this respondent denies that the defendants have attempted to oppress or intermeddle with the business of the plaintiff in any manner whatsoever, but avers that they have only approached the representatives of the said company in a peaceable and law-abiding manner and its employees for the purpose of soliciting membership from the employees of the plaintiff to the United Mine Workers of America.

This respondent says that he does not understand what is meant by the allegation in said bill that "these said defendants have for some years last past been in such business as is here shown they are now engaged in"; if it means an unlawful business, then this respondent denies said allegation. Respondent admits that the defendants are well acquainted with one another, as in said bill alleged, and that they constitute a part of the higher officers of the United Mine Workers, but denies that in their hands the management of the affairs of said union have been or are centralized.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that while plaintiff's mine remained idle after it was shut down April 16, 1906, efforts were frequently made by some one or more of said defendants to induce plaintiff to sign the scale and run union, but every request of that kind met with refusal, but this respondent denies that said defendants used any force, fraud, violence, intimidation, or unlawful methods of any kind, to induce plaintiff to sign the scale and run union. This respondent further says that after plaintiff started up non-union about June 12, 1906, efforts were repeatedly made by one or more of said defendants to induce plaintiff to run its mine on a union basis, but this respondent denies that, failing in that, efforts were made by some one or more of said defendants to bring about by inducement, persuasion, threats and intimidation, and by various means and devices, unlawfully to induce plaintiff's employees to cease working for plaintiff, and also denies that by use of like means, devices, intimidation, threats, persuasion and inducements to prevent men willing to work for plaintiff not to engage to work, or after having engaged to work then not to go to 92 work for plaintiff, as in said bill is alleged; and this respondent admits that plaintiff was able to increase the number of its employees and to increase its business, which it has conducted successfully and peacefully and lawfully from the time it started non-union to the present, but denies that this was done despite any efforts or acts of interference with the plaintiff's business on the part of the defendants or any of them.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it is true that upon different occasions after starting up non-union the different officials of the United Mine Workers of America, but not all of them, among whom were the defendants John Zelenka, A. R. Watkins, D. H. Sullivan and William Green, visited the general manager of plaintiff at his office at the Hitchman mine and talked to him on the subject of the recognition of the union, the signing of the scale and the re-employment of plaintiff's employees, but denies that it was under the technical guise of thus entering into contract relations with plaintiff's employees of the United Mine Workers of America and for the purpose of doing away with the express provisions of plaintiff's contract with each of its employees that they should not become members of the union and if they did that their employment should thereby cease, as in said bill is alleged; but this respondent avers that free of any technical guise the said representatives of the United Mine Workers of America openly and fairly visited the general manager of plaintiff, was cordially received by him, and informed by him that they could see the men and talk with them, and if said men desired to join the union he would interpose no objection thereto, and that the said representatives of the United Mine Workers did not seek to have plaintiff unionize its mine under any technical guise, but desired that plaintiff should employ union men at its mines under the usual and ordinary contracts made by the union in its relations with coal operators; that it is also true that plaintiff did refuse to enter into any contract with the United Mine Workers having for its object the sole employment of organized labor at its mines.

This respondent further says that it is true that about July 1, 1907, the defendants William Green, John Zelenka and A. R. Watkins came to the office of plaintiff's general manager and had a conversation with him regarding the forming of a miner's union, or rather the putting of plaintiff's employees under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America, but denies that plaintiff on that occasion through its general manager distinctly stated that the proposition of said defendants would not be considered at conference with plaintiff's general manager and that said general manager had agreed to allow the United Mine Workers of America to put all of plaintiff's employees into the union, and denies that he, said Zelenka, made the further statement, which he caused to be circulated among plaintiff's employees, that it was up to the employees of plaintiff to join the union or else they would be out of a job at an early day because only union men would be permitted to work at the mine, and that those of plaintiff's employees who did not join the union would not be permitted to get a job any place; nor did he, said Zelenka, use such language or language of like purport or character. Respondent says that it is true that plaintiff's general manager did complain of the action mentioned, and that said Zelenka, Green and Watkins each denied making any such statement or circulating any such report, because such statement or report had never been made or circulated by them, and for them to admit such statement would have been to admit that which was untrue. And respondent denies that plaintiff's statement in this regard is true, and in the action referred to and complained of to said defendants denies that said defendants were simply carrying out their unlawful purpose heretofore formed to unionize plaintiff's mine without its consent, and denies that said defendants or any of them have done anything unlawful with reference to plaintiff's mine or its employees or otherwise.

This respondent says that it is true that plaintiff's employees are non-union men who have entered into employment with plaintiff, but this respondent has no knowledge information or belief, and therefore can neither admit nor deny the allegation made in said bill that said employees have entered the employment of the plaintiff with the understanding that plaintiff shall continue to run a non-union mine, nor has this respondent any information, knowledge or belief, and therefore can neither admit nor deny the allegation that some of plaintiff's employees have bought property and homes and expect to have permanent employment with plaintiff, so running its mine non-union, and with the understanding and expectation that while in the employ of the plaintiff they shall be protected in such employment.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that some time during the middle of this summer of 1907 the defendants Green, Watkins and Zelenka called upon plaintiff's general manager at his office, and that said Green was spokesman.

94 Respondent admits that said Green expressed a desire to talk to said general manager in regard to organizing plaintiff's mines, but denies that said general manager stated to them that while unionizing the mine was out of the question, yet if they had any business proposition to submit it would be listened to, and denies the conversation between said parties as set forth in said bill.

Respondent says that he denies that plaintiff's general manager told said D. H. Sullivan and William Green that in case they brought plaintiff's men out on a strike they would be taking away from them something they would never be able to get back, that is, re-employment by plaintiff, and denies that the same statement was made to this respondent, as in said bill is alleged.

Respondent, for further answer, says that it is true that under the rules of the United Mine Workers of America, there was paid by plaintiff to the secretary-treasurer of the local union the amount specified in said bill.

And respondent denies that on one or more of the occasions heretofore referred to, as set forth in said bill, when one or more of said defendants sought plaintiff to unionize its mine, plaintiff's general manager stated to said defendants that with them as officers of the union it was not so much a question of looking after the interest of the men employed by the plaintiff as it was a question of money, and denies that they the defendants were in the business for what they could get out of it, and denies that such statement to them was made by said general manager, and denies that their attention was called to the fact that nearly $10,000 had been turned over to them from the Hitchman mine alone in the two years just prior to the strike.

And this respondent further denies that said defendants or any of them are proceeding to carry out their conspiracy or any other conspiracy, and are now endeavoring to unionize plaintiff's mine, and denies that they threaten so to do, and denies that plaintiff has reasonable ground to fear that they will do so, and denies that they intend to close down plaintiff's mine and keep it closed until plaintiff will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor.

This respondent further denies that on or about September 7, 1907, the defendant Thomas Hughes was noticed at the Glendale mine and about the Hitchman mine intercepting the miners, taking lists of names of employees, and trying to induce the men by persuasion, threats, coercion and intimidation and by various other unlawful methods and devices to quit working for plaintiff and to join the union, and denies that such efforts or any other efforts have been made by the said Hughes to interfere with the em-
95 ployees and operation of the plaintiff in the working of its mine, and denies that the said Hughes had any authority from the United Mine Workers or any organization connected therewith to do anything to induce plaintiff's employees to cease working for plaintiff.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that as a result of the labors of the defendant Hughes, who has been assisted by others of the defendants from time to time by their counsel and advice, aiding and abetting him with their presence, about plaintiff's mine and about the Glendale mine, that the said defendants succeeded in getting 24 of the employees of the Glendale mine to agree to join the union and to quit the service of the Glendale Coal Co., as in said bill is alleged. And respondent denies the further allegation in said bill that while said defendants have so far been unable to bring about or induce plaintiff's employees to quit its service, still the said Hughes has recently stated to one of the plaintiff's miners whom he was trying to induce to leave plaintiff's service and join the union that he Hughes had succeeded in having 125 men at the Hitchman mine agree to become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and that just as soon as he got 25 more names he was going to shut down the Hitchman mine; and it may be true, although respondents has no knowledge, information or belief relating thereto, and can therefore neither admit nor deny the allegation that 54 of plaintiff's present employees have in writing signed a statement that they are satisfied with their employment with plaintiff, with the wages paid to them and with their work, and they would like to remain in plaintiff's employ; and respondent admits that plaintiffs employs from 175 to 200 men in its mine as a general rule, and now has in its employ from 160 to 175 men.

This respondent for further answer says that he denies that said United Mine Workers of America and the said International Union United Mine Workers of America, the said District No.6 United Mine Workers of America, and the said Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America are, under their constitutions, violating the common law and statutory law of the State of West Virginia, as well as the constitution of said state in any manner whatsoever, and especially in the particulars designated in said bill, but avers that the said organizations are in every respect lawful and that their objects and purposes are lawful.

This respondent further answering says that he admits that said John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson are officers of said organization, and that said Thomas Hughes is acting as an organizer of said United Mine Workers, and that the principal office thereof is at Indianapolis, Indiana, and that the offices of the sub-96 ordinate associations are located as in said bill is alleged, and that the defendants reside in the states in said bill alleged, and that no defendant is a resident of the state of West Virginia, but denies that the matter in dispute exceeds exclusive of interest and costs the sum of $2,000.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he has no knowledge, information and belief, and can neither admit nor deny the fact as alleged in said bill that the names and addresses of the members of the said several associations are to the plaintiff unknown, but he avers that a large number of members of said organization are residents of the state of West Virginia, and he denies that such members as reside in West Virginia are not necessary parties to this bill, inasmuch as the said bill charges that the United Mine Workers of America is an unlawful body; and therefore before said organization the members of which reside in West Virginia can be declared in this suit to be unlawful, such West Virginia members should be made parties hereto, and for that purpose they are indispensable parties; and, being indispensable patries, it is immaterial that their joinder will oust this court of its jurisdiction.

And this respondent avers that the United Mine Workers of America is a voluntary association and organization, unincorporated, is made up of district organizations and sub-district organizations located in various states of the Union; that District No. 17 of the United Mine Workers of America is located entirely within the state of West Virginia, composed of about 9,000 men; that the president of said District No. 17 is Ben Davis, a citizen of West Virginia, who resides in the city of Charleston, in said state; that L. F. Lanham is vice-president of said District No. 17, and is a citizen of West Virginia, and resides in said city of Charleston, in said state; that Benjamin F. Morris is secretary-treasurer of District No. 17, and is a citizen of West Virginia, and resides in said city of Charleston in said State; that the president of Sub-District No. 1 of District 17 is B. S. Hastings, a citizen of West Virginia and a resident of the town of Montgomery in said state; that B. A. Kramer is secretary of Sub-District No. 1 of District 17, is a citizen of West Virginia, and resides in said town of Montgomery in said state; that the district executive board of said District No. 17 is composed of the following members: Van D. Johnson, a citizen of West Virginia, and who resides at Burwell, in said state; W. W. Hall, a citizen of West Virginia, and who resides at Eagle in said state; W. E. Javis, a citizen of West Virginia, and who resides at Mucklow, in said state, and W. E. Smith, a citizen of West Virginia, and 97 who resides at Tunnelton, in said state. This respondent is unable to give the names of the 9,000 men who are members of the United Mine Workers of America and belong to District No. 17 of said union, but avers that all of said members of said District No. 17 are citizens of West Virginia and reside in the state of West Virginia and are subject to the jurisdiction of District No. 17, which is operating as a district and as part of the United Mine Workers of America in the state of West Virginia in the southern part thereof; that they are all interested in maintaining the legality of said organization, because if the same is declared to be unlawful they can no longer continue their organization but will be required to abandon the same.

And this respondent further answering says that he is advised that this court ought not to take jurisdiction of this respondent or any of the other defendants to this suit as members of the United Mine Workers of America, because the members of said organization who have their residence and citizenship within the territory composing District No. 17 of said union are all citizens and residents of the state of West Virginia, and that this court ought not to proceed to pass upon the question of the legality of the said organization without such representation of District No. 17 composed of 9,000 members, all citizens of West Virginia, and who are vitally interested in the questions now before the court embodied in the said bill.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that de denies that said defendants are acting individually and agreeing, confederating, combining and forming themselves into a conspiracy, under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, and denies that they will in pursuance of any unlawful purpose and design, by enticement, persuasion or coercion in any form whatsoever, bring about the shutting down of plaintiff's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business, as alleged in said bill, and denies that they will without the consent and against the will of plaintiff compel it to recognize said defendants and said associations in the further transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal, and denies that defendants will compel plaintiff to contract with its employees through said defendants as officers of said associations, under such rules and regulations made and enforced by said associations and by said defendant officers as will enable the union to dictate the persons whom plaintiff shall employ and those whom it shall discharge, the wages it shall pay, and denies that the defendants will compel plaintiff to agree that each of its future employees as members of said United Mine Workers of America shall owe and 98 yield to said union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employees would owe to plaintiff, and denies that the defendants will thus take charge of, dictate the management of, and virtually control plaintiff's business, and denies that the defendants will perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon plaintiff which distinctly violate its contractual, common-law, statutory and constitutional rights as a citizen of the state of West Virginia.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denines that the defendants are attempting to effect the unionizing of plaintiff's mine, and denies that they propose and threaten to do any unlawful acts or employ any unlawful methods to accomplish any unlawful results, and denies that they are using threats, intimidation, force, violence or abusive language, and denies that they are picketing plaintiff's premises, picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to plaintiff's premises, and denies that they are going to the homes or boarding houses of plaintiff's employees for the purpose of intimidating or coercing them to leave plaintiff's employment, and denies that they are picketing the railroad and street cars passing to and from or through plaintiff's premises for the purpose of intercepting plaintiff's employees in going to or from plaintiff's premises and for the purpose of intercepting and preventing persons coming to plaintiff's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering into plaintiff's employment.

But this respondent avers that the defendants have by peaceable and law-abiding methods sought to interview the employees of the plaintiff at their homes and upon the streets and highways and other places where the defendants had a right to be, for the purpose of using reason, argument and persuasion to induce them to become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and have thus endeavored to show and present to said employees that it would be greatly to their advantage and welfare to be members of the union, whose object is to protect labor and promote its welfare by securing if possible through lawful methods higher wages, shorter hours, and better conditions at the mines for the safety and health of the employees, and in various other lawful methods aiding the coal miner in the prosecution of his employment and in providing the necessaries of life for himself and family, and to thus make him a more useful factor in society and as a citizen of the state.

And this respondent denies that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed for in its said bill, or to any other specific or general relief whatsoever.

99 And this respondent denies all unlawful combination, conspiracy, confederacy and unlawful acts of any sort whatsoever sought by the said bill to be imputed to the defendants or any of them.

All of which matters and things this respondent is ready to verify, maintain and prove, as this honorable court may direct.

And he humbly prays that the temporary injunction heretofore granted in this cause may be vacated and dissolved, and that he may be hence dismissed with his reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

The Separate Answer of the Defendant A. R. Watkins, Individually and as President of Sub-District 5 of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, to the Bill of Complaint of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, a Corporation Organized under and by Virtue of the Laws of the State of West Virginia, and a Citizen of the said State, filed in said Court.

104 To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Northern District of West Virginia:

This defendant, now and at all times hereafter saving to himself all manner of benefit and advantage of exceptions which can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties and other imperfections in the said bill contained, for answer thereunto, or so much and such parts thereof as this defendant is advised it is material or necessary for him to make answer unto, answering says:

That he believes that it is true that the said Hitchman Coal & Coal Company is a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the state of West Virginia, having its principal office at Wheeling, in Ohio County, in said State; and that it may be that it is the owner of about 5,000 acres of coal situated contiguous to its coal mine, which is located at Benwood, in said state; that it may be also true that its coal mine is equipped with the necessary plant for mining coal, and that it has shipping facilities on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that its various shipments by rail originate on that road and at its mine; that it may also be true that it has been for some time past and is now engaged in mining coal and shipping the same to the open markets of the United States; that it may be true that the product of its mine is large, amounting to about 1,400 tons per day, and that it has customers residing in all parts of the United States, and that a large portion of its trade is during the summer and fall months, when coal is carried to the Northwest by steamers on the lakes while navigation is not impeded by ice, while another portion of its trade has been for years and now is the supplying of coal for fuel for the engines of the said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, delivered by a coaling device to the engines at its tipple and likewise from large storage bins which have been erected and are in use by said plaintiff and said railroad company wherefrom to coal their engines, said storage bins being located at the end of a considerable steel structure, trestle or viaduct, located near the round house of said railroad company near Benwood, in the construction of which steel trestle and coal bins the plaintiff has expended and now has invested a large sum of money; that it may also be true that in mining coal the coal as mined is brought to the surface and mouth of the mine, and then for interstate commerce is delivered to the common carrier and by it delivered to its destination within the United States and without the state of West Virginia; that it may also be true the plaintiff has made large contracts for future delivery of coal to points
105 within and without the state of West Virginia, and within the United States, especially for the lake trade"; that it may be also true the plaintiff only furnishes daily to said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company between five and six hundred tons of engine coal; that it may also be true the profits and earnings of the plaintiff depend largely upon its mining and producing coal during the summer and fall season of the year, and especially may this be true of this year as to its said contracts not yet fulfilled and which it has the ability, and unless unlawfully interfered with by the defendants it expects, to fill; but this respondent says as to whether or not all these matters so alleged in said bill are true he is not informed and so can neither deny nor admit the same, but calls for strict proof thereof.

And this defendant for further answer unto said bill says that it is true that prior to April 1, 1906, the plaintiff operated its said mine by employing a large number of men who were affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America, and that on said April 1, 1906, a strike having been ordered by said association, the employees of the plaintiff, who were working for it at that time, continued to work for it until April 16, 1906, and on that day they ceased to work for the plaintiff by reason of said strike; but this respondent denies that the strike so ordered and declared is still in force so far as plaintiff's said mine is concerned. This respondent avers that the said employees of plaintiff who ceased to work because of said strike did so in order that said organization might be enabled to restore to the members of the United Mine Workers the scale of prices of 1903, which was a higher and better price than that paid in 1905 and up to April 16, 1906; and that because the said plaintiff did not at once agree to accede to the scale of prices adopted by said Mine Workers' organization it became necessary for said employees to remain out of work in order to promote the adoption of the scale of prices which had been proposed by the organization prior to April 1, 1906, and had the said employees of the plaintiff then working for said plaintiff acceded to the demands of the said plaintiff it would have been impossible to carry out the policy of the said United Mine Workers of America with reference to the adoption and promotion of a just and uniform scale of prices for the work of their members. It may be true that said employees of the plaintiff belonging to said organization were ready and willing to accept the said plaintiff's proposition as contained in its said bill so far as their personal inclinations were concerned, but as members of the United Mine Workers of America they fully knew that to promote the policy of their organization, which is to ameliorate their condition as mine 106 workers by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, they could not consistently accede to the terms of employment or continuation of employment then proposed to them by the said plaintiff; and for this reason the said employees belonging to said organization did on April 16, 1906, go out on strike under the continued orders of the United Mine Workers of America, but this respondent denies that such going out on a strike on April 16, 1906, was without justification and without excuse.

This respondent, further answering, says that it may be true that said mine of plaintiff was shut down and not operated after April 16, 1906, until June 12, 1906, as alleged in said bill. It is true, as respondent believes and so avers, that the plaintiff on June 12th did start to run its mine on a non-union basis, and that each and every man who accepted employment at said mine was told at the time of entering plaintiff's employment that there was no union at the mine; that the company would not allow any; that no union man could remain in the employ of the company while recognizing and giving paramount allegiance to the union and its orders, and that if any employees of the company joined the union they could not work any longer for the plaintiff. It may be also true that thereupon, with knowledge of said condition of employment, many men applied to plaintiff for work, and entered its employment under an express contract not to join the United Mine Workers of America and to work in its mine, and have so continued to work until the present time to the satisfaction of themselves and the plaintiff.

It is also true, as respondent is advised, that from time to time, since the plaintiff has been operating at said mine on a non-union basis, efforts have been made by the officers and agents representing the United Mine Workers of America, and its subordinate organizations or branches, to induce plaintiff to agree to employ union men at its said mine and to sign the scale of the United Mine Workers of America, and that plaintiff has repeatedly refused to have anything to do with the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate associations or branches, or with any of its officers, agents, employees or servants, and has made known to them and each of them plaintiff's determination to run its mine with non-union men and of its purpose not to permit any interference by said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, its officers, agents, employees or servants, with its operation of its mine or with its business.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, denies that the said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, by its officers, agents, employees or 107 servants, have sought or are now seeking, by any means whatsoever except arguments, persuasion and other peaceable and legal methods, to cause the employees of the plaintiff to become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and denies that they have at any time endeavored by any means to cause plaintiff's employees to leave its service, or to so cause others who have engaged to enter plaintiff's service to break their engagements or service and not work for plaintiff, or to prevent others from working for plaintiff, with the professed, avowed and actual purpose of compelling the plaintiff to recognize the United Mine Workers of America and to employ only persons who are members thereof, and to compel plaintiff to pay such scale of wages as said United Mine Workers of America may arbitrarily fix and demand, and denies that said United Mine Workers, or its representatives or agents, have endeavored to cause the plaintiff to submit its business or property to the jurisdiction or control of the United Mine Workers of America, as is in said bill alleged.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he admits that the United Mine Workers of America, including its said subordinate associations and branches, is a voluntary organization, having certain express objects, as alleged in said bill, but denies that any of the said objects are unlawful or that said organization is a secret organization, but avers that all its objects are lawful, and denies that the said organization or any of its members or officers, including this respondent and the other defendants to this bill, is making any endeavor to carry out any unlawful purpose, as alleged in said bill, but on the contrary, the only objects of the said United Mine Workers of America, including all its subordinate associations and branches, together with all members thereof, are to unite employees that produce or handle coal or coke in and around coal mines and to ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, and to thus advance the welfare of the members of this organization, to better enable them to carry on their vocations in life, to promote their endeavors in a lawful and peaceable manner to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their families, to better promote their pursuit of happiness and to secure to themselves more advantageous contracts with their employers.

Your respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that so much of the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America as is set forth in said bill is correct, but that some parts thereof are omitted.

108 This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that the defendants to this bill, to-wit: John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, Lee Rankin and Thomas Hughes, each and all or any of them, as alleged in said bill, have agreed, confederated, combined or formed themselves into a conspiracy, under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, to unlawfully persuade, entice and procure plaintiff's miners or mine workers, employed by plaintiff and working for plaintiff in and around plaintiff's mine, to break, violate and disregard their several contracts with plaintiff, all with the avowed purpose of compelling plaintiff to unionize its plant without its consent, and denies that to such end they have unlawfully and maliciously agree-, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy to compel, by threats and intimidation or by other unlawful means, said plaintiff's employees to join the union and apply to their own relation with plaintiff in the matter of their employment the rules of the union, to enable said union to apply its rules and regulations to plaintiff under penalty of closing down plaintiff's mine, provided plaintiff still refused to unionize its plant and recognize the union, as alleged in said bill. But this respondent does aver that some of the representatives of the United Mine Workers have seen and conversed peaceably and quietly and without molestation, hindrance or threat with some of the employees of the said plaintiff, and have in a peaceable and friendly manner invited said employees, so conversed with, to join said organization of the United Mine Workers of America, and have used moderate argument and persuasion at the homes of some of the employees to induce them to become members of the United Mine Workers, endeavoring to show such employees that it would be better for them and their families, in the prosecution of their vocation as miners, that they become members of said organization.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that the said plaintiff has no contractual relations whatever with any of the defendants to said bill, and that each of said defendants is fully aware that plaintiff is operating a non-union mine and refuses to consent to operate a union mine; that its men are non-union men; that said employees are required by plaintiff at the time of entering its service to agree not to become connected with the union while employed, and that if they do join the union their said employment shall cease; that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered its employment, and are now working with plaintiff under such contract and condition, as alleged in said bill, 109 but this respondent avers that any condition, stipulation, contracts or agreements on the part of said plaintiff with its said employees as a condition upon which they shall enter into employment and continue in their employment with plaintiff are contrary to public policy, are in restraint of that freedom of contract accorded to all citizens of the United States under and by virtue of its Constitution and the spirit and purpose of its institutions, and can not be made a condition upon which to base any valid and binding contract or obligation between employer and employee.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that the allegations therein contained charging the defendants to said bill with knowledge that the said employees of plaintiff are satisfied with their employment, that plaintiff is engage- in mining coal and filling contracts for coal, that it would be impossible to fill these contracts without the labor of its employees, and that it would entail upon the plaintiff great financial loss to be deprived of its ability to fulfill its said contracts by failure of its men to work longer for it, and would likewise entail great loss and damage to plaintiff to have its mine shut down and to have a strike declared, can not be considered as important and material for the purpose of said bill, because this respondent says that he denies that said defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out and are now about to finally accomplish, namely, to cause plaintiff's mine to be shut down and its plant to remain idle and its contracts to be broken and unfilled until such time as plaintiff shall submit to the demands of the union; that it shall unionize its plant, and, having submitted to such demand and having unionized its plant by employing only union men, who shall become subject to the orders of this union, paramount to the orders of the plaintiff, their employer, it will thus surrender control and management of its business to the union and become subject to and acquiesce in the enforcement by the union of the various rules and regulations laid down by the union and accede in advance to every demand the said union by its officers, agents, employees and servants may make. And respondent here denies that by soliciting the said employees of the plaintiff to join the union it necessarily follows that it is endeavoring to compel the plaintiff to operate its mine by union labor, and avers that it is a non-asquitur that by the peaceful methods employed by defendants to induce the employees of said plaintiff to join the United Mine Workers of America the said plaintiff will thereby be compelled to conduct its business and carry on the 110 operation of its plant by union men only and be subject to the control and dictation of the United Mine Workers of America; that the United Mine Workers of America do not attempt by force, intimidation, fraud or violence to coerce any employer of men in and about his coal mine to engage union men to do such work and to submit to the dictation and control of the United Mine Workers of America against his will and consent, but only seek to induce, if possible, by peaceable methods, an employer to employ union men, and thus promote in a reasonable and proper manner the said labor organization.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that he denies that the effectuating of any purpose on the part of the said defendants or the said union is imminent or that the damage threatened is great and irreparable, as alleged in said bill, and denies that plaintiff's loss by reason of any acts done by the defendants or any of them, with reference to the men now in the employ of said plaintiff, has been in excess of $2,000 exclusive of interest and costs, or to any other men, by reason of acts of said defendants or any of them, and denies that said defendants or any of them have made any effort to shut down plaintiff's mine and therefore denies that plaintiff has suffered any damage by reason of any acts of the defendants or any of them, as alleged and attempted to be shown by argument and inference in said bill.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it may be true that the plaintiff pays as much as the union scale of wages to its said employees, but denies that the said defendants or any of them are in any manner unlawfully and maliciously agreeing together, confederating, combining or conspiring to effectuate by unlawful means the unionizing of plaintiff's mine, but does say that, for the purpose of giving standing and effectiveness to the said United Mine Workers of America with the employers of labor, they are using all peaceable means by arguments and reasoning with the employees of said plaintiff to become members of the said union, but denies that they are endeavoring to create a monopoly to force employers and especially the plaintiff by unlawful means to engage union men, against their will and consent, but avers that they are endeavoring to increase the membership of the said organization, to accomplish its purpose of making it desirable and profitable on the part of employers to engage union men to work in and about their mines, so as thereby to settle all differences between the employer and employee by the peaceful methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, as contemplated by the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America.

111 And this respondent for further answer unto said bill says that he admits that the union is not a competitor with the plaintiff in the labor market, and that the union does not employ labor, as in said bill is alleged, but avers that its large membership has been the means of supplying men in and about the mining and shipping of coal to a large number of extensive operators engaged in the mining and shipping of coal in the states of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illionis, and that in these places where union men have been employed the relations between employer and employee have been agreeable, and the said union has been the means of bringing about a good state of feeling and a healthy condition with reference to the status of capital and labor between each other in said states.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that if it was openly stated with reference to the objects of said union at its annual convention, held at Indianapolis from January 15 to January 22, inclusive, 1907, as alleged in said bill, to-wit: "Organized labor contends that as industry can not exist without labor, labor has the right to say under what conditions it shall be employed," it does not follow that it thereby intends to dictate the management and productive end of the business, and respondent denies that there was any such language used in said convention conveying the idea that said organization has for its object the dictating of the management of said coal mines and the business relating thereto. But it should be heard, and has the right to say, under peaceable methods and under the forms of law, what the conditions should be to insure health and safety in working in mines in the mining and production of coal.

And this respondent for further answer unto said bill avers that the said United Mine Workers of America, by peaceable and law-abiding methods, have the right to canvass for membership and solicit men to become members of the said United Mine Workers of America throughout the United States where coal mines exist and can be properly operated, provided the work of thus promoting membership and acquiring new members is conducted in a peaceable manner and by the use of reason and argument and without resorting to force, fraud, violence, intimidation or other wrong.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that that part of the same appearing on pages 26 and 27, purporting to give the language of the defendants T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson and John Mitchell, in said convetion, only related to the then condition of the United Mine Workers of America, and the discussion of the best policy to promote its objects, which objects are expressed in 112 the constitution and have hereinbefore been stated, and said discussion did not involve the use of force, violence, intimidation or other wrongful means to bring about the promotion of the objects of said union, but was simply in furtherance of its purpose of resorting to strikes of a general nature, and did not contemplate any interference with the employees of the plaintiff, because they were not then union men, nor are they now union men, and they are therefore idle allegations, and can only be regarded as surplusage for the purposes of said bill.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill with reference to the allegations therein contained, appearing on pages 28, 29, 30 and 31, relating to the general action of the convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6 of the United Mine Workers of America, held in Wheeling, West Virginia, in March, 1907, denies that anything in that part of said bill, appearing on pages 28 to 31, inclusive, has any bearing upon the rights or interests of the plaintiff in this bill, and avers that such allegations are entirely foreign to its purpose, and constitute only surplusage, and are so immaterial that any answer thereto would only raise an issue the determination of which could not affect the rights of either party to this suit.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that as to the allegations contained in the bill filed on behalf of the Glendale Coal Company against the said defendants to this bill, this defendant avers that so far as said allegations charge this respondent and the said defendants with any intimidation, coercion, fraud, combination, threats, violence or wrongful acts of any kind, the same are hereby positively denied as if the same were denied specifically and consecutive as set forth and alleged in the said bill of the said Glendale Coal Company.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it may be true that plaintiff, in refusing to recognize the union after the declaration of said strike on April 1, 1906, and after its men had left plaintiff's employment pursuant to said strike, and thereafter running its mine non-union, did not seek to reduce the wages of its employees, or cause them to work for less than the scale of wages established by the United Mine Workers of America; and it may be true that plaintiff does not now seek or contemplate any reduction in the wages of its present employees. And respondent also says that it may be true that plaintiff's sole purpose in running non-union, and in now insisting upon its right to do so, unhampered by and without interruption from said defendants, acting individually and as representatives of the United Mine Workers of America, is to escape from intolerable oppression and vicious intermeddling by said defendants. But if this is the purpose and 113 object of said plaintiff, as alleged in said bill, this respondent denies that the said defendants or any of them has done anything to hamper or interrupt said plaintiff in the running of its mine, and denies that the said defendants or any of them have sought to impose intolerable oppression upon said plaintiff, or have been guilty of any vicious intermeddling with the business of employees of the plaintiff, as in said bill is alleged.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that the said defendants have, it is true, for some years last past been associated together as members of the United Mine Workers of America, and that they are well acquainted with each other, and that they constitute a part of the higher officers of the United Mine Workers of America, and they deny that the management of said union has been centralized in their hands, but that the whole of the United Mine Workers, in convention assembled, manage and control their own affairs, and that the said defendants are only offices entrusted with the executive business of said organization.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it is true that after the plaintiff's mine was shut down, which occurred on April 16, 1906, efforts were frequently made by one or more of said defendants to induce the plaintiff to sign the scale and run its mine on a union basis, but that the request so made by the defendants was refused, and that subsequently requests were made of a like character, but this respondent denies that upon failure of the said plaintiff to employ union men at its mine as requested, as alleged in said bill, that said defendants or any of them made efforts by threats, intimidations, or any other unlawful device or means, to induce plaintiff's employees to cease working for plaintiff, and denies that by like means, such intimidation, threats or other unlawful methods, the said defendants or any of them endeavored to induce the employees of said plaintiff not to engage to work, and having engaged to work to not to go to work for plaintiff; and it is true that plaintiff was able to increase the number of its employees and increase its business, which it is conducting successfully and lawfully from that time to the present, and so far as this respondent is advised the said plaintiff is still conducting its business in a peaceful manner and free from any unlawful acts such as fraud, violence, intimidation and threats from the said defendants or any of them towards the said plaintiff and its said employees.

And this respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it may be true that about July 1, 1907, the defendants William Green, John Zelenka and A. R. Watkins came to the office 114 of the plaintiff's general manager and had a conversation with him regarding the forming of a miner's union, or rather the putting of plaintiff's employees under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America, and while plaintiff on that occasion through its general manager distinctly stated that the proposition of said defendants would not be considered, it is not true that said Zelenka subsequently reported to plaintiff's employees, and caused that report to be spread among them, that he, Zelenka, Green and Watkins, had a conference with plaintiff's general manager and that said general manager had arranged to allow the United Mine Workers to put all the plaintiff's employees into the union; and denies that they or either of them made the further statement which he caused to be circulated among the plaintiff's employees that it was up to the employees of the plaintiff to join the union or else they would be cut out of a job at an early day, because only union men would be permitted to work at the mine, and that plaintiff's employees who did not join the union would not be permited to get a job any place, as alleged in said bill. And it is true that the said general manager did complain of the alleged action, and inasmuch as it had not occurred, the said Zelenka, Green and Watkins positively denied making any such statement or circulating any such report. And respondent denies that the plaintiff's statement in this respect as alleged in said bill is true, and denies that in the action referred to, complained of to said defendants, that said defendants were simply carrying out their unlawful purpose, and denies that they had any unlawful purpose, as alleged in said bill, to unionize plaintiff's mine without its consent, and denies that there could be involved even in unionizing said mine, the doing of any unlawful act, and for any unlawful purpose or purposes as stated in said bill.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it is true that plaintiff's employees are not union men, and they entered into employment with the plaintiff with the agreement that the plaintiff shall continue to run a non-union mine; and it may be true that some of plaintiff's employees, employed under such conditions and with such understandings, have bought property and homes, and expect to have permanent employment with the plaintiff, so running its mine non-union; and with the understanding and expectation on their part that they shall be protected in such employment. But be that as it may, this respondent here positively avers that the said defendants or any of them have done nothing to force or compel by physical violence or other wrongful means the employees of said plaintiff or any of them to quit the em-115 ployment of plaintiff, but have only presented to them in a peaceable and reasonable manner the opportunity and advantages which will accrue to them by becoming members of the United Mine Workers of America, and thus joining the already large body of men working in and about coal mines in promoting the objects of the United Mine Workers of America, which are to unite mine employees that produce coal or coke in and around the mines, and thus ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, because this respondent avers that in the absence of the proper organization of large bodies of men that are generally employed in and about the coal mines of the states of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, over which territory the methods of the United Mine Workers are largely applied, peace and order can far better be maintained when disagreements arise between employer and employee, as they have often done heretofore and will continue to do so, and it is far better for the operator as well as the laborer to be thus under the control of the said union than not to belong to any organization, as these differences, difficulties and strikes incident to such employment can be much better adjusted by reason of the said organization; and it is to promote the peace and welfare of the operator and miner that the Mine Workers' organization originated and is being maintained.

And this respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it is true that some time during the middle of the summer of 1907 the defendants Green, Watkins and Zelenka called on plaintiff's general manager at his office, and that said Green then stated that he would like to talk orginization. Plaintiff's general manager stated to said parties then that while unionizing the mines was out of the question, yet if they had any business proposition to submit it would be listened to, whereupon said Green urged that under plaintiff's present arrangement or contract with its employees the men felt at liberty to do as they pleased, and did not feel any restraint, while if plaintiff would make a contract with him as President of the United Mine Workers of America, District 6, (U. M. W. of A.), he could hold the men in check, see that all agreements incorporated in the scale were fulfilled and carried out to the letter, and generally he would see that the men lived up to their contract. And it is true that to this plaintiff's general manager replied that from personal experience in the past in dealing with the union he had found the facts in reality to be just the opposite from the way Green put it, and that if that was all Green had to offer there was nothing worth considering, whereupon Green then requested plaintiff's general manager to think the matter over, and said he would see him
116 again about it in a couple of weeks; and that several weeks after said Green, Watkins and Zelenka saw the plaintiff's general manager while the latter was at the McLure House in Wheeling, and the latter told Green that he could see nothing in the proposition that interested him in any manner; that Green then asked said general manager if he would not submit the proposition to plaintiff's board of directors; that the said general manager did this, and that plaintiff's board unanimously refused to have anything whatever to do with the United Mine Workers, and shortly after that said defendant Green telephoned the plaintiff's general manager and asked if he had submitted the union proposition to plaintiff's directors, and was told that the proposition had been submitted, and that the directors absolutely refused to consider the matter in any manner whatever.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that he denies that said defendants are proceeding to carry out any conspiracy, and denies that they are now endeavoring to unionize plaintiff's mine, and denies that the said defendants or any of them threaten to close down plaintiff's mine and keep it closed until plaintiff will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor. This respondent does aver that certain representatives of the United Mine Workers of America have visited some of the employees of the said plaintiff, and tried by reason and argument to persuade them to join the union, as of right they might do.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it is true that on or about September 7, 1907, the said defendant Thomas Hughes was about the Glendale mine and about the Hitchman mine, seeing the miners but not intercepting them, taking lists of the names of the employees and trying to induce the men by persuasion, but not by threats, coercion and intimidation, and by other unlawful methods and devices, to quit working for the plaintiff, and to join the union, and denies that any unlawful efforts are being kept up for the purpose of inducing the employees or any of them, by threats, coercion and intimidation, or any other unlawful methods and devices, to quit working at the plaintiff's mine.

And respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it is true that the said Hughes did induce about twenty-four of the employees of the Glendale Coal Company to agree to join the Union and quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company, but that in inducing said men so to do no threats, force, violence, intimidation or other unlawful means were employed by the said Hughes, and, furthermore, if such unlawful means had been employed, it 117 is a matter of which the said Hitchman Coal & Coke Company can not complain in this bill. And respondent says that it is true that the said defendants have been unable to bring about or induce plaintiff's employees to quit its service, but denies that the said Hughes has recently stated to one of plaintiff's miners, whom he was trying to induce to leave plaintiff's service and join the union, that he, Hughes, had succeeded in having one hundred and twenty-five men at the Hitchman mine sign their names, agreeing to become members of the United Mine Workers, and that just as soon as he could get twenty-five more names he was going to shut the Hitchman mine down, because the said Hughes, had he obtained said signatures, had no power or authority to shut down the mine of the said plaintiff; nor was it his intention to do so, but only to have said miners join the union.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that he denies that the said United Mine Workers, the said International Union United Mine Workers of America, the said District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, and the said Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America are, under their constitutions, violating the common and statute law of the state of West Virginia as well as the Constitution of said state, and especially, as alleged in the said bill, in this, to-wit: In the provisions of sections 1, 3 and 4, of Article X., Constitution of International Union United Mine Workers of America; in the provision of sections 1 and 2 of Article VII., section 15 of Article IX., Constitution of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America; and in the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of Article I., section 1 of Article IV., section 6 of Article VI., and sections 2 and 3 of Article IX., Constitution of Sub-District of District 6 United Mine Workers of America; as well as in the said oath that is administered to each member of the United Mine Workers of America on his initiation.

This respondent for further answer to said bill says that he denies that said defendants are combining and forming themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America for any unlawfful purpose or design, by enticement, persuasion or coercion in any form to bring about the shutting down of plaintiff's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business, and denies that the said defendants will, without the consent and against the will of the plaintiff, compel the plaintiff to recognize the said defendants and the said association, in the further transaction or any transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal, and denies that said defendants will compel plaintiff with its employees through the said defendants as officers of the said 118 association, under such rules and regulations as will enable the defendants to dictate the persons whom the plaintiff shall employ and whom it shall discharge, and the wages the plaintiff shall pay, and compel plaintiff to agree that each and every employee, as members of the said United Mine Workers of America, shall owe and yield to said union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employees would owe to plaintiff; denies that they will thus take charge of and dictate the management of, and thus control, plaintiff's business, and perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon plaintiff, and distinctly violate plaintiff's contractual, common-law, statutory and consti-tional rights as a citizen of the state of West Virginia, as is in said bill alleged.

And this respondent for further answer unto said bill says that he denies that the said defendants propose and threaten to indulge in any methods of accomplishing any result or object by the use of threats, intimidation, violent or abusive language, picketing plaintiff's premises, picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to plaintiff's premises and going to the homes and boarding houses of plaintiff's employees for the purpose of intimi-dating or coercing them to leave plaintiff's employment and to picket railroad and street cars passing to and from and over plaintiff's premises, for the purpose of intercepting plaintiff's employees in going to and from plaintiff's premises, or for the purpose of intercepting or preventing persons going to plaintiff's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering plaintiff's employment, as in said bill is alleged.

And this defendant denies all unlawful combination, conspiring and confederating, without that any other matter or thing material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein and hereby well or sufficiently answered unto, confessed or avoided, traversed or denied, is true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant. All which matters and things this defendant is ready to verify, maintain and prove, as this Honorable Court may direct, and humbly prays that the temporary injunction or restraining order heretofore granted in this cause may be vacated and dissolved, and that he may be hence dismissed with his reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Northern District of West Virginia:

These defendants, now and at all times hereafter saving to themselves and each to himself all manner of benefit and advantage of exceptions which can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties and imperfections in said bill contained, for answer thereunto, or to so much and such parts thereof as these defendants are and each of them is advised it is material for them or him to make answer unto, answering say:

That it may be true that the said Hitchman Coal & Coke Company is a corporation, organized under and by virtue of the laws of the state of West Virginia, having its principal office at Wheeling, in Ohio County, in said state; that it may be that it is the owner of about 5,000 acres of coal situated contiguous to its coal mine, which is located at Benwood, in said state; that it may be also true that its coal mine is equipped with the necessary
122 plant for mining coal, and that it has shipping facilities on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that its various shipments by rail originate on that road and at its mine; that it may also be true that it has been for some time past and is now engaged in mining coal and shipping the same to the open markets of the United States; that it may be true that the product of its mine is large, amounting to about 1,400 tons per day, and that it has customers residing in all parts of the United States, and that a large portion of its trade is during the summer and fall months, when coal is carried to the northwest by steamers on the lakes while navigation is not impeded by ice, while another portion of its trade has been for years and now is the supplying of coal for fuel for the engines of the said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, delivered by a coaling device to the engines at its tipple and likewise from large storage bins which have been erected and are in use by said plaintiff and said railroad company wherefrom to coal their engines, said storage bins being located at the end of a considerable steel structure, trestle or viaduct, located near the round house of said railroad company near Benwood, in the construction of which steel trestle and coal bins the plaintiff has expended a- now has invested a large sum of money; that it may also be true that in mining coal the coal as mined is brought to the surface and mouth of the mine, and then for interstate commerce is delivered to the common carrier and by it delivered to its destination within the United States and without the state of West Virginia; that it may also be true the plaintiff has made large contracts for future delivery of coal to points within and without the state of West Virginia and within the United States, especially for "lake trade"; that it may be also true the plaintiff only furnishes daily to said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company between five and six hundred tons of engine coal; that it may also be true the profits and earnings of the plaintiff depend largely upon its mining and producing coal during the summer and fall months of the year, and especially may this be true of this year as to its said contracts not yet fulfilled and which it has the ability, and unless unlawfully interfered with by the defendants it expects, to fill; but these respondents say as to whether or not all these matters so alleged in said bill are true they are not informed, and so can neither deny nor admit the same, but call for strict proof thereof.

And these respondents, for further answer unto said bill, jointly and severally say that it is true that prior to April 1, 1906, the plaintiff operated its said mine by employing a large number of men who were affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America, 123 and that on April 1, 1906, a strike having been ordered by said association, the employees of plaintiff who were working for it at that time continued to work for it until April 16, 1906, and on that day they ceased to work for the plaintiff by reason of said strike; but these respondents deny that the strike so ordered and declared is still in force so far as plaintiff and its said mine are concerned. These respondents aver that said employees of plaintiff who ceased to work because of said strike did so in order that said organization might be enabled to restore to the members of the United Mine Workers the scale of prices of 1903, which was a higher and better price than that paid in 1905 and up to April 16, 1906; and that because the said plaintiff did not at once agree to accede to the scale of prices adopted by said Mine Workers' organization it became necessary for said employees to remain out of work in order to promote the adoption of the scale of prices which had been proposed by the organization prior to April 1, 1906, and had said employees of plaintiff then working for it acceded to the demands of said plaintiff it would have been impossible to carry out the policy of said United Mine Workers of America with reference to the adoption and promotion of a just and uniform scale of prices for the work of their members. It may be true that said employees of plaintiff belonging to said organization were ready and willing to accept said plaintiff's proposition as contained in said bill, so far as their personal inclinations were concerned, but as members of the United Mine Workers of America they fully knew that to promote the policy of their organization, which is to ameliorate their condition as mine workers by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, they could not consistently accede to the terms of employment or continuation of employment then proposed to them by plaintiff; and for this reason said employees belonging to said organization did on April 16, 1906, go out on a strike under the continued orders of the United Mine Workers of America, but these respondents deny such going out on a strike was without justification and excuse. And these respondents aver that the employees engaged by the plaintiff under contract with the United Mine Workers of America on the first day of April, 1906, and who went out on a strike under orders issued by the United Mine Workers, would have remained in the employ of the plaintiff and not have quit the employ of plaintiff, had plaintiff been willing to sign the scale which the United Mine Workers had proposed, and which scale was, after April 1, 1906, signed by many of the operators in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania and parts of West Virginia; and so by reason of the failure and refusal of the plaintiff to sign the scale submitted to it, the employees of 124 plaintiff who were then members of the United Mine Workers declined to continue to work for said plaintiff; and the reason that the employees of plaintiff declined to work for plaintiff was that said employees desired a definite and fixed scale, which carries with it a definite and fixed term of employment, and this the plaintiff declined to sign, but merely promised to pay whatever advance in price might be paid by other operators in case such other operators agreed to and did sign the scale; and therefore, to secure the signing of this scale carrying with it a definite term of employment for the period of two years at a fixed and definite price, it became necessary for the employees of plaintiff to go upon a strike in 1906.

These respondents, further answering, jointly and severally say it may be true that said mine of plaintiff was shut down and not operated after April 16, 1906, until June 12, 1906, as alleged in said bill. It may be true, and is, as respondents believe, that plaintiff on June 12th did start to run its mine on a non-union basis, and that each and every man who accepted employment at said mine was told at the time of entering plaintiff's employment that there was no union at the mine, that the company would not allow any, that no union man could remain in the employ of the company while recognizing and giving paramount allegiance to the union and its orders, and that if any employees of the company join the union they could not work any longer for plaintiff. It may be also true that thereupon, with knowledge of said condition or employment, many men applied to plaintiff for work, and entered its employment under an express contract not to join the United Mine Workers of America and to work in its mine, and have so continued to work until the present time to the satisfaction of themselves and the plaintiff. But these respondents deny any knowledge on their part or on the part of any of them that the employees of plaintiff were and are required by it at the time of entering its service to agree not to become connected with the union while so employed; and these respondents deny any knowledge on their part or on the part of any of them that if said employees join the union their employment with plaintiff shall cease; and these respondents deny any knowledge on their part or on the part of any of them that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered into its employment; and respondents deny any knowledge that such employees are now working for plaintiff under such contract and with such condition. But these respondents deny that because of these conditions, if they do exist, the defendants have not any lawful right to converse with plaintiff's employees as to the advisability 125 or propriety of becoming members of said union, and to use argument and persuasion to induce them of their own will and accord to become members of said union.

It is also true, as respondents are advised, that from time to time since the plaintiff has been operating said mine on a non-union basis, efforts have been made by the officers and agents representing the United Mine Workers and its subordinate associations and branches to induce plaintiff to agree to employ union men at its mine and to sign the scale of the United Mine Workers, and that plaintiff has repeatedly refused to have anything to do with the United Mine Workers or any of its subordinate associations or branches, or with any of its officers, agents, employees or servants, and has made known to them and each of them its determination to run its mine with non-union men and of its purpose not to permit any interference by said United Mine Workers, its subordinate associations or branches, its officers, agents, employees or servants, with its operation of its mine or with its business.

And these respondents, for further answer unto said bill, deny that said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, by its officers, agents, employees or servants, have sought or are now seeking, by any means whatsoever except arguments, persuasion and other peaceable and legal methods, to cause the employees of the plaintiff to become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and deny that they have at any time endeavored by any means to cause plaintiff's employees to leave its service, or to cause others who have engaged to enter its service to break their engag-ments of service and not work for plaintiff, or to prevent others from working for plaintiff, with the professed, avowed and actual purpose of compelling plaintiff to recognize the union and to employ only persons who are members thereof, and to compel plaintiff to pay such scale of wages as said union may arbitrarily fix and demand, and deny that said United Mine Workers, or its representatives or agents, have endeavored to cause the plaintiff to submit its business or property to the jurisdiction or control of the union, as in said bill is alleged.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, jointly and severally say that they admit that the United Mine Workers of America, including its said subordinate associations and branches, is a voluntary organization having certain expressed objects, as alleged in said bill, but deny that any of said objects are unlawful, or that said organization is a secret one, but aver that all its objects are lawful, and deny that said organization or any of its members or officers, including these respondents and the other defend-126 ants to this bill, is making any endeavor to carry out any unlawful purpose, as alleged in said bill, but, on the contrary, the only objects of said United Mine Workers, including all its subordinate associations and branches, together with all members thereof, are to unite employees that produce or handle coal or coke in and around coal mines and to ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, and to thus advance the welfare of the members of this organization, to better enable them to carry on their vocations in life, to promote their endeavors in a lawful and peaceable manner to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their families, to better promote their pursuit of happiness, to to secure to themselves more advantageous contracts with their employers.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that so much of the constitution of the United Mine Workers as is set forth in said bill is correct, but that some parts thereof are omitted.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, jointly and severally say that they deny that the defendants to this bill, to-wit, John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, Geo. W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, Lee Rankin and Thomas Hughes, each and all or any of them, as alleged in said bill, have agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, to unlawfully persuade, entice and procure plaintiff's miners or mine workers, employed by and working for plaintiff in and around its mine, to break, violate and disregard their several contracts with plaintiff, all with the avowed purpose of compelling plaintiff to unionize its plant without its consent, and deny that to such end they have unlawfully and maliciously agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy to compel, by threats and intimidation or by other unlawful means, said plaintiff's employees to join the union and apply to their own relation with plaintiff in the matter of their employment the rules of the union, to enable said union to apply its rules and regulations to plaintiff under penalty of closing down plaintiff's mine, provided plaintiff still refused to unionize its plant and recognize the union, as alleged in said bill. But these respondents do aver that some of the representatives of the United Mine Workers have seen and conversed peaceably and quietly and without molestation, hindrance or threat with some of the employees of plaintiff, and have in a peaceable and friendly manner invited said employees so conversed with to join said organization and have used moderate argument and persuasion at the homes of some of the em-127 ployees to induce them to become members of the United Mine Workers, endeavoring to show such employees that it would be better for them and their families, in the prosecution of their vocation as miners, that they become members of said organization.

And these respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that it is true that said plaintiff has no contractual relations whatever with any of the defendants to said bill, and that each of said defendants is fully aware that plaintiff is operating a non-union mine and refused to consent to operate a union mine, that its men are non-union men; and it may be true that said employees are required by plaintiff at the time of entering its service to agree not to become members of the union while employed, and that if they do join the union their said employment shall cease, but of this respondents deny any knowledge on their part; and it may be true that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered its employment, and are now working with it under such contract and condition as alleged in said bill, but of which defendants also have no knowledge; but, be this as it may, respondents aver that any condition, stipulation, contract or agreement on the part of said plaintiff with said employees as a condition upon which they shall enter into and continue their employment with it are contrary to public policy, are in restraint of that freedom of contract accorded to all citizens of the United States under and by virtue of its Constitution and the spirit and purpose of its institutions, and can not be made a condition upon which to base any valid and binding contract or obligation between employer and employee.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that the allegations therein contained charging the defendants to said bill with knowledge that said employees of plaintiff are satisfied with their employment, that plaintiff is engaged in mining coal and filling contracts for coal, that it would be impossible to fill these contracts without the labor of its employees, and that it would entail upon plaintiff great financial loss to be deprived of its ability to fulfill its said contracts by failure of its men to work longer for it, and would likewise entail great loss and damage to plaintiff to have its mine shut down and to have a strike declared, can not be considered as important and material for the purpose of said bill, because these respondents say that they deny that said defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out and are now about to finally accomplish, namely, to cause plaintiff's mine to be shut down and its plant to remain idle and its contracts to be broken and mands of the union that it shall unionize its plant, and having submitted to such demand and having unionized its plant by employing only union men, who shall become subject to the orders of the union, paramount to the orders of the plaintiff, their employer, it will thus surrender control and management of its business to the union and become subject to and acquiesce in the enforcement by the union of the various rules and regulations laid down by the union to accede in advance to every demand said union by its officers, agents, employees and servants may make. And respondents here deny that by soliciting the said employees of plaintiff to join the union it necessarily follows that it is endeavoring to compel plaintiff to operate its mine by union labor, and aver that it is a non sequitur that by the peaceful methods employed by defendants to induce the employees of plaintiff to join the union said plaintiff will thereby be compelled to conduct its business and carry on the operation of its plant by union men only and be subject to the control and dictation of the United Mine Workers of America; that the United Mine Workers of America do not attempt by force, intimidation, fraud or violence to coerce any employer of men in and about his coal mine to engage union men to do such work and to submit to the dictation and control of the union against his will and consent, but only seek to induce, if possible, by peaceable methods, an employer to employ union men, and thus promote in a reasonable and proper manner the said labor organization.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they deny that the effectuating of any purpose on the part of said defendants or said union is imminent, or that the damage threatened is great and irreparable, as alleged in said bill, and deny that plaintiff's loss by reason of any acts done by the defendants or any of them with reference to the men now in the employ of said plaintiff, has been in excess of $2,000 exclusive of interest and costs, or to any other sum, by reason of acts of said defendants or any of them, and deny that said defendants or any of them have made any effort to shut down plaintiff's mine, and therefore deny that plaintiff has suffered any damage by reason of any acts of the defendants or any of them, as alleged and attempted to be shown by argument and inference in said bill.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that it may be true that the plaintiff pays as much as the union scale of wages to its said employees, but deny that said defendants or any of them are in any manner unlawfully and maliciously agreeing together, confederating, combining or conspiring to effec-129 tuate by unlawful means the unionizing of plaintiff's mine, but do say that, for the purpose of giving standing and effectiveness to said United Mine Workers of America with the employers of labor, they used peaceable means by arguments and reasoning with the employees of said plaintiff to become members of said union, but deny that they are endeavoring to create a monopoly to force employers and especially the plaintiff by unlawful means to engage union men, against their will and consent, but aver that they are endeavoring to increase the membership of said organization, to accomplish its purpose of making it desirable and profitable on the part of employers to engage union men to work in and about their mine, so as thereby to settle all differences between the employer and employee by the peaceful methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, as contemplated by the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America.

And these respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they admit that the union is not a competitor with the plaintiff in the labor market, and that the union does not employ labor, as in said bill is alleged, but aver that its large membership has been the means of supplying men in and about the mining and shipping of coal to a large number of extensive operators engaged in the mining and shipping of coal in the states of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and that in these places where union men have been employed the relations between employer and employee have been agreeable and the said union has been the means of bringing about a good state of feeling and a healthy condition with reference to the status of capital and labor between each other in said states.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that if it was openly stated with reference to the objects of said union at its annual convention, held at Indianapolis from January 15 to January 22, inclusive, 1907, as alleged in said bill, to-wit: "Organized labor contends that, as industry can not exist without labor, labor has the right to say under what conditions it shall be employed," it does not follow that it thereby intends to dictate the management and productive end of the business, and respondents deny that there was any such language used in said conveying conveying the idea that said organization has for its object the dictating of the management of coal mines and the business relating thereto; but it should be heard and has the right to say, under peaceable methods and under the forms of law, what the conditions should be to insure health and safety in mines in the mining and production of coal.

And these respondents, for further answer unto said bill aver that said United Mine Workers of America, by peaceable and law-130 abiding methods, have the right to canvass for membership and solicit men to become members of said United Mine Workers throughout the United States where coal mines exist and can be properly operated, provided the work of thus promoting membership and acquiring new members is conducted in a peaceable manner and by the use of reason and argument and without resorting to force, fraud, violence, intimidation or other wrong.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that that part of the same appearing on pages 26 and 27, purporting to give the language of the defendants T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson and John Mitchell, in said convention, only related to the then condition of the United Mine Workers of America, and the discussion of the best policy to promote its objects, which objects are expressed in the constitution and have hereinbefore been stated, and said discussion did not involve the use of force, violence, intimidation or other wrongful means to bring about the promotion of the objects of said union, but was simply in furtherance of its purpose of resorting to strikes of a general nature, and did not contemplate any interference with the employees of the plaintiff, because they were not then union men, nor are they now union men, and they are therefore idle allegations, and can only be regarded as surplusage for the purposes of said bill.

And these respondents aver that whatever was said in the deliberations of the United Mine Workers in their convention held at Indianapolis at the time mentioned in said bill was with reference to the policy of the organization in its negotiations with coal operators in all the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, or wherever its members are engaged in the work of mining coal; and whatever was said or done in said convention had no reference to the men employed by plaintiff in the year 1907; nor was the said matter of plaintiff's mine mentioned, nor was anything done or said in said convention having for its object any interference with the employees of plaintiff, either by argument, persuasion or otherwise; but all that was said and done in said convention had reference to the general policy and measures to be inaugurated by the union or to be maintained by it for the promotion of its growth and development by peaceable means, such as argument and persuasion, and by no other means, to advance its interests as an organization in the territory of the states just mentioned. And these respondents, for further answer unto said bill, aver that if said T. L. Lewis used the language imputed to him in said bill (but which is not admitted) to the effect or in substance that the American continent was not large enough to maintain two organizations of coal miners and that he favored one organization of the coal miners of the 131 American continent and the complete recognition of the union's right to organize in every mining district of the country, the said Lewis by the use of said language did not intend in any manner to refer to plaintiff's interest in mining or the plaintiff's men in its employ; but what said Lewis did mean was that, inasmuch as there are at that time two organizations of laborers in coal mines, one in Canada and one in the United States, there ought to be but one organization for the coal miners of the United States and Canada, so as to harmonize operations in the coal mines of these two territories one with one another, and thus better promote the purposes of the organization of the United Mine Workers, instead of having two organizations for this purpose, one in Canada and one in the United States, as then existing; nor was it the intention of said Lewis by use of said language, if such was by him used, to include therein the Western Federation of Miners, which has for its object the unionizing of those engaged in mining gold, silver, copper and other metals, and not the mining of coal; so that the interests of the United Mine Workers of America and those of the Western Federation of Miners are not the same, and the union with them would be of little, if any, practical advantage to either organization.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, with reference to the allegations therein contained, appearing on pages 28, 29, 30 and 31, relating to the general action of the convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6 of the United Mine Workers of America, held in Wheeling, West Virginia, in March, 1907, deny that anything in that part of said bill, appearing on pages 28 to 31, inclusive, has any bearing upon the rights or interests of the plaintiff in this bill, and aver that such allegations are entirely foreign to its purpose, and constitute only surplusage, and are so immaterial that any answer thereto would only raise an issue the determination of which could not affect the rights of either part- to this this suit.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that as to the allegations contained in the bill filed on behalf of the Glendale Coal Company against said defendants to this bill, these defendants aver that so far as said allegations charge these respondents and said defendants with any intimidation, coercion, fraud, combination, threats, violence or wrongful acts of any kind, the same are hereby positively denied as if the same were denied specifically and consecutively as set forth and alleged in said bill of the Glendale Coal Company.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that it may be true that plaintiff, in refusing to recognize the union 132 after the declaration of said strike on April 1, 1906, and after its men had left its employment pursuant to said strike, and thereafter running its mine non-union, did not seek to reduce the wages of its employees, or cause them to work for less than the scale of wages established by the United Mine Workers; and it may be true that plaintiff does not now seek or contemplate any reduction in the wages of its present employees; and respondents also say it may be true that plaintiff's sole purpose in running non-union, and in now insisting upon its right to do so, unhampered by and without interruption from said defendants, acting individually and as representatives of the United Mine Workers, is to escape from intolerable oppression and vicious intermeddling by said defendants; but if this is the purpose and object of said plaintiff, as alleged in said bill, these respondents deny said defendants or any of them has done anything to hamper or interrupt said plaintiff in the running of its mine, and deny that said defendants or any of them have sought to impose intolerable oppression upon said plaintiff, or have been guilty of any vicious intermeddling with the business or employees of the plaintiff, as in said bill is alleged.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that said defendants have, it is true, for some years last past been associated together as members of the United Mine Workers of America, and that they are well acquainted with each other, and that they constitute a part of the higher officers of the United Mine Workers of America, and they deny that the management of said union has been centralized in their hands, but that the whole of the United Mine Workers, in convention assembled, manage and control their own affairs, and that the said defendants are only officers entrusted with the executive business of said organization.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill say that it is true that after the plaintiff's mine was shut down, which occurred on April 16, 1906, efforts were frequently made by one or more of said defendants to induce the plaintiff to sign the scale and run its mine on a union basis, but that the request so made by the defendants was refused, and that subsequent requests were made of a like character, but these respondents deny that upon the failure of said plaintiff to employ union men at its mine as requested, as alleged in said bill, said defendants or any of them made efforts by threats, intimidation, or any other unlawful device or means, to induce plaintiff's employees to cease working for it, and deny that by like means, such as intimidation, threats, or other unlawful methods, said defendants or any of them endeavored to induce the employees of said plaintiff not to engage to work, and, having engaged to work, not to go to work for plaintiff, and it is true that plain-133 tiff was able to increase the number of its employees and increase its business which it has been conducting successfully and lawfully from that time to the present, and so far as these respondents are advised said plaintiff is still conducting its business in a peaceful manner and free from any unlawful acts such as fraud, violence, intimidation and threats from said defendants or any of them towards said plaintiff and its employees.

And these respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that it may be true that about July 1, 1907, the defendants William Green, John Zelenka and A. R. Watkins came to the office of the plaintiff's general manager and had a conversation with him regarding the forming of a miners' union, or rather the putting of plaintiff's employees under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America, and while plaintiff on that occasion through its general manager distinctly stated that the proposition of said defendants would not be considered, it is not true that said Zelenka subsequently reported to plaintiff's employees, and caused that report to be spread among them, that he, Zelenka, Green and Watkins, had a conference with plaintiff's general manager and that said general manager had arranged to allow the United Mine Workers to put all the plaintiff's employees into the union; and deny that they or either of them made the further statement which he caused to be circulated among the plaintiff's employees that it was up to the employees of the plaintiff to join the union or else they would be out of a job at an early day, because only union men would be permitted to work at the mine, and that plaintiff's employees who did not join the union would not be permitted to get a job any place, as alleged in said bill. And it is true that said general manager did complain of the alleged action, and, inasmuch as it had not occurred, said Zelenka, Green and Watkins positively denied making any such statement or circulating any such report. And respondents deny that plaintiff's statement in this respect, as alleged in said bill, is true, and deny that in the action referred to, complained of to said defendants, said defendants were simply carrying out their unlawful purpose, and deny that they had an unlawful purpose, as alleged in said bill, to unionize plaintiff's mine without its consent, and deny that there could be involved, even in unionizing said mine, the doings of any unlawful act, and for any unlawful purpose or purposes, as stated in said bill.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that it may be true that plaintiff's employees are not union men, and that they entered into employment with plaintiff with the agreement that plaintiff should continue to run a non-union mine; and it may be true that some of plaintiff's employees, employed under such 134 conditions and with such understanding, have bought property and homes, and expect to have permanent employment with the plaintiff, so running its mine non-union; and with the understanding and expectation on their part that they shall be protected in such employment; but, be this as it may, these respondents aver that they were not aware that plaintiff's employees entered into its employment with the agreement that plaintiff should continue to run a non-union mine. And these respondents here positively aver that said defendants or any of them have done nothing to force or compel by physical violence or other wrongful means the employees of plaintiff or any of them to quit its employment, but have only presented to them in a peaceable and reasonable manner the opportunity and advantage which will accrue to them by becoming members of the union, and thus joining the already large body of men working in and about coal mines in promoting the objects of the United Mine Workers, which are to unite mine employees that produce coal or coke in and around the mines, and thus ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, because these respondents deny that in the absence of the proper organization of large bodies of men that are generally employed in and about coal mines of the states of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, over which territory the methods of the United Mine Workers are largely applied, peace and order can far better be maintained when disagreements arise between employer and employee, as they have often done heretofore and will continue to do, and aver that it is far better for the operator as well as the laborer to be thus under the control of the union than not to belong to any organization, as these differences, difficulties and strikes incident to such employment can be much better adjusted by reason of said organization; and it is to promote the peace and welfare of the operator and miner that the Mine Workers organization originated and is being maintained.

And these respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that it is true that some time during the middle of the summer of 1907 the defendants Green, Watkins and Zelenka called on plaintiff's general manager at his office, and that said Green then stated that he would like to talk organization. Plaintiff's general manager stated to said parties then that while unionizing the mine was out of the question, yet if they had any business proposition to submit it would be listened to, whereupon said Green urged that under plaintiff's present arrangement or contract with its employees the men felt at liberty to do as they pleased, and did not feel any restraint, while, if plaintiff would make a contract with him 135 as President of the United Mine Workers of America, District 6, he could hold the men in check, and see that all agreements incorporated in the scale were fulfilled and carried out to the letter, and generally that he would see that the men lived up to their contract. And it is true that to this plaintiff's general manager replied from personal experience in the past in dealing with the union he had found the facts in reality to be just the opposite from the way Green put it, and that if that was all Green had to offer there was nothing worth considering, whereupon Green then requested plaintiff's general manager to think the matter over, and said he would see him again about it in a couple of weeks; and that several weeks afterward said Green, Watkins and Zelenka saw plaintiff's general manager while the latter was at the McLure House in Wheeling, and the latter told Green that he could see nothing in the proposition that interested him in any manner; but respondents deny that said Green then asked said general manager if he would not submit the proposition to plaintiff's board of directors, but aver that said general manager himself stated to said Green that he, said general manager, would submit the proposition to plaintiff's directors, and respondents believe that said general manager did submit said proposition to said board and said board refused to accept it; and thereafter said Green telephoned plaintiff's general manager and asked if he had submitted the proposition to plaintiff's directors and was told the proposition had been submitted and that the directors refused to consider the matter in any manner whatever.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they deny that said defendants are proceeding to carry out any conspiracy, and deny that they are now endeavoring to unionize plaintiff's mine and deny that said defendants or any of them threaten to close down plaintiff's mine and keep it closed until plaintiff will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor. These respondents do aver that certain representatives of the United Mine Workers of America have visited some of the employees of the plaintiff, and tried by reason and argument to persuade them to join the union, as of right they might do.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that it is true that on or about September 7, 1907, said defendant Thomas Hughes was about the Glendale mine and the Hitchman mine, seeing the miners but not intercepting them, taking lists of the names of the employees and trying to induce the men by persuasion, but not by threats, coercion and intimidation, or by other unlawful methods and devices, to join the union, and deny that any unlawful efforts are being kept up for the purpose of inducing the 136 employees or any of them, by threats, coercion and intimidation, or any other unlawful methods and devices, to quit working at the plaintiff's mine.

And respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they believe it is true that said Hughes did induce about 24 men employed by the Glendale Coal Company to agree to join the union, but deny that said Hughes induced said employees to quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company; and these respondents aver that, after said men joined the union at the peaceable instance and request of said Hughes, they reported the next morning thereafter for service and work in the mine of the Glendale Coal Company, whereupon the agent and representative of the Glendale Coal Company having authority to employ and discharge its men, learning or having learned that said men had joined the union, stated to such men that their services were not needed longer, and thereupon said men were required to quit the services of said company, not upon their own accord but because the Glendale Coal Company declined to retain them longer in its employ because they had joined the union. And these respondents aver that said Hughes, in inducing said men to join the union, did not use or employ any threats, force, violence, intimidation, or other unlawful means. And respondents say it is true said defendants have been unable to bring about or induce plaintiff's employees to quit its service, and for the very substantial and sufficient reason, as respondents aver, that they have not, nor has any of them, made any effort to bring about or induce plaintiff's employees or any of them to quit its service, and deny that said Hughes had recently stated to one of plaintiff's miners, whom it is alleged but by these respondents denied he was trying to induce to leave plaintiff's service and join the union, that he, Hughes, had succeeded in having 125 men at the Hitchman mine sign their names agreeing to become members of the union, and that just as soon as he could get 25 more names he was going to shut down the Hitchman mine, because said Hughes, had he obtained said signatures, had no power or authority to shut down the mine of plaintiff, nor was it his intention to do so, but only to have said miners join the union.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they deny that the said United Mine Workers, said International Union United Mine Workers of America, said District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, and said Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America are, under their constitutions, violating the common and statute law of the state of West Virginia as well as the Constitution of said state, and especially, as alleged in said bill, in this, to-wit: in the provision of §§1, 3 and 4 of Art.
137 X., Constitution of International Union United Mine Workers of America; in the provisions of §§ 1 and 2 of Art. VIII., §15 of Art. IX., Constitution of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America; and in the provision of §§2 and 3 of Art. I., §1 of Art. IV., §6 of Art. VI., and §§2 and 3 of Art. IX., Constitution of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America; as well as in said oath that is administered to each member of the United Mine Workers of America on his initiation.

These respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they deny that said defendants are combining and forming themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America for any unlawful purpose or design, by enticement, persuasion or coercion in any form to bring about the shutting down of plaintiff's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business, and deny that said defendants will, without the consent and against the will of plaintiff, compel it to recognize said defendants and said association, in the further transaction or any transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal, and deny that said defendants will compel plaintiff with its employees through the said defendants as officers of said association, under such rules and regulations as will enable the defendants to dictate the person whom the plaintiff shall employ and discharge and the wages it shall pay, and compel plaintiff to agree that each and every employee, as a member of the United Mine Workers of America, shall owe and yield to said union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employee would owe to plaintiff; and deny that they will in any manner take charge of and dictate the management of, and in any manner control, plaintiff's business, and perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon plaintiff, and distinctly violate plaintiff's contractual, common-law, statutory and constitutional rights as a citizen of the state of West Virginia, as in said bill is alleged.

And these respondents, for further answer unto said bill, say that they deny that said defendants propose and threaten to indulge in any methods of accomplishing any result or object by the use of threats, intimidation, violent or abusive language, picketing plaintiff's premises, picketing or patroling or guarding the streets and approaches to plaintiff's premises and going to the homes and boarding houses of plaintiff's employees for the purpose of intimidating or coercing them to leave plaintiff's employment, and to picket railroad and street cars passing to and from and over plaintiff's premises, for the purpose of intercepting plaintiff's employees in going to and from plaintiff's premises, or for the purpose of intercepting or preventing persons going to plaintiff's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering plaintiff's employment, as in said bill is alleged.

And these defendants deny all unlawful combination, conspiracy and confederacy, without that any other matter of thing material or necessary for these defendants to make answer unto, and not herein and hereby well and sufficiently answered unto, confessed and avoided, traversed or denied, is true to the knowledge or belief of these defendants, and here deny each and every allegation in said all contained not herein admitted to be true. All which matters and things these defendants are ready to verify, maintain and prove, as this Honorable Court may direct. And they humbly pray that the temporary injunction heretofore granted in this cause may be vacated and dissolved, and that they may be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

The Separate Answer of William Green, Individually and as President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, to the Bill of Complaint of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, a Corporation Organized under and by Virtue of the Laws of the State of West Virginia and a Citizen of the said State, filed in said Court.

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Northern District of West Virginia:

This defendant, now and at all times hereafter saving to himself all manner of benefit and advantage of exceptions which can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties and other imperfections in said bill contained, for answer thereunto, or so much and such parts thereof as this defendant is advised it is material or necessary for him to make answer unto, answering, says:

That he believes that it is true that the said Hitchman Coal & Coke Company is a corporation, organized under and by virtue of the laws of the state of West Virginia, having its principal office at Wheeling, in Ohio County, in said state; that it may be that it is the owner of about 5,000 acres of coal situated contiguous to its coal mine, which is located at Benwood, in said state; that it may be also true that its coal mine is equipped with the necessary plant for mining coal, and that it has shipping facilities on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that its various shipments by rail originate on that road and at its mine; that it may also be true that it has been for some time past and is now engaged in mining coal and shipping the same to the open markets of the United States; that it may be true that the product of its mine is large, amounting to about 1,400 tons per day, and that it has customers residing in all parts of the United States, and that a large portion of its trade is during the summer and fall months, when coal is carried to the northwest by steamers on the lakes while navigation is not impeded by ice, while another portion of its trade has been for years
141 and now is the supplying of coal for fuel for the engines of the said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, delivered by a coaling device to the engines at its tipple and likewise from large storage bins which have been erected and are in use by said plaintiff and said railroad company wherefrom to coal their engines, said storage bins being located at the end of a considerable steel structure, trestle or viaduct, located near the round house of said railroad company near Benwood, in the construction of which steel trestle and coal bins the plaintiff has expended and now has invested a large sum of money; that it may also be true that in mining coal the coal as mined is brought to the surface and mouth of the mine, and then for interstate commerce is delivered to the common carrier and by it delivered to its destination within the United States and without the state of West Virginia; that it may also be true the plaintiff has made large contracts for future delivery of coal to points within and without the state of West Virginia and within the United States, especially for "lake trade"; that it may be also true the plaintiff only furnishes daily to said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company between five and six hundred tons of engine coal; that it may also be true the profits and earnings of the plaintiff depend largely upon its mining and producing coal during the summer and fall months of the year, and especially may this be true of this year as to its said contracts not yet fulfilled and which it has the ability, and, unless unlawfully interfered with by the defendants it expects to fill; but this respondent says as to whether or not all these matters so alleged in said bill are true he is not informed, and so can neither deny nor admit the same, but calls for strict proof thereof.

And this defendant, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that prior to April 1, 1906, the plaintiff operated its said mine by employing a large number of men who were affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America, and that on April 1, 1906, a strike having been ordered by said association, the employees of plaintiff who were working for it at that time continued to work for it until April 16, 1906, and on that day they ceased to work for the plaintiff by reason of said strike; but this respondent denies that the strike so ordered and declared is still in force so far as plaintiff and its said mine are concerned. This respondent avers that the said employees of plaintiff who ceased to work because of said strike did so in order that said organization might be enabled to restore to the members of the United Mine Workers the scale of prices of 1903, which was a higher and better price than that paid in 1905 and up to April 16, 1906; and that because the said plaintiff did not at once agree to accede to the scale of prices adopted
142 by said Mine Workers organization it became necessary for said employees to remain out of work in order to promote the adoption of the scale of prices which had been proposed by the organization prior to April 1, 1906, and had said employees of plaintiff then working for it acceded to the demands of said plaintiff it would have been impossible to carry out the policy of said United Mine Workers of America with reference to the adoption and promotion of a just and uniform scale of prices for the work of their numbers. It may be true that that said employees of plaintiff belonging to said organization were ready and willing to accept said plaintiff's proposition as contained in said bill, so far as their personal inclinations were concerned, but as members of the United Mine Workers of America they fully knew that to promote the policy of their organization, which is to ameliorate their condition as mine workers by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, they could not consistently accede to the terms of employment or continuation of employment then proposed to them by plaintiff; and for this reason said employees belonging to said organization did on April 16, 1906, go out on a strike under the continued orders of the United Mine Workers of America, but this respondent denies such going out on a strike was without justification and without excuse. And this respondent avers that the employees engaged by the plaintiff under contract with the United Mine Workers of America on the first day of April, 1906, and who went out on a strike under orders issued by the United Mine Workers would have remained in the employ of the plaintiff and not have quit the employ of plaintiff, had plaintiff been willing to sign the scale which the United Mine Workers had proposed, and which scale was, after April 1, 1906, signed by many of the operators in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania and parts of West Virginia; and so by reason of the failure and refusal of the plaintiff to sign the scale submitted to it, the employees of plaintiff who were then members of the United Mine Workers declined to continue to work for said plaintiff; and the reason that the employees of plaintiff declined to continue to work for plaintiff was that said employees desired a definite and fixed scale, which carried with it a definite and fixed term of employment and this the plaintiff declined to sign, but merely promised to pay whatever advance in price might be paid by other operators in case such other operators agreed to sign the scale and did sign the scale; and therefore to secure the signing of this scale carrying with it a definite term of employment for the period of two years at a fixed and definite price, it became necessary for the employees of plaintiff to go upon a strike in 1906.

143 This respondent, further answering, says it may be true that said mine of plaintiff was shut down and not operated after April 16, 1906, until June 12, 1906, as alleged in said bill. It may be true, and is, as respondent believes, that plaintiff on June 12th did start to run its mine on a nonunion basis, and that each and every man who accepted employment at said mine was told at the time of entering plaintiff's employment that there was no union at the mine, that the company would not allow any, that no union man could remain in the employ of the company while recognizing and giving paramount allegiance to the union and its orders, and that if any employee of the company joined the union they could not work any longer for plaintiff. It may be also true that thereupon with knowledge of said condition of employment, many men applied to plaintiff for work, and entered its employment under an express contract not to join the United Mine Workers of America and to work in its mine, and have so continued to work until the present time to the satisfaction of themselves and the plaintiff. But this respondent denies any knowledge on his part that the employees of plaintiff were and are required by it at the time of entering its service to agree not to become connected with the union while so employed; and this respondent denies any knowledge on his part that if said employees join the union their employment with plaintiff shall cease; and this respondent denies any knowledge on his part that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered into its employment; and respondent denies any knowledge that such employees are now working for plaintiff under such contract and with such condition. But this respondent denies that because of these conditions, if they do exist, the defendants have not any lawful right to converse with plaintiff's employees as to the advisability or propriety of becoming members of said union, and to use argument and persuasion to induce them of their own will and accord to become members of said union.

It is also true, as respondent is advised, that from time to time since the plaintiff has been operating at said mine on a non-union basis, efforts have been made by the officers and agents representing the United Mine Workers of America, and its subordinate associations and branches, to induce plaintiff to agree to employ union men at its said mine and to sign the scale of the United Mine Workers of America, and that plaintiff has repeatedly refused to have anything to do with the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate associations or branches, or with any of its officers, agents, employees or servants, and has made known to them and each of them its determination to run its mine with non-144 union men and of its purpose not to permit any interference by said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, its officers, agents, employees or servants, with its operation of its mine or with its business.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, denies that said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, by its officers, agents, employees or servants, have sought or are now seeking, by any means whatsoever except argument, persuasion and other peaceable and legal methods, to cause the employees of the plaintiff to become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and denies that they have at any time endeavored by any means to cause plaintiff's employees to leave its service, or to cause others who have engaged to enter plaintiff's service to break their engagements of service and not work for plaintiff, or to prevent others from working for plaintiff, with the professed, avowed and actual purpose of compelling plaintiff to recognize the union and to employ only persons who are members thereof, and to compel plaintiff to pay such scale of wages as said union may arbitrarily fix and demand, and denies that said United Mine Workers, or its representatives or agents, have endeavored to cause the plaintiff to submit its business or property to the jurisdiction or control of the union, as in said bill is alleged.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he admits that the United Mine Workers of America, including its said subordinate associations and branches, is a voluntary organization having certain expressed objects, as alleged in said bill, but denies that any of said objects are unlawful or that said organization is a secret one, but avers that all its objects are lawful, and denies that said organization or any of its members or officers, including this respondent and the other defendants to this bill, is making any endeavor to carry out any unlawful purpose, as alleged in said bill, but, on the contrary, the only objects of said United Mine Workers, including all its subordinate associations and branches, together with all members thereof, are to unite employees that produce or handle coal or coke in and around coal mines and to ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, and to thus advance the welfare of the members of this organization, to better enable them to carry on their vocations in life, to promote their endeavors in a lawful and peaceable manner to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their families, to better promote their pursuit of happiness and to secure to themselves more advantageous contracts with their employers.

145 Your respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that so much of the constitution of the United Mine Workers as is set forth in said bill is correct, but that some parts thereof are omitted.

Hughes, each and all or any of them, as alleged in said bill, have agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, to unlawfully persuade, entice and procure plaintiff's miners or mine workers, employed by plaintiff and working for plaintiff in and around plaintiff's mine, to break, violate and disregard their several contracts with plaintiff, all with the avowed purpose of compelling plaintiff to unionize its plant without its consent, and denies that to such end they have unlawfully and maliciously agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy to compel, by threats and intimidation or by other unlawful means, said plaintiff's employees to join the union and apply to their own relation with plaintiff in the matter of their employment the rules of the union, to enable said union to apply its rules and regulations to plaintiff under penalty of closing down plaintiff's mine, provided plaintiff still refuses to unionize its plant and recognize the union, as alleged in said bill. But this respondent does aver that some of the representatives of the United Mine Workers have seen and conversed peaceably and quietly and without molestation, hindrance or threat with some of the employees of plaintiff, and have in a peaceable and friendly manner invited said employees so conversed with to join said organization, and have used moderate argument and persuasion at the homes of some of the employees to induce them to become members of the United Mine Workers, endeavoring to show such employees that it would be better for them and their families, in the prosecution of their vocation as miners, that they become members of said organization.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that said plaintiff has no contractual relations whatever with any of the defendants to said bill, and that each of said defendants is fully aware that plaintiff is operating a non-union mine and refuses to consent to operate a union mine, that its men are non-union men; and it may be true that said employees are required by plaintiff at the time of entering its service to agree not to become members of the union while employed, and that if they do 146 join the union their said employment shall cease, but of this respondent denies any knowledge on his part; and it may be true that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered its employment, and are now working with plaintiff under such contract and condition, as alleged in said bill, but of which defendant also has no knowledge; but be this as it may, respondent avers that any condition, stipulation, contract or agreement on the part of said plaintiff with its said employees as a condition upon which they shall enter into employment and continue their employment with plaintiff are contrary to public policy, are in restraint of that freedom of contract accorded to all citizens of the United States under and by virtue of its Constitution and the spirit and purpose of its institutions, and can not be made a condition upon which to base any valid and binding contract or obligation between employer and employee.

with knowledge that said employees of plaintiff are satisfied with their employment, that plaintiff is engaged in mining coal and filling contracts for coal, that it would be impossible to fill these contracts without the labor of its employees, and that it would entail upon plaintiff great financial loss to be deprived of its ability to fulfill its said contracts by failure of its men to work longer for it, and would likewise entail great loss and damage to plaintiff to have its mine shut down and to have a strike declared, can not be considered as important and material for the purpose of said bill, because this respondent says that he denies that said defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out and are now about to finally accomplish, namely, to cause plaintiff's mine to be shut down and its plant to remain idle and its contracts to be broken and unfulfilled until such time as plaintiff shall submit to the demands of the union that it shall unionize its plant, and, having submitted to such demand and having unionized its plant by employing only union men, who shall become subject to the orders of the union, paramount to the orders of the plaintiff, their employer, it will thus surrender control and management of its business to the union and become subject to and acquiesce in the enforcement by the union of the various rules and regulations laid down by the union and accede in advance to every demand said union by its officers, agents, employees and servants may make. And respondent here denies that by soliciting the said employees of plaintiff to join the union it necessarily follows that it is endeavoring to compel plaintiff 147 to operate its mine by union labor, and avers that it is a non sequitur that by the peaceful methods employed by defendants to induce the employees of plaintiff to join the United Mine Workers the said plaintiff will thereby be compelled to conduct its business and carry on the operation of its plant by union men only and be subject to the control and dictation of the United Mine Workers of America; that the United Mine Workers of America do not attempt by force, intimidation, fraud or violence to coerce any employer of men in and about his coal mine to engage union men to do such work and to submit to the dictation and control of the United Mine Workers against his will and consent, but only seek to induce, if possible, by peaceable methods, an employer to employ union men, and thus promote in a reasonable and proper manner the said labor organization.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that the effectuating of any purpose on the part of said defendants or said union is imminent or that the damage threatened is great and irreparable, as alleged in said bill, and denies that plaintiff's loss by reason of any acts done by the defendants or any of them with reference to the men now in the employ of said plaintiff, has been in excess of $2,000 exclusive of interest and costs, or to any other sum, by reason of acts of said defendants or any of them, and denies that said defendants or any of them have made any effort to shut down plaintiff's mine, and therefore denies that plaintiff has suffered any damage by reason of any acts of the defendants or any of them, as alleged and attempted to be shown by argument and inference in said bill.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that the plaintiff pays as much as the union scale of wages to its said employees, but denies that said defendants or any of them are in any manner unlawfully and maliciously agreeing together, confederating, combining or conspiring to effectuate by unlawful means the unionizing of plaintiff's mine, but does say that, for the purpose of giving standing and effectiveness to said United Mine Workers of America with the employers of labor, they used peaceable means by arguments and reasoning with the employees of said plaintiff to become members of said union, but denies that they are endeavoring to create a monopoly to force employers and especially the plaintiff by unlawful means to engage union men, against their will and consent, but avers that they are endeavoring to increase the membership of said organization, to accomplish its purpose of making it desirable and profitable on the part of employers to engage union men to work in and about their 148 mines, so as thereby to settle all differences between the employer and employee by the peaceful methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, as contemplated by the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he admits that the union is not a competitor with the plaintiff in the labor market, and that the union does not employ labor, as in said bill is alleged, but avers that its large membership has been the means of supplying men in and about the mining and shipping of coal to a large number of extensive operators engaged in the mining and shipping of coal in the states of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and that in these places where union men have been employed the relations between employer and employee have been agreeable, and the said union has been the means of bringing about a good state of feeling and a healthy condition with reference to the status of capital and labor between each other in said states.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that if it was openly stated with reference to the objects of said union at its annual convention, held at Indianapolis from January 15 to January 22, inclusive, 1907, as alleged in said bill, to-wit: "Organized labor contends that, as industry can not exist without labor, labor has the right to say under what conditions it shall be employed," it does not follow that it thereby intends to dictate the management and productive end of the business, and respondent denies that there was any such language used in said convention conveying the idea that said organization has for its object the dictating of the management of coal mines and the business relating thereto; but it should be heard and has the right to say, under peaceable methods and under the forms of law, what the conditions should be to insure health and safety in working in mines in the mining and production of coal.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, avers that the said United Mine Workers of America, by peaceable and law-abiding methods, have the right to canvass for membership and solicit men to become members of said United Mine Workers throughout the United States where coal mines exist and can be properly operated, provided the work of thus promoting membership and acquiring new members is conducted in a peaceable manner and by the use of reason and argument and without resorting to force, fraud, violence, intimidation or other wrong.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that that part of the same appearing on pages 26 and 27, purporting to give the language of the defendants T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson 149 and John Mitchell, in said convention, only related to the then condition of the United Mine Workers of America, and the discussion of the best policy to promote its objects, which objects are expressed in the constitution and have hereinbefore been stated, and said discussion did not involve the use of force, violence, intimidation or other wrongful means to bring about the promotion of the objects of said union, but was simply in furtherance of its purpose of resorting to strikes of a general nature, and did not contemplate any interference with the employees of the plaintiff, because they were not then union men, nor are they now union men and they are therefore idle allegations, and can only be regarded as surplusage for the purposes of said bill.

And this respondent avers that whatever was said in the deliberations of the United Mine Workers in their convention held at Indianapolis at the time mentioned in said bill was with reference to the policy of the organization in its negotiations with coal operators in all the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, or wherever its members are engaged in the work of mining coal; and whatever was said or done in said convention had no reference to the men employed by plaintiff in the year 1907; nor was the said matter of plaintiff's mine mentioned, nor was anything done or said in said convention having for its object any interference with the employees of plaintiff, either by argument, persuasion or otherwise; but all that was said and done in said convention had reference to the general policy and measures to be inaugurated by the union or to be maintained by the union for the promotion of its growth and development by peaceable means, such as argument and persuasion, and by no other means, to advance its interests as an organization in the territory of the states just mentioned. And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, avers that if said T. L. Lewis used the language imputed to him in said bill (but which is not admitted), to the effect or in substance that the American continent was not large enough to maintain two organizations of coal miners, and that he favored one organization of the coal miners of the American continent and the complete recognition of the union's right to organize in every mining district of the country, the said Lewis by the use of said language did not intend in any manner to refer to plaintiff's interests in mining or the plaintiff's men in its employ; but what said Lewis did mean was that, inasmuch as there were at that time two organizations of the laborers in coal mines, one in Canada and one in the United States, there ought to be but one organization for the coal miners of the United States and Canada, so as to harmonize operations in the coal mines of these two territories one with another, and thus better promote the purposes of the organization of the United Mine Workers, instead of having two organizations for this purpose, one in Canada and one in the United States, as then existing, nor was it the intention of said Lewis by the use of said language, if such was by him used, to include therein the Western Federation of Miners, which has for its object the unionizing of those engaged in mining gold, silver, copper and other metals, and not the mining of coal; so that the interests of the United Mine Workers of America and those of the Western Federation of Miners are not the same, and the union with them would be of little, if any, practical advantage to either organization.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, with reference to the allegations therein contained, appearing on pages 28, 29, 30 and 31, relating to the general action of the convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6 of the United Mine Workers of America, held in Wheeling, West Virginia, in March, 1907, denies that anything in that part of said bill, appearing on pages 28 to 31, inclusive, has any bearing upon the rights or interests of the plaintiff in this bill, and avers that such allegations are entirely foreign to its purpose, and constitute only surplusage, and are so immaterial that any answer thereto would only raise an issue the determination of which could not affect the rights of either party to this suit.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that as the allegations contained in the bill filed on behalf of the Glendale Coal Company against said defendants to this bill, this defendant avers that so far as said allegations charge this respondent and said defendants with any intimidation, coercion, fraud, combination, threats, violence or wrongful acts of any kind, the same are hereby positively denied as if the same were denied specifically and consecutively as set forth and alleged in said bill of the Glendale Coal Company.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that plaintiff, in refusing to recognize the union after the declaration of said strike on April 1, 1906, and after its men had left plaintiff's employment pursuant to said strike, and thereafter running its mine non-union, did not seek to reduce the wages of its employees, or cause them to work for less than the scale of wages established by the United Mine Workers of America; and it may be true that plaintiff does not now seek or contemplate any reduction in the wages of its present employees; and respondent also says it may be true that plaintiff's sole purpose in running non-union, and in now insisting upon its right to do so, unhampered by and without interruption from said defendants, acting individually and as representatives of the United Mine Workers, is to escape from intolerable oppression and vicious intermeddling by said defendants; but if this is the purpose and object of said plaintiff, as alleged in said bill, this respondent denies said defendants or any of them has done anything to hamper or interrupt said plaintiff in the running of its mine, and denies that said defendants or any of them have sought to impose intolerable oppression upon said plaintiff, or have been guilty of any vicious intermeddling with the business or employees of the plaintiff, as in said bill is alleged.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that said defendants have, it is true, for some years last past been associated together as members of the United Mine Workers of America, and that they are well acquainted with each other, and that they constitute a part of the higher officers of the United Mine Workers of America, and they deny that the management of said union has been centralized in their hands, but that the whole of the United Mine Workers, in convention assembled, manage and control their own affairs, and that the said defendants are only officers entrusted with the executive business of said organization.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that after the plaintiff's mine was shut down, which occurred on April 16, 1906, efforts were frequently made by one or more of said defendants to induce the plaintiff to sign the scale and run its mine on a union basis, but that the request so made by the defendants was refused, and that subsequently requests were made of a like character, but this respondent denies that upon the failure of said plaintiff to employ union men at its mine as requested, as alleged in said bill, said defendants or any of them made efforts by threats, intimidation, or any other unlawful device or means, to induce plaintiff's employees to cease working for plaintiff, and denies that by like means, such as intimidation, threats or other unlawful methods, the said defendants or any of them endeavored to induce the employees of said plaintiff not to engage to work, and having engaged to work, not to go to work for plaintiff; and it is true that plaintiff was able to increase the number of its employees and increase its business, which it has been conducting successfully and lawfully from that time to the present, and so far as this respondent is advised said plaintiff is still conducting its business in a peaceful manner and free from any unlawful acts such as fraud, violence, intimidation and threats from said defendants or any of them towards said plaintiff and its employees.

152 And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that about July 1, 1907, the defendants William Green, John Zelenka and A. R. Watkins came to the office of the plaintiff's general manager and had a conversation with him regarding the forming of a miners' union, or rather the putting of plaintiff's employees under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America, and while plaintiff on that occasion through its general manager distinctly stated that the proposition of said defendants would not be considered, it is not true that said Zelenka subsequently reported to plaintiff's employees, and caused that report to be spread among them, that he, Zelenka, Green and Watkins, had a conference with plaintiff's general manager and that said general manager had arranged to allow the United Mine Workers to put all the plaintiff's employees into the union; and denies that they or either of them made the further statement which he caused to be circulated among the plaintiff's employees that it was up to the employees of the plaintiff to join the union or else they would be cut out of a job at an early day, because only union men would be permitted to work at the mine, and that plaintiff's employees who did not join the union would not be permitted to get a job any place, as alleged in said bill. And it is true that said general manager did complain of the alleged action, and, inasmuch as i. had not occurred, said Zelenka, Green and Watkins positively denied making any such statement or circulating any such report. And respondent denies that plaintiff's statement in this respect as alleged in said bill is true, and denies that in the action referred to, complained of to said defendants, said defendants were simply carrying out their unlawful purpose, and denies that they had any unlawful purpose, as alleged in said bill, to unionize plaintiff's mine without its consent, and denies that there could be involved, even in unionizing said mine, the doing of any unlawful act, and for any unlawfful purpose or purposes as stated in said bill.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that plaintiff's employees are not union men, and that they entered into employment with plaintiff with the agreement that the plaintiff should continue to run a non-u-ion mine; and it may be true that some of plaintiff's employees, employed under such conditions and with such understanding, have bought property and homes, and expect to have permanent employment with the plaintiff, so running its mine non-union; and with the understanding and expectation on their part that they shall be protected in such employment; but, be this as it may, this respondent avers that he was not aware that plaintiff's employees entered into 153 its employment with the agreement that plaintiff should continue to run a non-union mine. And this respondent here positively avers, that said defendants or any of them have done anything to force or compel by physical violence or other wrongful means the employees of plaintiff or any of them to quit its employment, but have only presented to them in a peaceable and reasonable manner the opportunity and advantage which will accrue to them by becoming members of the union, and thus joining the already large body of men working in and about coal mines in promoting the objects of the United Mine Workers, which are to unite mine employees that produce coal or coke in and around the mines, and thus ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, because this respondent denies that in the absence of the proper organization of large bodies of men that are generally employed in and about coal mines of the states of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, over which territory the methods of the United Mine Workers are largely applied, peace and order can far better be maintained when disagreements arise between employer and employee, as they have often done heretofore and will continue to do, and avers that it is far better for the operator as well as the laborer that the employees be thus under the control of the union than not to belong to any organization, as these differences, difficulties and strikes incident to such employment can be much better adjusted by reason of said organization; and it is to promote the peace and welfare of the operator and miner that the Mine Workers' organization originated and is being maintained.

And this respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it is true that some time during the middle of the summer of 1907 the defendants Green, Watkins and Zelenka called on plaintiff's general manager at his office and that said Green then stated that he would like to talk organization. Plaintiff's general manager stated to said parties then that while unionizing the mine was out of the question, yet if they had any business proposition to submit it would be listened to, whereupon said Green urged that under plaintiff's present arrangement or contract with its employees the men felt at liberty to do as they pleased, and did not feel any restraint, while if plaintiff would make a contract with him as President of the United Mine Workers of America, District 6, he could hold the men in check, and see that all agreements incorporated in the scale were fulfilled and carried out to the letter, and generally he would see that the men lived up to their contract. And it is true that to this plaintiff's general manager replied that from personal experience in the past in dealing with the union he had 154 found the facts in reality to be just the opposite from the way Green put it, and that if that was all Green had to offer there was nothing worth considering, whereupon Green then requested plaintiff's general manager to think the matter over, and said he would see him again about it in a couple of weeks; and that several weeks afterward said Green, Watkins and Zelenka saw the plaintiff's general manager while the latter was at the McLure House in Wheeling, and the latter told Green that he could see nothing in the proposition that interested him in any manner; but respondent denies that said Green then asked said general manager if he would not submit the proposition to plaintiff's board of directors, but avers that said general manager himself stated to said Green that he, said general manager, would submit the proposition to plaintiff's board of directors, and respondent believes that said general manager did submit said proposition to said board and said board refused to accept it; and thereafter said Green telephoned plaintiff's general manager and asked if he had submitted the proposition to plaintiff's directors, and was told that the proposition had been submitted and that the directors refused to consider the matter in any manner whatever.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that said defendants are proceeding to carry out any conspiracy, and denies that they are now endeavoring to unionize plaintiff's mine, and denies that said defendants or any of them threaten to close down plaintiff's mine and keep it closed until plaintiff will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor. This respondent does aver that certain representatives of the United Mine Workers of America have visited some of the employees of the plaintiff, and tried by reason and argument to persuade them to join the union, as of right they might do.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it s true that on or about September 7, 1907, said defendant Thomas lughes was about the Glandale mine and the Hitchman mine, see-ng the miners but not intercepting them, taking lists of the names of he employees and trying to induce the men by persuasion, but not y threats, coercion and intimidation, or by other unlawful methods nd devices, to join the union, and denies that any unlawful efforts re being kept up for the purpose of inducing the employees or any f them, by threats, coercion and intimidation, or any other unlawul methods and devices, to quit working at the plaintiff's mine.

And respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he believes it is true that said Hughes did induce about 24 em-55 ployees of the Glendale Coal Company to agree to join the union, but denies that said Hughes induced said employees quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company; and this reondent avers that, after said men joined the union at the peaceable istance and request of said Hughes, they reported the next morning ereafter for service and work in the mines of the Glendale Coal ompany, whereupon the agent and representative of the Glendale al Company having authority to employ and discharge its men, arning or having learned that said men had joined the union, ated to such men that their services were not needed longer, and ereupon said men were required to quit the service of the Glenda'e al Company, not upon their own accord but because the Glendale al Company declined to retain them longer in its employ because the fact that they had joined the union. And this respondent ers that said Hughes, in inducing said men to join the union, did t use or employ any threats, force, violence, intimidation, or other lawful means, to induce them to become members of said union.
d respondent says it is true said defendants have been unable to ng about or induce plaintiff's employees to quit its service, and the very substantial and sufficient reason, as this respondent ers, that they have not, nor has any of them, made any efforts to ng about or induce plaintiff's employees or any of them to quit service, and denies that said Hughes has recently stated to one plaintiff's miners, whom it is alleged but by respondent denied was trying to induce to leave plaintiff's service and join the union, t he, Hughes, had succeeded in having 125 men at the Hitchman ne sign their names agreeing to become members of the union, that just as soon as he could get 25 more names he was going shut down the Hitchman mine, because said Hughes, had he ained said signatures, had no power or authority to shut down mine of plaintiff, nor was it his intention to do so, but only ave said miners join the union.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he ies that the said United Mine Workers, said International Union ted Mine Workers of America, said District No. 6 United Mine rkers of America, and said Sub-District 5 of District 6 United e Workers of America are, under their constitutions, violating common and statute law of the state of West Virginia as well he Constitution of said state, and especially, as alleged in said bill, in this, to-wit: in the provisions of §§1, 3 and 4 of Art. X., Constitution of International Union United Mine Workers of America; in the provision of §§1 and 2 of Art. VIII. §15 of Art. IX., Constitution of District No. 6 United Mine Workers of Amer-156 ica; and in the provisions of §§2 and 3 of Art. 1, §1 of Art. IV., §6 of Art. VI., and §§2 and 3 of Art. IX., Constitution of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America; as well as in said oath that is administered to each member of the United Mine Workers of America on his initiation.

This respondent, for further answer to said bill, says that he denies that said defendants are combining and forming themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America for any unlawful purpose or design, by enticement, persuasion or coercion in any form to bring about the shutting down of plaintiff's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business, and denies that said defendants will, without the consent and against the will of the plaintiff, compel the plaintiff to recognize said defendants and said associations, in the further transaction or any transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal, and denies that said defendants will compel plaintiff with its employees through the said defendants as officers of said association, under such rules and regulations as will enable the defendants to dictate the persons whom the plaintiff shall employ and discharge, and the wages it shall pay, and compel plaintiff to agree that each and every employee, as a member of said United Mine Workers of America, shall owe and yield to said union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employee would owe to plaintiff; and denies that they will in any manner take charge of and dictate the management of, and in any manner control, plaintiff's business, and perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon plaintiff, and distinctly violate plaintiff's contractual, common-law, statutory and constitutional rights as a citizen of the state of West Virginia, as in said bill is alleged.

And this respondent for further answer unto said bill says that he denies that the said defendants propose and threaten to indulge in any methods of accomplishing any result or object by the use of threats, intimidation, violent or abusive language, picketing plaintiff's premises, picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to plaintiff's premises and going to the homes and boarding houses of plaintiff's employees for the purpose of intimidating or coercing them to leave plaintiff's employment and to picket railroad and street cars passing to and from and over plaintiff's premises, for the purpose of intercepting plaintiff's employees in going to and from plaintiff's premises, or for the purpose of intercepting or preventing persons going to plaintiff's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering plaintiff's employment, as in said bill is alleged.

157 And this defendant denies all unlawful combination, conspiracy and confederacy, without that any other matter or thing material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein and hereby well and sufficiently answered unto, confessed and avoided, traversed or denied, is true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant, and here denies each and every allegation in said bill contained not herein admitted to be true. All which matters and things this defendant is ready to verify, maintain and prove, as this Honorable Court may direct. And he humbly prays that the temporary injunction heretofore granted in this cause may be vacated and dissolved, and that he may be hence dismissed with his reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

The Separate Answer of the Defendant D. H. Sullivan, Individually and as Vice-President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, to the Bill of Complaint of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, a Corporation Organized under and by Virtue of the Laws of the State of West Virginia and a Citizen of the said State, filed in said Court.

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Northern District of West Virginia:

This defendant, now and at all times hereafter saving to himself all manner of benefit and advantage of exceptions which can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties
·159 and other imperfections in said bill contained, for answer thereunto, or so much and such parts thereof as this defendant is advised it is material or necessary for him to make answer unto, answering, says:

That he believes that it is true that the said Hitchman Coal & Coke Company is a corporation, organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia, having its principal office at Wheeling, in Ohio County, in said state; that it may be that it is the owner of about 5,000 acres of coal situated contiguous to its coal mine, which is located at Benwood, in said state; that it may be also true that its coal mine is equipped with the necessary plant for mining coal, and that it has shipping facilities on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that its various shipments by rail originate on that road and at its mine; that it may also be true that it has been for some time past and is now engaged in mining coal and shipping the same to the open markets of the United States; that it may be true that the product of its mine is large, amounting to about 1,400 tons per day, and that it has customers residing in all parts of the United States, and that a large portion of its trade is during the summer and fall months, when coal is carried to the northwest by steamers on the lakes while navigation is not impeded by ice, while another portion of its trade has been for years and now is the supplying of coal for fuel for the engines of the said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, delivered by a coaling device to the engines at its tipple and likewise from large storage bins which have been erected and are in use by said plaintiff and said railroad company wherefrom to coal their engines, said storage bins being located at the end of a considerable steel structure, trestle or viaduct, located near the round house of said railroad company near Benwood, in the construction of which steel trestle and coal bins the plaintiff has expended and now has invested a large sum of money; that it may also be true that in mining coal the coal as mined is brought to the surface and mouth of the mine, and then for interstate commerce is delivered to the common carrier and by it delivered to its destination within the United States and without the state of West Virginia; that it may also be true the plaintiff has made large contracts for future delivery of coal to points within and without the state of West Virginia and within the United States, especially for "lake trade"; that it may be also true the plaintiff only furnishes daily to said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company between five and six hundred tons of engine coal; that it may also be true the profits and earnings of the plaintiff depend largely upon its mining and producing coal during the summer and fall months of the year, and especially 160 may this be true of this year as to its said contracts not yet fulfilled and which it has the ability, and, unless unlawfully interfered with by the defendants it expects to fill; but this respondent says as to whether or not all these matters so alleged in said bill are true he is not informed, and so can neither deny nor admit the same, but calls for strict proof thereof.

And this defendant, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that prior to April 1, 1906, the plaintiff operated its said mine by employing a large number of men who were affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America, and that on April 1, 1906, a strike having been ordered by said association, the employees of plaintiff who were working for it at that time continued to work for it until April 16, 1906, and on that day they ceased to work for the plaintiff by reason of said strike; but this respondent denies that the strike so ordered and declared is still in force so far as plaintiff and its said mine are concerned. This respondent avers that the said employees of plaintiff who ceased to work because of said strike did so in order that said organization might be enabled to restore to the members of the United Mine Workers the scale of prices of 1903, which was a higher and better price than that paid in 1905 and up to April 16, 1906; and that because the said plaintiff did not at once agree to accede to the scale of prices adopted by said Mine Workers' organization it became necessary for said employees to remain out of work in order to promote the adoption of the scale of prices which had been proposed by the organization prior to April 1, 1906, and had said employees of plaintiff then working for it acceded to the demands of said plaintiff it would have been impossible to carry out the policy of said United Mine Workers of America with reference to the adoption and promotion of a just and uniform scale of prices for work of their numbers. It may be true that said employees of plaintiff belonging to said organization were ready and willing to accept said plaintiff's proposition as contained in said bill, so far as their personal inclinations were concerned, but as members of the United Mine Workers of America they fully knew that to promote the policy of their organization, which is to ameliorate their condition as mine workers by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, they could not consistently accede to the terms of employment or continuation of employment then proposed to them by plaintiff; and for this reason said employees belonging to said organization did on April 16, 1906, go out on a strike under the continued orders of the United Mine Workers of America, but this respondent denies such going out on a strike was with-161 out justification and without excuse. And this respondent avers that the employees engaged by the plaintiff under contract with the United Mine Workers of America on the first day of April, 1906, and who went out on a strike under orders issued by the United Mine Workers would have remained in the employ of the plaintiff and not have quit the employ of plaintiff, had plaintiff been willing to sign the scale which the United Mine Workers had proposed, and which scale was, after April 1, 1906, signed by many of the operators in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania and parts of West Virginia; and so by reason of the failure and refusal of the plaintiff to sign the scale submitted to it, the employees of plaintiff who were then members of the United Mine Workers declined to continue to work for said plaintiff; and the reason that the employees of plaintiff declined to continue to work for plaintiff was that said employees desired a definite and fixed scale, which carried with it a definite and fixed term of employment, and this the plaintiff declined to sign, but merely promised to pay whatever advance in price might be paid by other operators in case such other operators agreed to sign the scale and did sign the scale; and therefore to secure the signing of this scale carrying with it a definite term of employment for the period of two years at a fixed and definite price, it became necessary for the employees of plaintiff to go upon a strike in 1906.

This respondent, further answering, says it may be true that said mine of plaintiff was shut down and not operated after April 16, 1906, until June 12, 1906, as alleged in said bill. It may be true, and is, as respondent believes, that plaintiff on June 12th did start to run its mine on a non-union basis, and that each and every man who accepted employment at said mine was told at the time of entering plaintiff's employment that there was no union at the mine, that the company would not allow any, that no union man could remain in the employ of the company while recognizing and giving paramount allegiance to the union and its orders, and that if any employees of the company joined the union they could not work any longer for plaintiff. It may be also true that thereupon, with knowledge of said condition of employment, many men applied to plaintiff for work, and entered its employment under an express contract not to join the United Mine Workers of America and to work in its mine, and have so continued to work until the present time to the satisfaction of themselves and the plaintiff. But this respondent denies any knowledge on his part that the employees of plaintiff were and are required by it at the time of entering its service to agree not to become connected with the denies any knowledge that such employees are now working for plaintiff under such contract and with such condition. But this respondent denies that because of these conditions, if they do exist, the defendants have not any lawful right to converse with plaintiff's employees as to the advisability or propriety of becoming members of said union, and to use argument and persuasion to induce them of their own will and accord to become members of said union.

It is also true, as respondent is advised, that from time to time since the plaintiff has been operating at said mine on a non-union basis, efforts have been made by the officers and agents representing the United Mine Workers of America, and its subordinate associations and branches, to induce plaintiff to agree to employ union men at its said mine and to sign the scale of the United Mine Workers of America, and that plaintiff has repeatedly refused to have anything to do with the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate associations or branches, or with any of its officers, agents, employees or servants, and has made known to them and each of them its determination to run its mine with non-union men and of its purpose not to permit any interference by said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, its officers, agents, employees or servants, with its operation of its mine or with its business.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, denies that said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, by its officers, agents, employees or servants, have sought or are now seeking, by any means whatsoever except argument, persuasion and other peaceable and legal methods, to cause the employees of the plaintiff to become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and denies that they have at any time endeavored by any means to cause plaintiff's employees to leave its service, or to cause others who have engaged to enter plaintiff's service to break their engagements of service and not work for plaintiff, or to prevent others from working for plaintiff, with the professed, avowed and actual purpose of compelling plaintiff to recognize the union and to employ only persons who are members thereof, and to compel plaintiff to pay such scale of wages as said union may arbitrarily fix and demand, and denies 163 that said United Mine Workers, or its representatives or agents, have endeavored to cause the plaintiff to submit its business or property to the jurisdiction or control of the union, as in said bill is alleged.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he admits that the United Mine Workers of America, including its said subordinate associations and branches, is a voluntary organization having certain expressed objects, as alleged in said bill, but denies that any of said objects are unlawful or that said organization is a secret one, but avers that all its objects are lawful, and denies that said organization or any of its members or officers, including this respondent and the other defendants to this bill, is making any endeavor to carry out any unlawful purpose, as alleged in said bill, but, on the contrary, the only objects of said United Mine Workers, including all its subordinate associations and branches, together with all members thereof, are to unite employees that produce or handle coal or coke in and around coal mines and to ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, and to thus advance the welfare of the members of this organization, to better enable them to carry on their vocations in life, to promote their endeavors in a lawful and peaceable manner to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their families, to better promote their pursuit of happiness and to secure to themselves more advantageous contracts with their employers.

Your respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that so much of the constitution of the United Mine Workers as is set forth in said bill is correct, but that some parts thereof are omitted.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that the defendants to this bill, to-wit, John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, Lee Rankin and Thomas Hughes, each and all or any of them, as alleged in said bill, have agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, to unlawfully persuade, entice and procure plaintiff's miners or mine workers, employed by plaintiff and working for plaintiff in and around plaintiff's mine, to break, violate and disregard their several contracts with plaintiff, all with the avowed purpose of compelling plaintiff to unionize its plant without its consent, and denies that to such end they have unlawfully and maliciously agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy to compel, by threats and intimidation or by other unlawful means, said plaintiff's employees to join the union and apply to their own relation with plaintiff in the matter of their employment the 164 rules of the union, to enable said union to apply its rules and regulations to plaintiff under penalty of closing down plaintiff's mine, provided plaintiff still refuses to unionize its plant and recognize the union, as alleged in said bill. But this respondent does aver that some of the representatives of the United Mine Workers have seen and conversed peaceably and quietly and without molestation, hindrance or threat with some of the employees of plaintiff, and have in a peaceable and friendly manner invited said employees so conversed with to join said organization, and have used moderate argument and persuasion at the homes of some of the employees to induce them to become members of the United Mine Workers, endeavoring to show such employees that it would be better for them and their families, in the prosecution of their vocation as miners, that they become members of said organization.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that said plaintiff has no contractual relations whatever with any of the defendants to said bill, and that each of said defendants is fully aware that plaintiff is operating a non-union mine and refuses to consent to operate a union mine, that its men are non-union men; and it may be true that said employees are required by plaintiff at the time of entering its service to agree not to become members of the union while employed, and that if they do join the union their said employment shall cease, but of this respondent denies any knowledge on his part; and it may be true that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered its employment, and are now working with plaintiff under such contract and condition, as alleged in said bill, but of which defendant also has no knowledge; but be this as it may, respondent avers that any condition, stipulation, contract or agreement on the part of said plaintiff with its said employees as a condition upon which they shall enter into employment and continue their employment with plaintiff are contrary to public policy, are in restraint of that freedom of contract accorded to all citizens of the United States under and by virtue of its Constitution and the spirit and purpose of its institutions, and can not be made a condition upon which to base any valid and binding contract or obligation between employer and employee.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that the allegations therein contained charging the defendants to said bill with knowledge that said employees of plaintiff are satisfied with their employment, that plaintiff is engaged in mining coal and filling contracts for coal, that it would be impossible to fill these contracts without the labor of its employees, and that it 165 would entail upon plaintiff great financial loss to be deprived of its ability to fulfill its said contracts by failure of its men to work longer for it, and would likewise entail great loss and damage to plaintiff to have its mine shut down and to have a strike declared, can not be considered as important and material for the purpose of said bill, because this respondent says that he denies that said defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out and are now about to finally accomplish, namely, to cause plaintiff's mine to be shut down and its plant to remain idle and its contracts to be broken and unfulfilled until such time as plaintiff shall submit to the demands of the union that it shall unionize its plant, and, having submitted to such demand and having unionized its plant by employing only union men, who shall become subject to the orders of the union, paramount to the orders of the plaintiff, their employer, it will thus surrender control and management of its business to the union and become subject to and acquiesce in the enforcement by the union of the various rules and regulations laid down by the union and accede in advance to every demand said union by its officers, agents, employees and servants may make. And respondent here denies that by soliciting the said employees of plaintiff to join the union it necessarily follows that it is endeavoring to compel plaintiff to operate its mine by union labor, and avers that it is a non sequitur that by the peaceful methods employed by defendants to induce the employees of plaintiff to join the United Mine Workers the said plaintiff will thereby be compelled to conduct its business and carry on the operation of its plant by union men only and be subject to the control and dictation of the United Mine Workers of America; that the United Mine Workers of America do not attempt by force, intimidation, fraud or violence to coerce any employer of men in and about his coal mine to engage union men to do such work and to submit to the dictation and control of the United Mine Workers against his will and consent, but only seek to induce, if possible, by peaceable methods, an employer to employ union men, and thus promote in a reasonable and proper manner the said labor organization.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that the effectuating of any purpose on the part of said defendants or said union is imminent or that the damage threatened is great and irreparable, as alleged in said bill, and denies that plaintiff's loss by reason of any acts done by the defendants or any of them with reference to the men now in the employ of said
166 plaintiff, has been in excess of $2,000 exclusive of interest and costs, or to any other sum, by reason of acts of said defendants or any of them, and denies that said defendants or any of them have made any effort to shut down plaintiff's mine, and therefore denies that plaintiff has suffered any damage by reason of any acts of the defendants or any of them, as alleged and attempted to be shown by argument and inference in said bill.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that the plaintiff pays as much as the union scale of wages to its said employees, but denies that said defendants or any of them are in any manner unlawfully and maliciously agreeing together, confederating, combining or conspiring to effectuate by unlawful means the unionizing of plaintiff's mine, but does say that, for the purpose of giving standing and effectiveness to said United Mine Workers of America with the employers of labor, they used peaceable means by arguments and reasoning with the employees of said plaintiff to become members of said union, but denies that they are endeavoring to create a monopoly to force employers and especially the plaintiff by unlawful means to engage union men, against their will and consent, but avers that they are endeavoring to increase the membership of said organization, to accomplish its purpose of making it desirable and profitable on the part of employers to engage union men to work in and about their mines, so as thereby to settle all differences between the employer and employee by the peaceful methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, as contemplated by the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he admits that the union is not a competitor with the plaintiff in the labor market, and that the union does not employ labor, as in said bill is alleged, but avers that its large membership has been the means of supplying men in and about the mining and shipping of coal to a large number of extensive operators engaged in the mining and shipping of coal in the states of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and that in these places where union men have been employed the relations between employer and employee have been agreeable, and the said union has been the means of bringing about a good state of feeling and a healthy condition with reference to the status of capital and labor between each other in said states.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that if it was openly stated with reference to the objects of said union at its annual convention, held at Indianapolis from January 15 to January 22, inclusive, 1907, as alleged in said bill, to-wit: "Or-167 ganized labor contends that as industry can not exist without labor, labor has the right to say under what conditions it shall be employed," it does not follow that it thereby intends to dictate the management and productive end of the business, and respondent denies that there was any such language used in said convention conveying the idea that said organization has for its object the dictating of the management of coal mines and the business relating thereto; but it should be heard and has the right to say, under peaceable methods and under the forms of law, what the conditions should be to insure health and safety in working in mines in the mining and production of coal.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, avers that the said United Mine Workers of America, by peaceable and law-abiding methods, have the right to canvass for membership and solicit men to become members of said United Mine Workers throughout the United States where coal mines exist and can be properly operated, provided the work of thus promoting membership and acquiring new members is conducted in a peaceable manner and by the use of reason and argument and without resorting to force, fraud, violence, intimidation or other wrong.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that that part of the same appearing on pages 26 and 27, purporting to give the language of the defendants T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson and John Mitchell, in said convention, only related to the then condition of the United Mine Workers of America, and the discussion of the best policy to promote its objects, which objects are expressed in the constitution and have hereinbefore been stated, and said discussion did not involve the use of force, violence, intimidation or other wrongful means to bring about the promotion of the objects of said union, but was simply in furtherance of its purpose of resorting to strikes of a general nature, and did not contemplate any interference with the employees of the plaintiff, because they were not then union men, nor are they now union men and they are therefore idle allegations, and can only be regarded as surplusage for the purposes of said bill.

And this respondent avers that whatever was said in the deliberations of the United Mine Workers in their convention held at Indianapolis at the time mentioned in said bill was with reference to the policy of the organization in its negotiations with coal operators in all the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, or wherever its members are engaged in the work of mining coal; and whatever was said or done in said convention had no reference to the men employed by plaintiff in the year 168 1907; nor was the said matter of plaintiff's mine mentioned, nor was anything done or said in said convention having for its object any interference with the employees of plaintiff, either by argument, persuasion or otherwise; but all that was said and done in said convention had reference to the general policy and measures to be inaugurated by the union or to be maintained by the union for the promotion of its growth and development by peaceable means, such as argument and persuasion, and by no other means, to advance its interests as an organization in the territory of the states just mentioned. And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, avers that if said T. L. Lewis used the language imputed to him in said bill (but which is not admitted), to the effect or in substance that the American continent was not large enough to maintain two organizations of coal miners, and that he favored one organization of the coal miners of the American continent and the complete recognition of the union's right to organize in every mining district of the country, the said Lewis by the use of said language did not intend in any manner to refer to plaintiff's interests in mining or the plaintiff's men in its employ; but what said Lewis did mean was that, inasmuch as there were at that time two organizations of the laborers in coal mines, one in Canada and one in the United States, there ought to be but one organization for the coal miners of the United States and Canada, so as to harmonize operations in the coal mines of these two territories one with another, and thus better promote the purposes of the organization of the United Mine Workers, instead of having two organizations for this purpose, one in Canada and one in the United States, as then existing, nor was it the intention of said Lewis by the use of said language, if such was by him used, to include therein the Western Federation of Miners, which has for its object the unionizing of those engaged in mining gold, silver, copper and other metals, and not the mining of coal; so that the interests of the United Mine Workers of America and those of the Western Federation of Miners are not the same, and the union with them would be of little, if any, practical advantage to either organization.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, with reference to the allegations therein contained, appearing on pages 28, 29, 30 and 31, relating to the general action of the convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6 of the United Mine Workers of America, held in Wheeling, West Virginia, in March, 1907, denies that anything in that part of said bill, appearing on pages 28 to 31, inclusive, has any bearing upon the rights or interests of the plaintiff in this bill, 169 and avers that such allegations are entirely foreign to its purpose, and constitute only surplusage, and are so immaterial that any answer thereto would only raise an issue the determination of which could not affect the rights of either party to this suit.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that as to the allegations contained in the bill filed on behalf of the Glendale Coal Company against said defendants to this bill, this defendant avers that so far as said allegations charge this respondent and said defendants with any intimidation, coercion, fraud, combination, threats, violence or wrongful acts of any kind, the same are hereby positively denied as if the same were denied specifically and consecutively as set forth and alleged in said bill of the Glendale Coal Company.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that plaintiff, in refusing to recognize the union after the declaration of said strike on April 1, 1906, and after its men had left plaintiff's employment pursuant to said strike, and thereafter running its mine non-union, did not seek to reduce the wages of its employees, or cause them to work for less than the scale of wages established by the United Mine Workers of America; and it may be true that plaintiff does not now seek or contemplate any reduction in the wages of its present employees; and respondent also says it may be true that plaintiff's sole purpose in running non-union, and in now insisting upon its right to do so, unhampered by and without interruption from said defendants, acting individually and as representatives of the United Mine Workers, is to escape from intolerable oppression and vicious intermeddling by said defendants; but if this is the purpose and object of said plaintiff, as alleged in said bill, this respondent denies said defendants or any of them has done anything to hamper or interrupt said plaintiff in the running of its mine, and denies that said defendants or any of them have sought to impose intolerable oppression upon said plaintiff, or have been guilty of any vicious intermeddling with the business or employees of the plaintiff as in said bill is alleged.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that said defendants have, it is true, for some years last past been associated together as members of the United Mine Workers of America, and that they are well acquainted with each other, and that they constitute a part of the higher officers of the United Mine Workers of America, and they deny that the management of said union has been centralized in their hands, but that the whole of the United Mine Workers, in convention assembled, manage and control their own affairs, and that the said defendants are only officers entrusted with the executive business of said organization.

170 This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that after the plaintiff's mine was shut down, which occurred on April 16, 1906, efforts were frequently made by one or more of said defendants to induce the plaintiff to sign the scale and run its mine on a union basis, but that the request so made by the defendants was refused, and that subsequently requests were made of a like character, but this respondent denies that upon the failure of said plaintiff to employ union men at its mine as requested, as alleged in said bill, said defendants or any of them made efforts by threats, intimidation, or any other unlawful device or means, to induce plaintiff's employees to cease working for plaintiff, and denies that by like means, such as intimidation, threats or other unlawful methods, the said defendants or any of them endeavored to induce the employees of said plaintiff not to engage to work, and having engaged to work, not to go to work for plaintiff; and it is true that plaintiff was able to increase the number of its employees and increase its business, which it has been conducting successfully and lawfully from that time to the present, and so far as this respondent is advised said plaintiff is still conducting its business in a peaceful manner and free from any unlawful acts such as fraud, violence, intimidation and threats from said defendants or any of them towards said plaintiff and its employees.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that about July 1, 1907, the defendants William Green, John Zelenka and A. R. Watkins came to the office of the plaintiff's general manager and had a conversation with him regarding the forming of a miners' union, or rather the putting of plaintiff's employees under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America, and while plaintiff on that occasion through its general manager distinctly stated that the proposition of said defendants would not be considered, is it not true that said Zelenka subsequently reported to plaintiff's employees, and caused that report to be spread among them, that he, Zelenka, Green and Watkins, had a conference with plaintiff's general manager and that said general manager had arranged to allow the United Mine Workers to put all the plaintiff's employees into the union; and denies that they or either of them made the further statement which he caused to be circulated among the plaintiff's employees that it was up to the employees of the plaintiff to join the union or else they would be out of a job at an early day, because only union men would be permitted to work at the mine, and that plaintiff's employees who did not join the union would not be permitted to get a job any place, as alleged in said bill. And it is true that said general man-171 ager did complain of the alleged action, and, inasmuch as it had not occurred, said Zelenka, Green and Watkins positively denied making any such statement or circulating any such report. And respondent denies that plaintiff's statement in this respect as alleged in said bill is true, and denies that in the action referred to, complained of to said defendants, said defendants were simply carrying out their unlawful purpose, and denies that they had any unlawful purpose, as alleged in said bill, to unionize plaintiff's mine without its consent, and denies that there could be involved, even in unionizing said mine, the doing of any unlawful act, and for any unlawful purpose or purposes as stated in said bill.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that plaintiff's employees are not union men, and that they entered into employment with plaintiff with the agreement that the plaintiff should continue to run a non-union mine; and it may be true that some of plaintiff's employees, employed under such conditions and with such understanding, have bought property and homes, and expect to have permanent employment with the plaintiff, so running its mine non-union; and with the understanding and expectation on their part that they shall be protected in such employment; but, be this as it may, this respondent avers that he was not aware that plaintiff's employees entered into its employment with the agreement that plaintiff should continue to run a non-union mine. And this respondent here positively avers, that said defendants or any of them have done nothing to force or compel by physical violence or other wrongful means the employees of plaintiff or any of them to quit its employment, but have only presented to them in a peaceable and reasonable manner the opportunity and advantage which will accrue to them by becoming members of the union, and thus joining the already large body of men working in and about coal mines in promoting the objects of the United Mine Workers, which are to unite mine employees that produce coal or coke in and around the mines, and thus ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, because this respondent denies that in the absence of the proper organization of large bodies of men that are generally employed in and about coal mines of the states of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, over which territory the methods of the United Mine Workers are largely applied, peace and order can far better be maintained when disagreements arise between employer and employee, as they have often done heretofore and will continue to do, and avers that it is far better for the operator as well as the laborer 172 that the employees be thus under the control of the union than not to belong to any organization, as these differences, difficulties and strikes incident to such employment can be much better adjusted by reason of said organization; and it is to promote the peace and welfare of the operator and miner that the Mine Workers organization originated and is being maintained.

And this respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it is true that some time during the middle of the summer of 1907 the defendants Green, Watkins and Zelenka called on plaintiff's general manager at his office and that said Green then stated that he would like to talk organization. Plaintiff's general manager stated to said parties then that while unionizing the mine was out of the question, yet if they had any business proposition to submit it would be listened to, whereupon said Green urged that under plaintiff's present arrangement or contract with its employees the men felt at liberty to do as they pleased, and did not feel any restraint, while if plaintiff would make a contract with him as President of the United Mine Workers of America, District 6, he could hold the men in check, and see that all agreements incorporated in the scale were fulfilled and carried out to the letter, and generally he would see that the men lived up to their contract. And it is true that to this plaintiff's general manager replied that from personal experience in the past in dealing with the union he had found the facts in reality to be just the opposite from the way Green put it, and that if that was all Green had to offer there was nothing worth considering, whereupon Green then requested plaintiff's general manager to think the matter over, and said he would see him again about it in a couple of weeks; and that several weeks afterward said Green, Watkins and Zelenka saw the plaintiff's general manager while the latter was at the McLure House in Wheeling, and the latter told Green that he could see nothing in the proposition that interested him in any manner; but respondent denies that said Green then asked said general manager if he would not submit the proposition to plaintiff's board of directors, but avers that said general manager himself stated to said Green that he, said general manager, would submit the proposition to plaintiff's board of directors, and respondent believes that said general manager did submit said proposition to said board and said board refused to accept it; and thereafter said Green telephoned plaintiff's general manager and asked if he had submitted the proposition to plaintiff's directors, and was told that the proposition had been submitted and that the directors refused to consider the matter in any manner whatever.

173 any conspiracy, and denies that they are now endeavoring to unionize plaintiff's mine, and denies that said defendants or any of them threaten to close down plaintiff's mine and keep it closed until plaintiff will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor. This respondent does aver that certain representatives of the United Mine Workers of America have visited some of the employees of the plaintiff, and tried by reason and argument to persuade them to join the union, as of right they might do.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that on or about September 7, 1907, said defendant Thomas Hughes was about the Glendale mine and the Hitchman mine, seeing the miners but not intercepting them, taking lists of the names of the employees and trying to induce the men by persuasion, but not by threats, coercion and intimidation, or by other unlawful methods and devices, to join the union, and denies that any unlawful efforts are being kept up for the purpose of inducing the employees or any of them, by threats, coercion and intimidation, or any other unlawful methods and devices, to quit working at the plaintiff's mine.

And respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he believes it is true that said Hughes did induce about 24 employees of the Glendale Coal Company to agree to join the union, but denies that said Hughes induced said employees to quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company; and this respondent avers that, after said men joined the union at the peaceable instance and request of said Hughes, they reported the next morning thereafter for service and work in the mines of the Glendale Coal Company, whereupon the agent and representative of the Glendale Coal Company having authority to employ and discharge its men, learning or having learned that said men had joined the union, stated to such men that their services were not needed longer, and thereupon said men were required to quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company, not upon their own accord but because the Glendale Coal Company declined to retain them longer in its employ because of the fact that they had joined the union. And this respondent avers that said Hughes, in inducing said men to join the union, did not use or employ any threats, force, violence, intimidation, or other unlawful means, to induce them to become members of said union. And respondent says it is true said defendants have been unable to bring about or induce plaintiff's employees to quit its service, and for the very substantial and sufficient reason, as this respondent avers, that they have not, nor has any of them, made any effort to bring about or induce plaintiff's employees or any of them to quit its service, and denies that said Hughes has recently 174 stated to one of plaintiff's miners, whom it is alleged but by respondent denied he was trying to induce to leave plain-tiff's service and join the union, that he, Hughes, had succeeded in having 125 men at the Hitchman mine sign their names agreeing to become members of the union, and that just as soon as he could get 25 more names he was going to shut down the Hitchman mine, because said Hughes, had he obtained said signatures, had no power or authority to shut down the mine of plaintiff, nor was it his intention to do so, but only to have said miners join the union.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that the said United Mine Workers, said International Union United Mine Workers of America, said District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, and said Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America are, under their constitutions, violating the common and statute law of the state of West Virginia as well as the Constitution of said state, and especially, as alleged in said bill, in this, to-wit: in the provisions of §§1, 3 and 4 of Art. X., Constitution of International Union United Mines Workers of America; in the provisions of §§1 and 2 of Art. VIII. §15 of Art. IX., Constitution of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; and in the provisions of §§2 and 3 of Art. I., §1 of Art. IV., §6 of Art.
VI., and §§2 and 3 of Art. IX., Constitution of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America; as well as in said oath that is administered to each member of the United Mine Workers of America on his initiation.

This respondent, for further answer to said bill, says that he denies that said defendants are combining and forming themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America for any unlawful purpose or design, by enticement, persuasion or coercion in any form to bring about the shutting down of plaintiff's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business, and denies that said defendants will, without the consent and against the will of the plaintiff, compel the plaintiff to recognize said defendants and said associations, in the further transaction or any transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal, and denies that said defendants will compel plaintiff with its employees through the said defendants as officers of said association, under such rules and regulations as will enable the defendants to dictate the persons whom the plaintiff shall employ and discharge, and the wages it shall pay, and compel plaintiff to agree that each and every employee, as a member of said United Mine Workers of America, shall owe and yield to said union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employee 175 would owe to plaintiff; and denies that they will in any manner take charge of and dictate the management of, and any manner control, plaintiff's business and perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon plaintiff, and distinctly violate plain-tiff's contractual, common-law, statutory and constitutional rights as a citizen of the state of West Virginia, as in said bill is alleged.
And this respondent for further answer unto said bill says that he denies that the said defendants propose and threaten to indulge in any methods of accomplishing any result or object by the use of threats, intimidation, violent or abusive language, picketing plaintiff's premises, picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to plaintiff's premises and going to the homes and boarding houses of plaintiff's employees for the purpose of intimidating or coercing them to leave plaintiff's employment and to picket railroad and street cars passing to and from and over plaintiff's premises, for the purpose of intercepting plaintiff's employees in going to and from plaintiff's premises, or for the purpose of intercepting or preventing persons going to plaintiff's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering plaintiff's employment, as in said bill is alleged.

And this defendant denies all unlawful combination, conspiracy and confederacy, without that any other matter or thing material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein and hereby well and sufficiently answered unto, confessed and avoided, traversed or denied, is true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant, and here denies each and every allegation in said bill contained not herein admitted to be true. All which matters and things this defendant is ready to verify, maintain and prove, as this Honorable Court may direct. And he humbly prays that the temporary injunction heretofore granted in this cause may be vacated and dissolved, and that he may be hence dismissed with his reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

The Separate Answer as Amended of the Defendant A. R. Watkins, Individually and as President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, to the Bill of Complaint of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, a Corporation Organized under and by virtue of the Laws of the State of West Virginia and a Citizen of the said State, filed in said Court.

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Northern District of West Virginia:

This defendant, now and at all times hereafter saving to himself all manner of benefit and advantage of exceptions which can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties and other imperfections in said bill contained, for answer thereunto, or so much and such parts thereof as this defendant is advised it is material or necessary for him to make answer unto, answering, says:

That he believes that it is true that the said Hitchman Coal & Coke Company is a corporation, organized under and by virtue of the laws of the state of West Virginia, having its principal office at Wheeling, in Ohio County, in said state; that it may be that it is the owner of about 5,000 acres of coal situated contiguous to its coal mine, which is located at Benwood, in said state; that it may be also true that its coal mine is equipped with the necessary plant for mining coal, and that it has shipping facilities on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that its various shipments by rail originate on that road and at its mine; that it may also be true that it has been for some time past and is now engaged in mining coal and shipping the same to the open markets of the United States; that it may be true that the product of its mine is large, amounting to about 1,400 tons per day, and that it has customers residing in all parts of the United States, and that a large portion of its trade is during the summer and fall months, when coal is carried to the northwest by steamers on the lakes while navigation is not 180 impeded by ice, while another portion of its trade has been for years and now is the supplying of coal for fuel for the engines of the said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, delivered by a coaling device to the engines at its tipple and likewise from large storage bins which have been erected and are in use by said plaintiff and said railroad company wherefrom to coal their engines, said storage bins being located at the end of a considerable steel structure, trestle or viaduct, located near the round house of said railroad company near Benwood, in the construction of which steel trestle and coal bins the plaintiff has expended and now has invested a large sum of money; that it may also be true that in mining coal the coal as mined is brought to the surface and mouth of the mine, and then for interstate commerce is delivered to the common carrier and by it delivered to its destination within the United States and without the state of West Virginia; that it may also be true the plaintiff has made large contracts for future delivery of coal to points within and without the state of West Virginia and within the United States, especially for "lake trade"; that it may be also true the plaintiff only furnishes daily to said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company between five and six hundred tons of engine coal; that it may also be true the profits and earnings of the plaintiff depend largely upon its mining and producing coal during the summer and fall months of the year, and especially may this be true of this year as to its said contracts not yet fulfilled and which it has the ability, and, unless unlawfully interfered with by the defendants it expects to fill; but this respondent says as to whether or not all these matters so alleged in said bill are true he is not informed, and so can neither deny nor admit the same, but calls for strict proof thereof.

And this defendant, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that prior to April 1, 1906, the plaintiff operated its said mine by employing a large number of men who were affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America, and that on April 1, 1906, a strike having been ordered by said association, the employees of plaintiff who were working for it at that time continued to work for it until April 16, 1906, and on that day they ceased to work for the plaintiff by reason of said strike; but this respondent denies that the strike so ordered and declared is still in force so far as plaintiff and its said mine are concerned. This respondent avers that the said employees of plaintiff who ceased to work because of said strike did so in order that said organization might be enabled to restore to the members of the United Mine Workers the scale of prices of 1903, which was a higher and better price than that paid in 1905 and up to April 16, 1906; and that because the said
181 plaintiff did not at once agree to accede to the scale of prices adopted by said Mine Workers' organization it became necessary for said employees to remain out of work in order to promote the adoption of the scale of prices which had been proposed by the organization prior to April 1, 1906, and had said employees of plaintiff then working for it acceded to the demands of said plaintiff it would have been impossible to carry out the policy of said United Mine Workers of America with reference to the adoption and promotion of a just and uniform scale of prices for the work of their *nu*mbers. It may be true that said employees of plaintiff belonging to said organization were ready and willing to accept said plaintiff's proposition as contained in said bill, so far as their personal inclinations were concerned, but as members of the United Mine Workers of America they fully knew that to promote the policy of their organization, which is to ameliorate their condition as mine workers by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, they could not consistently accede to the terms of employment or continuation of employment then proposed to them by plaintiff; and for this reason said employees belonging to said organization did on April 16, 1906, go out on a strike under the continued orders of the United Mine Workers of America, but this respondent denies such going out on a strike was without justification and without excuse. And this respondent avers that the employees engaged by the plaintiff under contract with the United Mine Workers of America on the first day of April, 1906, and who went out on a strike under orders issued by the United Mine Workers would have remained in the employ of the plaintiff and not have quit the employ of plaintiff, had plaintiff been willing to sign the scale which the United Mine Workers had proposed, and which scale was, after April 1, 1906, signed by many of the operators in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania and parts of West Virginia; and so by reason of the failure and refusal of the plaintiff to sign the scale submitted to it, the employees of plaintiff who were then members of the United Mine Workers declined to continue to work for said plaintiff; and the reason that the employees of plaintiff declined to continue to work for plaintiff was that said employees desired a definite and fixed scale, which carries with it a definite and fixed term of employment, and this the plaintiff declined to sign, but merely promised to pay whatever advance in price might be paid by other operators in case such other operators agreed to sign the scale and did sign the scale; and therefore to secure the signing of this scale carrying with it a definite term of employment for the period of two years at 182 a fixed and definite price, it became necessary for the employees of plaintiff to go upon a strike in 1906.

This respondent, further answering, says it may be true that said mine of plaintiff was shut down and not operated after April 16, 1906, until June 12, 1906, as alleged in said bill. It may be true, and is, as respondent believes, that plaintiff on June 12th did start to run its mine on a non-union basis, and that each and every man who accepted employment at said mine was told at the time of entering plaintiff's employment that there was no union at the mine, that the company would not allow any, that no union man could remain in the employ of the company while recognizing and giving paramount allegiance to the union and its orders, and that if any employees of the company joined the union they could not work any longer for plaintiff. It may be also true that thereupon, with knowledge of said condition of employment, many men applied to plaintiff for work, and entered its employment under an express contract not to join the United Mine Workers of America and to work in its mine, and have so continued to work until the present time to the satisfaction of themselves and the plaintiff. But this respondent denies any knowledge on his part that the employees of plaintiff were and are required by it at the time of entering its service to agree not to become connected with the union while so employed; and this respondent denies any knowledge on his part that if said employees join the union their employment with plaintiff shall cease; and this respondent denies any knowledge on his part that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered into its employment; and respondent denies any knowledge that such employees are now working for plaintiff under such contract and with such condition. But this respondent denies that because of these conditions, if they do exist, the defendants have not any lawful right to converse with plaintiff's employees as to the advisability or propriety of becoming members of said union, and to use argument and persuasion to induce them of their own will and accord to become members of said union.

It is also true, as respondent is advised, that from time to time since the plaintiff has been operating at said mine on a non-union basis, efforts have been made by the officers and agents representing the United Mine Workers of America, and its subordinate associations and branches, to induce plaintiff to agree to employ union men at its said mine and to sign the scale of the United Mine Workers of America, and that plaintiff has repeatedly refused to have anything to do with the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate associations or branches, or with any of its 183 officers, agents, employees or servants, and has made known to them and each of them its determination to run its mine with non-union men and of its purpose not to permit any interference by said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, its officers, agents, employees or servants, with its operation of its mine or with its business.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, denies that said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, by its officers, agents, employees or servants, have sought or are now seeking, by any means whatsoever except argument, persuasion and other peaceable and legal methods, to cause the employees of the plaintiff to become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and denies that they have at any time endeavored by any means to cause plaintiff's employees to leave its service, or to cause others who have engaged to enter plaintiff's service to break their engagements of service and not work for plaintiff, or to prevent others from working for plaintiff, with the professed, avowed and actual purpose of compelling plaintiff to recognize the union and to employ only persons who are members thereof, and to compel plaintiff to pay such scale of wages as said union may arbitrarily fix and demand, and denies that said United Mine Workers, or its representatives or agents, have endeavored to cause the plaintiff to submit its business or property to the jurisdiction or control of the union, as in said bill is alleged.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he admits that the United Mine Workers of America, including its said subordinate associations and branches, is a voluntary organization having certain expressed objects, as alleged in said bill, but denies that any of said objects are unlawful or that said organization is a secret one, but avers that all its objects are lawful, and denies that said organization or any of its members or officers, including this respondent and the other defendants to this bill, is making any endeavor to carry out any unlawful purpose, as alleged in said bill, but, on the contrary, the only objects of said United Mine Workers, including all its subordinate associations and branches, together with all members thereof, are to unite employees that produce or handle coal or coke in and around coal mines and to ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, and to thus advance the welfare of the members of this organization, to better enable them to carry on their vocations in life, to promote their endeavors in a lawful and peaceable manner to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their fam-184 ilies, to better promote their pursuit of happiness and to secure to themselves more advantageous contracts with their employers.

Your respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that so much of the constitution of the United Mine Workers as is set forth in said bill is correct, but that some parts thereof are omitted.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that the defendants to this bill, to-wit, John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, Lee Rankin and Thomas

Hughes, each and all or any of them, as alleged in said bill, have agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, to unlawfully persuade, entice and procure plaintiff's miners or mine workers, employed by plaintiff and working for plaintiff in and around plaintiff's mine, to break, violate and disregard their several contracts with plaintiff, all with the avowed purpose of compelling plaintiff to unionize its plant without its consent, and denies that to such end they have unlawfully and maliciously agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy to compel, by threats and intimidation or by other unlawful means, said plaintiff's employees to join the union and apply to their own relation with plaintiff in the matter of their employment the rules of the union, to enable said union to apply its rules and regulations to plaintiff under penalty of closing down plaintiff's mine, provided plaintiff still refuses to unionize its plant and recognize the union, as alleged in said bill. But this respondent does aver that some of the representatives of the United Mine Workers have seen and conversed peaceably and quietly and without molestation, hindrance or threat with some of the employees of plaintiff, and have in a peaceable and friendly manner invited said employees so conversed with to join said organization, and have used moderate argument and persuasion at the homes of some of the employees to induce them to become members of the United Mine Workers, endeavoring to show such employees that it would be better for them and their families, in the prosecution of their vocation as miners, that they become members of said organization.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that said plaintiff has no contractual relations whatever with any of the defendants to said bill, and that each of said defendants is fully aware that plaintiff is operating a non-union mine and refuses to consent to operate a union mine, that its men are non-union men; and it may be true that said employees are re-185 quired by plaintiff at the time of entering its service to agree not to become members of the union while employed, and that if they do join the union their said employment shall cease, but of this respondent denies any knowledge on his part; and it may be true that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered its employment, and are now working with plaintiff under such contract and condition, as alleged in said bill, but of which defendant also has no knowledge; but be this as it may, respondent avers that any condition, stipulation, contract or agreement on the part of said plaintiff with its said employees as a condition upon which they shall enter into employment and continue their employment with plaintiff are contrary to public policy, are in restraint of that freedom of contract accorded to all citizens of the United States under and by virtue of its Constitution and the spirit and purpose of its institutions, and can not be made a condition upon which to base any valid and binding contract or obligation between employer and employee.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that the allegations therein contained charging the defendants to said bill with knowledge that said employees of plaintiff are satisfied with their employment, that plaintiff is engaged in mining coal and filling contracts for coal, that it would be impossible to fill these contracts without the labor of its employees, and that it would entail upon plaintiff great financial loss to be deprived of its ability to fulfill its said contracts by failure of its men to work longer for it, and would likewise entail great loss and damage to plaintiff to have its mine shut down and to have a strike declared, can not be considered as important and material for the purpose of said bill, because this respondent says that he denies that said defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out and are now about to finally accomplish, namely, to cause plaintiff's mine to be shut down and its plant to remain idle and its contracts to be broken and unfulfilled until such time as plaintiff shall submit to the demands of the union that it shall unionize its plant, and, having submitted to such demand and having unionized its plant by employing only union men, who shall become subject to the orders of the union, paramount to the orders of the plaintiff, their employer, it will thus surrender control and management of its business to the union and become subject to and acquiesce in the enforcement by the union of the various rules and regulations laid down by the union and accede in advance to every demand said union by its officers, agents, employees and servants may make. And respondent here 186 denies that by soliciting the said employees of plaintiff to join the union it necessarily follows that it is endeavoring to compel plaintiff to operate its mine by union labor, and avers that it is a non sequitur that by the peaceful methods employed by defendants to induce the employees of plaintiff to join the United Mine Workers the said plaintiff will thereby be compelled to conduct its business and carry on the operation of its plant by union men only and be subject to the control and dictation of the United Mine Workers of America; that the United Mine Workers of America do not attempt by force, intimidation, fraud or violence to coerce any employer of men in and about his coal mine to engage union men to do such work and to submit to the dictation and control of the United Mine Workers against his will and consent, but only seek to induce, if possible, by peaceable methods, an employer to employ union men, and thus promote in a reasonable and proper manner the said labor organization.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that the effecutating of any purpose on the part of said defendants or said union is imminent or that the damage threatened is great and irreparable, as alleged in said bill, and denies that plaintiff's loss by reason of any acts done by the defendants or any of them with reference to the men now in the employ of said plaintiff, has been in excess of $2,000 exclusive of interest and costs, or to any other sum, by reason of acts of said defendants or any of them, and denies that said defendants or any of them have made any effort to shut down plaintiff's mine, and therefore denies that plaintiff has suffered any damage by reason of any acts of the defendants or any of them, as alleged and attempted to be shown by argument and inference in said bill.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that the plaintiff pays as much as the union scale of wages to its said employees, but denies that said defendants or any of them are in any manner unlawfully and maliciously agreeing together, confederating, combining or conspiring to effectuate by unlawful means the unionizing of plaintiff's mine, but does say that, for the purpose of giving standing and effectiveness to said United Mine Workers of America with the employers of labor, they used peaceable means by arguments and reasoning with the employees of said plaintiff to become members of said union, but denies that they are endeavoring to create a monopoly to force employers and especially the plaintiff by unlawful means to engage union men, against their will and consent, but avers that they are endeavoring to increase the membership of said organization, to accom-
187 plish its purpose of making it desirable and profitable on the part of employers to engage union men to work in and about their mines, so as thereby to settle all differences between the employer and employee by the peaceful methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, as contemplated by the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he admits that the union is not a competitor with the plaintiff in the labor market, and that the union does not employ labor, as in said bill is alleged, but avers that its large membership has been the means of supplying men in and about the mining and shipping of coal to a large number of extensive operators engaged in the mining and shipping of coal in the States of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and that in these places where union men have been employed the relations between employer and employee have been agreeable, and the said union has been the means of bringing about a good state of feeling and a healthy condition with reference to the status of capital and labor between each other in said states.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that if it was openly stated with reference to the objects of said union at its annual convention, held at Indianapolis from January 15 to January 22, inclusive, 1907, as alleged in said bill, to-wit: "Organized labor contends that, as industry can not exist without labor, labor has the right to say under what conditions it shall be employed," it does not follow that it thereby intends to dictate the management and productive end of the business, and respondent denies that there was any such language used in said convention conveying the idea that said organization has for its object the dictating of the management of coal mines and the business relating thereto; but it should be heard and has the right to say; under peaceable methods and under the forms of law, what the conditions should be to insure health and safety in working in mines in the mining and production of coal.

And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, avers that the said United Mine Workers of America, by peaceable and law-abiding methods, have the right to canvass for membership and solicit men to become members of said United Mine Workers throughout the United States where coal mines exist and can be properly operated, provided the work of thus promoting membership and acquiring new members is conducted in a peaceable manner and by the use of reason and argument and without resorting to force, fraud, violence, intimidation or other wrong.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that that part of the same appearing on pages 26 and 27, purporting 188 to give the language of the defendants T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson and John Mitchell, in said convention, only related to the then condition of the United Mine Workers of America, and the discussion of the best policy to promote its objects, which objects are expressed in the constitution and have hereinbefore been stated, and said discussion did not involve the use of force, violence, intimidation or other wrongful means to bring about the promotion of the objects of said union, but was simply in furtherance of its purpose of resorting to strikes of a general nature, and did not contemplate any interference with the employees of the plaintiff, because they were not then union men, nor are they now union men and they are therefore idle allegations, and can only be regarded as surplusage for the purposes of said bill.

And this respondent avers that whatever was said in the deliberations of the United Mine Workers in their convention held at Indianapolis at the time mentioned in said bill was with reference to the policy of the organization in its negotiations with coal operators in all the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, or wherever its members are engaged in the work of mining coal; and what ever was said or done in said convention had no reference to the men employed by plaintiff in the year 1907; nod was the said matter of plaintiff's mine mentioned, nor was anything done or said in said convention having for its object any interference with the employees of plaintiff, either by argument, persuasion or otherwise; but all that was said and done in said convention had reference to the general policy and measures to be inaugurated by the union or to be maintained by the union for the promotion of its growth and development by peaceable means, such as argument and persuasion, and by no other means, to advance its interests as an organization in the territory of the states just mentioned. And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, avers that if said T. L. Lewis used the language imputed to him in said bill (but which is not admitted), to the effect or in substance that the American continent was not large enough to maintain two organizations of coal miners, and that he favored one organization of the coal miners of the American continent and the complete recognition of the union's right to organize in every mining district of the country, the said Lewis by the use of said language did not intend in any manner to refer to plaintiff's interests in mining or the plaintiff's men in its employ; but what said Lewis did mean was that, inasmuch as there were at that time two organizations of the laborers in coal mines, one in Canada and one in the United States, there ought to be but one organization for the 189 coal miners of the United States and Canada, so as to harmonize operations in the coal mines of these two territories one with another, and thus better promote the purposes of the organization of the United Mine Workers, instead of having two organizations, for this purpose, one in Canada and one in the United States, as then existing, nor was it the intention of said Lewis by the use of said language, if such was by him used, to include therein the Western Federation of Miners, which has for its object the unionizing of those engaged in mining gold, silver, copper and other metals, and not the mining of coal; so that the interests of the United Mine Workers of America and those of the Western Federation of Miners are not the same, and the union with them would be of little, if any, practical advantage to either organization.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, with reference to the allegations therein contained, appearing on pages 28, 29, 30 and 31, relating to the general action of the convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6, of the United Mine Workers of America, held in Wheeling, West Virginia, in March, 1907, denies that anything in that part of said bill, appearing on pages 28 to 31, inclusive, has any bearing upon the rights or interests of the plaintiff in this bill, and avers that such allegations are entirely foreign to its purpose, and constitute only surplusage, and are so immaterial that any answer thereto would only raise an issue the determination of which could not affect the rights of either party to this suit.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that as to the allegations contained in the bill filed on behalf of the Glendale Coal Company against said defendants to this bill, this defendant avers that so far as said allegations charge this respondent and said defendants with any intimidation, coercion, fraud, combination, threats, violence or wrongful acts of any kind, the same are hereby positively denied as if the same were denied specifically and consecutively as set forth and alleged in said bill of the Glendale Coal Company.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that plaintiff, in refusing to recognize the union after the declaration of said strike on April 1, 1906, and after its men had left plaintiff's employment pursuant to said strike, and thereafter running its mine non-union, did not seek to reduce the wages of its employees, or cause them to work for less than the scale of wages established by the United Mine Workers of America; and it may be true that plaintiff does not now seek or contemplate any reduction in the wages of its present employees; and respondent also says it may be true that plaintiff's sole purpose in run-
190 ning non-union, and in now insisting upon its right to do so, unhampered by and without interruption from said defendants, acting individually and as representatives of the United Mine Workers, is to escape from intolerable oppression and vicious intermeddling by said defendants; but if this is the purpose and object of said plaintiff, as alleged in said bill, this respondent denies said defendants or any of them has done anything to hamper or interrupt said plaintiff in the running of its mine, and denies that said defendants or any of them have sought to impose intolerable oppression upon said plaintiff, or have been guilty of any vicious intermeddling with the business or employees of the plaintiff, as in said bill is alleged.

This respondent for further answer unto said bill says that said defendants have, it is true, for some years last past been associated together as members of the United Mine Workers of America, and that they are well acquainted with each other, and that they constitute a part of the higher officers of the United Mine Workers of America, and they deny that the management of said union has been centralized in their hands, but that the whole of the United Mine Workers, in convention assembled, manage and control their own affairs, and that the said defendants are only officers entrusted with the executive business of said organization.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that after the plaintiff's mine was shut down, which occurred on April 16, 1906, efforts were frequently made by one or more of said defendants to induce the plaintiff to sign the scale and run its mine on a union basis, but that the request so made by the defendants was refused, and that subsequently requests were made of a like character, but this respondent denies that upon the failure of said plaintiff to employ union men at its mine as requested, as alleged in said bill, said defendants or any of them made efforts by threats, intimidation, or any other unlawful device or means, to induce plaintiff's employees to cease working for plaintiff, and denies that by like means, such as intimidation, threats or other unlawful methods, the said defendants or any of them endeavored to induce the employees of said plaintiff not to engage to work, and having engaged to work, not to go to work for plaintiff; and it is true that plaintiff was able to increase the number of its employees and increase its business, which it has been conducting successfully and lawfully from that time to the present, and so far as this respondent is advised said plaintiff is still conducting its business in a peaceful manner and free from any unlawful acts such as fraud, violence, intimidation and threats from said defendants or any of them towards said plaintiff and its employees.

191 And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that about July 1, 1907, the defendants William Green, John Zelenka and A. R. Watkins came to the office of the plaintiff's general manager and had a conversation with him regarding the forming of a miners' union, or rather the putting of plaintiff's employees under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America, and while plaintiff on that occasion through its general manager distinctly stated that the proposition of said defendants would not be considered, it is not true that said Zelenka subsequently reported to plaintiff's employees, and caused that report to be spread among them, that he, Zelenka, Green and Watkins, had a conference with plaintiff's general manager and that said general manager had arranged to allow the United Mine Workers to put all the plaintiff's employees into the union; and denies that they or either of them made the further statement which he caused to be circulated among the plaintiff's employees that it was up to the employees of the plaintiff to join the union or else they would be cut out of a job at an early day, because only union men would be permitted to work at the mine, and that plaintiff's employees who did not join the union would not be permitted to get a job any place, as alleged in said bill. And it is true that said general manager did complain of the alleged action, and, inasmuch as it had not occurred, said Zelenka, Green and Watkins positively denied making any such statement or circulating any such report. And respondent denies that plaintiff's statement in this respect as alleged in said bill is true, and denies that in the action referred to, complained of to said defendants, said defendants were simply carrying out their unlawful purpose, and denies that they had any unlawful purpose, as alleged in said bill, to unionize plaintiff's mine without its consent, and denies that there could be involved, even in unionizing said mine, the doing of any unlawful act, and for any unlawful purpose or purposes as stated in said bill.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it may be true that plaintiff's employees are not union men, and that they entered into employment with plaintiff with the agreement that the plaintiff should continue to run a non-union mine; and it may be true that some of the plaintiff's employees, employed under such conditions and with such understanding, have bought property and homes, and expect to have permanent employment with the plaintiff, so running its mine non-union; and with the understanding and expectation on their part that they shall be protected in such employment; but, be this as it may, this respondent avers that he was not aware that plaintiff's employees entered 192 into its employment with the agreement that plaintiff should continue to run a non-union mine. And this respondent here positively avers, that said defendants or any of them have done nothing to force or compel by physical violence or other wrongful means the employees of plaintiff or any of them to quit its employment, but have only presented to them in a peaceable and reasonable manner the opportunity and advantage which will accrue to them by becoming members of the union, and thus joining the already large body of men working in and about coal mines in promoting the objects of the United Mine Workers, which are to unite mine employees that produce coal or coke in and around mines, and thus ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes, because this respondent denies that in the absence of the proper organization of large bodies of men that are generally employed in and about coal mines of the states of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, over which territory the methods of the United Mine Workers are largely applied, peace and order can far better be maintained when disagreements arise between employer and employee, as they have often done heretofore and will continue to do, and avers that it is far better for the operator as well as the laborer that the employees be thus under the control of the union than not to belong to any organization, as these differences, difficulties and strikes incident to such employment can be much better adjusted by reason of said organization; and it is to promote the peace and welfare of the operator and miner that the Mine Workers organization originated and is being maintained.

And this respondent for further answer unto said bill says that it is true that some time during the middle of the summer of 1907 the defendants Green, Watkins and Zelenka called on plaintiff's general manager at his office and that said Green then stated that he would like to talk organization. Plaintiff's general manager stated to said parties then that while unionizing the mine was out of the question, yet if they had any business proposition to submit it would be listened to, whereupon said Green urged that under plaintiff's present arrangement or contract with its employees the men felt at liberty to do as they pleased, and did not feel any restraint, while if plaintiff would make a contract with him as President of the United Mine Workers of America, District 6, he could hold the men in check, and see that all agreements incorporated in the scale were fulfilled and carried out to the letter, and generally he would see that the men lived up to their contract. And it is true that to this plaintiff's general manager replied that from personal experience in the past in dealing with the union he 193 had found the facts in reality to be just the opposite from the way Green put it, and that if that was all Green had to offer there was nothing worth considering, whereupon Green then requested plaintiff's general manager to think the matter over, and said he would see him again about it in a couple of weeks; and that several weeks afterward said Green, Watkins and Zelenka saw the plaintiff's general manager while the latter was at the McLure House in Wheeling, and the latter told Green that he could see nothing in the proposition that interested him in any manner; but respondent denies that said Green then asked said general manager if he would not submit the proposition to plaintiff's board of directors, but avers that said general manager, himself stated to said Green that he, said general manager, would submit the proposition to plaintiff's board of directors, and respondent believes that said general manager did submit said proposition to said board and said board refused to accept it; and thereafter said Green telephoned plaintiff's general manager and asked if he had submitted the proposition to plaintiff's directors, and was told that the proposition had been submitted and that the directors refused to consider the matter in any manner whatever.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that said defendants are proceeding to carry out any conspiracy, and denies that they are now endeavoring to unionize plaintiff's mine, and denies that said defendants or any of them threaten to close down plaintiff's mine and keep it closed until plaintiff will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor. This respondent does aver that certain representatives of the United Mine Workers of America have visited some of the employees of the plaintiff, and tried by reason and argument to persuade them to join the union, as of right they might do.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that it is true that on or about September 7, 1907, said defendant Thomas Hughes was about the Glendale mine and the Hitchman mine, seeing the miners but not intercepting them, taking lists of the names of the employees and trying to induce the men by persuasion, but not by threats, coercion and intimidation, or by other unlawful methods and devices, to join the union, and denies that any unlawful efforts are being kept up for the purpose of inducing the employees or any of them, by threats, coercion and intimidation, or any other unlawful methods and devices, to quit working at the plaintiff's mine.

And respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he believes it is true that said Hughes did induce about 24 em-
194 ployees of the Glendale Coal Company to agree to join the union, but denies that said Hughes induced said employees to quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company; and this respondent avers that, after said men joined the union at the peaceable instance and request of said Hughes, they reported the next morning thereafter for service and work in the mine of the Glendale Coal Company, whereupon the agent and representative of the Glendale Coal Company having authority to employ and discharge its men, learning or having learned that said men had joined the union, stated to such men that their services were not needed longer, and thereupon said men were required to quit the servic of the Glendale Coal Company, not upon their own accord but because the Glendale Coal Company declined to retain them longer in its employ because of the fact that they had joined the union. And this respondent avers that said Hughes, in inducing said men to join the union, did not use or employ any threats, force, violence, intimidation, or other unlawful means, to induce them to become members of said union. And respondent says it is true said defendants have been unable to bring about or induce plaintiff's employees to quit its service, and for the very substantial and sufficient reason, as this respondent avers, that they have not, nor has any of them, made any effort to bring about or induce plaintiff's employees or any of them to quit its service, and denies that said Hughes has recently stated to one of plaintiff's miners, whom it is alleged but by respondent denied he was trying to induce to leave plaintiff's service and join the union, that he, Hughes, had succeeded in having 125 men at the Hitchman mine sign their names agreeing to become members of the union, and that just as soon as he could get 25 more names he was going to shut down the Hitchman mine, because said Hughes, had he obtained said signatures, had no power or authority to shut down the mine of plaintiff, nor was it his intention to do so, but only to have said miners join the union.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he denies that the said United Mine Workers, said International Union United Mine Workers of America, said District No. 6 United Mine Workers of America, and said Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America are, under their constitutions, violating the common and statute law of the state of West Virginia as well as the Constitution of said state, and especially, as alleged in said bill, in this, to-wit: in the provisions of §§1, 3 and 4 of Art. X., Constitution of International Union United Mine Workers of America; in the provisions of §§1 and 2 of Art. VIII, §15 of Art. IX., Constitution of District 6 United Mine Workers of America; and in 195 the provisions of §§2 and 3 of Art. I., §1 of Art. IV., §6 of Art. VI., and §§2 and 3 of Art. IX., Constitution of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America; as well as in said oath that is administered to each member of the United Mine Workers of America on his initiation.

This respondent, for further answer to said bill, says that he denies that said defendants are combining and forming themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America for any unlawful purpose or design, by enticement, persuasion or coercion in any form to bring about the shutting down of plaintiff's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business, and denies that said defendants will, without the consent and against the will of the plaintiff, compel the plaintiff to recognize said defendants and said associations, in the further transaction or any transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal, and denies that said defendants will compel plaintiff with its employees through the said defendants as officers of said association, under such rules and regulations as will enable the defendants to dictate the persons whom the plaintiff shall employ and discharge, and the wages it shall pay, and compel plaintiff to agree that each and every employee, as a member of said United Mine Workers of America, shall owe and yield to said union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employee would owe to plaintiff; and denies that they will in any manner take charge of and dictate the management of, and in any manner control, plaintiff's business, and perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon plaintiff, and distinctly violate plaintiff's contractual, common-law, statutory and constitutional rights as a citizen of the state of West Virginia, as in said bill is alleged.

And this respondent for further answer unto said bill says that he denies that the said defendants propose and threaten to indulge in any methods of accomplishing any result or object by the use of threats, intimidation, violent or abusive language, picketing plaintiff's premises, picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to plaintiff's premises and going to the homes and boarding houses of plaintiff's employees for the purpose of intimidating or coercing them to leave plaintiff's employment and to picket railroad and street cars passing to and from and over plaintiff's premises, for the purpose of intercepting plaintiff's employees in going to and from plaintiff's premises, or for the purpose of intercepting or preventing persons going to plaintiff's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering plaintiff's employment, as in said bill is alleged.

196 And this defendant denies all unlawful combination, conspiracy and confederacy, without that any other matter or thing material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein and hereby well and sufficiently answered unto, confessed and avoided, traversed or denied, is true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant, and here denies each and every allegation in said bill contained not herein admitted to be true. All which matters and things this defendant is ready to verify, maintain and prove, as this Honorable Court may direct. And he humbly prays that the temporary injunction heretofore granted in this cause may be vacated and dissolved, and that he may be hence dismissed with his reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
County of Monongalia, To-wit:

Before the undersigned, a notary public in and for the County of Monongalia, and State of West Virginia, this day personally came A. R. Watkins, who, after being by me duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

That at the May term of the said Circuit Court of the United States in and for the district aforesaid, he filed his separate answer in the above entitled cause, first being by him duly verified before a notary public within and for the said county of Monongalia and State of West Virginia.

This affiant further says that the day preceding the verification of said separate answer by him filed as aforesaid, he came to Morgantown, in said County of Monongalia, and state of West Virginia, to meet Charles E. Hogg, one of the counsel for the defendants in the above styled cause; that he first met Charles E. Hogg about five o'clock on the evening of that day at the residence of said Hogg, and upon meeting the said Hogg this affiant ascertained that he had already prepared this affiant's answer in said cause, which answer the said Hogg read over to this affiant; that affiant discussed very hurriedly the facts connected with said case, and directed certain changes to be made in the said answer; that thereupon Uriah Barnes, the stenographer engaged by said Hogg, was handed said answer to copy and to be made off in accordance with the consultation had with said Hogg, that, after spending about two hours in consulting about said case and hearing said answer read, said answer was then given, as affiant observed, to said Barnes for the purpose of copying and correcting and preparing it for the affidavit of affiant; that thereupon affiant left the residence of said Hogg and went to the hotel; that the next morning said Hogg came to the hotel, in company with his stenographer, and stated to affiant that the answer was ready, which was just a few minutes before train time; that affiant desired to take the train for his home, and not having time to read it, and believing from the statements of his counsel that the answer was in all respects accurate and sufficient, this affiant made oath to the same, and 199 immediately started on a fast run to the train, which had just pulled into the depot, and affiant had barely time to reach the depot and get his train; that said answer was therefore prepared very hurriedly, and without that consideration and care required.

Affiant further says that, at the instance of said Hogg, he returned to Morgantown in the early part of July, 1908, in company with William Green and Geo. W. Savage, and spent an entire day in going over the said suit and conferring with reference to the bill in said suit, as well as the bill in the Glendale Coal Company case pending in said court, and also read carefully a copy of the answer which this affiant had already filed in the said Hitchman Coal & Coke Company case, and found that in the hurry of the preparation of said answer there were certain errors therein contained, which affiant has corrected in the amended answer which affiant has prepared to be filed in this cause.

Affiant further says that the amendments made to his said answer appear on pages 4, 7, 10, 13, 14 and 15 of the original answer filed by this affiant in May 1908, in this cause; that the material amendments to his original answer on page 4 are inserted at the end of the eighth line from the tope of said page, and are filed herewith, marked for identification "Amendment A"; that the other amendment appearing on said fourth page is inserted at the end of the twenty-second line from the top thereof, and is filed herewith, marked for identification "Amendment B"; that the amendment on page seven is inserted in the second line from the top, after the word "bill," and consists of the following clause—"but of which defendant also had no -nowledge"; that the amendment appearing on page ten is inserted after the first paragraph thereon, immediately after the end of the twelfth line on said tenth page, and is filed herewith, marked for identification "Amendment C", which amendment begins on page ten, as stated above, and continues to the beginning of the next paragraph, on the tenth page of said original answer in the thirteenth line thereof; that the amendment on page thirteen is inserted immediately after the word "employment" in the eighth line from the top of said original answer, and is herewith filed, marked for identification "Amendment D"; that the amendment contained on page fourteen of said original answer begins immediately after the word "manner" in the thirteenth line from the top, and is substituted in lieu of the residue of that paragraph, being in lieu of the allegation beginning with the word "that" in the thirteenth line from the top and ending with the word "whatever" in the twenty-first line from the top, 200 and is filed herewith, marked for identification "Amendment E"; that the first amendment on page fifteen of said original answer begins immediately after the close of the first paragraph on said page, after the word "mine" in the second line from the top thereof, and is substituted in lieu of the beginning of the second paragraph commencing with the word "and" in the third line from the top of said page and ending with the word "bill" in the tenth line from the top thereof, which amendment is filed herewith marked for identification "Amendment F"; that the other amendment on page fifteen of said original answer begins after the word "service" in the eleventh line from the top of said page fifteen, and is filed herewith, marked for identification "Amendment G."

This affiant further says that said amendment A simply sets forth the reasons why the employees of plaintiff entered upon a strike in 1906, and such amendment is made in said amended answer because this affiant, upon consultation with his said attorney in July, 1908, was advised that it should go in to show that said strike in 1906 was not made arbitrarily but for the purpose simply of advancing the interests of the organization of the United Mine Workers of America, and not to wantonly injure or wrong said plaintiff; and this matter did not occur to affiant when he had his conference with his counsel for the short time heretofore mentioned in May 1908.

This affiant further says that said amendment B negatives knowledge on the part of this defendant as to the conditions of the contract of employment between the plaintiff and its employees; that if said original answer can be construed to impute to affiant knowledge of the conditions of this contract, it was not so intended, as affiant did not know said conditions, if embodied in such contract, at the time said original answer was prepared, nor does he have such knowledge now, but he has been informed of such fact, if it exists, only through the allegations of the bill filed in this cause; that said answer as drafted by said Hogg and read over to him was by the said Hogg read very hurriedly, and this affiant did not intend to make oath, to any answer that he should file in said cause, that he had knowlendge that the employees of plaintiff or any of them were required at the time of entering into its employment to agree not to become connected with the union while so employed; in fact this affiant had no personal knowledge whatever of any conditions of the contract of employment or its terms, and therefore could not make oath to any such fact.

This affiant further says that amendment C is inserted in said amended answer in order to present to the court the true interpretation of what was said and done by the United Mine Workers 201 of America in their deliberations in their convention held at Indianapolis, as alleged in the plaintiff's bill, and to exhibit to the court the object and purposes of the statements attributed to certain officers of said organization in their speeches and discussions, and to further show to the court that these speeches and discussions contemplated no wrong or injury to any operator, and especially no wrong and injury to the plaintiff, and does not contain anything inconsistent with his said original answer.

This affiant further says that amendment D is inserted in his amended answer for the purpose of making it consistent with the other portions of said amended answer negativing knowledge as to the terms and conditions of the agreement contained in the contract of employment between plaintiff and its employees, and negatives knowledge on the part of this affiant as to the terms and conditions of said contract.

Affiant further says that he misunderstood that part of the allegation of the draft of affiant's original answer as made by said Hogg when the same was read over to him at the time and under the circumstances hereinbefore stated, and said amendment E is inserted to show the true facts—in relation to that part of the bill to which the original answer in which said amendment E is inserted relates. And affiant says that on having his attention directed to that part of his original answer on page 14 he observed the error and called the attention of his counsel to it. Therefore, in order to state the facts as they truly are and as affiant knows them to be, he makes said correction by the insertion of said amendment.

This affiant further says that amendment F is inserted because the original answer of affiant, as more carefully examined and considered by him in July, 1908, does not truly set forth affiant's knowledge of the facts as to the reason why the 24 employees of the Glendale Coal Company ceased to work for said company, in that the said original answer states the information, belief and averment of this affiant that said men upon their own accord quit the service of said company, and therefore the amendment was necessary in order to show that, while they in effect did leave the employment of said company, it was not because said Hughes had induced them to join the union but because the Glendale Coal Company did not longer want them; and this fact was not set out in said original answer, as affiant did not pay sufficient attention to the said original answer while it was being so hurriedly read to him as to this particular matter. Affiant says that the only knowledge on this subject he has is not of a personal character, but it is what some of the 24 men told him after they had gone out of the service of the Glendale Coal 202 Company; and affiant says that he believes that said men told him the truth in regard to the matter, and was advised by said counsel in July, 1908, that said amendment ought to be made. Therefore this affiant by reason of the allegation inserted in said original answer by inadvertence, says that this amendment ought to be inserted in the interest of justice, and has been inserted for that reason.

Affiant further says that amendment G contains the reason for the denial of the allegation to which that part of the original answer relates, and there is also inserted in connection with said amendment, to make it consistent and intelligible, after the word "whom" in the twelfth line from the top of page fifteen of the original answer, the following: "It is alleged but by respondent denied." This affiant says that said amendment G can only serve the purpose of making the said amend*m*ed answer consistent in all its parts, which will appear to the court from an examination of said amendments.

This affiant further says that he makes this affidavit to accompany his application for the filing of his amended answer in said cause, and asks that it be read in connection with his said amended answer in an support thereof, and in the light of the original answer and the circumstances under which said original answer was prepared and verified, as hereinbefore stated. Affiant says that he is informed and so avers that at this time the plaintiff has not replied to said original answer, nor has the cause been set down for hearing upon the bill and his said original answer filed thereto. Affiant further says that he is advised and so states in this affidavit that the plaintiff has taken no testimony in support of its said bill, so far as the material allegations thereof have been denied by the said original answer, and that therefore, as affiant is advised, the amendments made to his said original answer cannot operate to prejudice the substantial rights of the plaintiff, if any it has.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 13th day of August, 1908.

VAN A. BARRICKMAN,

[SEAL.] Notary Public in and for Monongalia County, W. Va.

Amendment A.

But this respondent avers that the employees engaged by the plaintiff under contract with the United Mine Workers of America on the first day of April, 1906, and who went out on a strike 203 under orders issued by the United Mine Workers of America, would have remained in the employ of the plaintiff and would not have quit the employ of the plaintiff, had the plaintiff been willing to sign the scale which the United Mine Workers of America had proposed, and which scale was, after April 1, 1906, signed by many of the operators in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and parts of West Virginia; and so by reason of the failure and refusal of the plaintiff to sign the scale submitted to it, the employees of said plaintiff who were then members of the United Mine Workers declined to continue to work for said plaintiff; and the reason that the employees of the plaintiff declined to continue to work for plaintiff was that the said employees desired a definite and fixed scale, which carried with it a definite and fixed term of employment, and this the plaintiff declined to sign, but merely promised to pay whatever advance in price might be paid by other operators in case such other operators agreed to sign the scale and did sign the scale; and therefore, to secure the signing of this scale carrying with it a definite term of employment for the period of two years at a fixed and definite price, it became necessary for the employees of said plaintiff to go upon a strike in 1906.

Amendment B.

But this respondent denies any knowledge on his part that the employees of plaintiff were and are required by plaintiff at the time of entering its service to agree not to become connected with the union while employed by plaintiff; and this respondent denies any knowledge on his part that if the employees of plaintiff do join the union their employment with the plaintiff shall cease; and this respondent denies any knowledge on his part that with such understanding plaintiff's employees entered into its employment; and respondent denies any knowledge that such employees are now working for plaintiff under such contract and with such condition. But this respondent denies that because of these conditions, if they do exist, the defendants have not any lawful right to converse with plaintiff's employees as to the advisability or propriety of becoming members of said union, and to use argument and persuasion to induce them of their own will and accord to become members of said union.

Amendment C.

And this respondent avers that whatever was said in the deliberations of the United Mine Workers in their convention 204 held at Indianapolis at the time mentioned in said bill was with reference to the policy of the organization in its negotiations with coal operators in all the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia, or wherever its members are engaged in the work of mining coal; and whatever was said or done in said convention had no reference to the men employed by the plaintiff in the year 1907; nor was said matter of plaintiff's mine mentioned, nor was anything done or said in said convention having for its object any interference with the employees of plaintiff either by argument, persuasion or otherwise; but all that was said and done in said convention had reference to the general policy and measures to be inaugurated by the union or to be maintained by it in the promotion of its growth and development by peaceable means, such as argument and persuasion, and by no other means, to advance its interests as an organization in the territory of the states just mentioned. And this respondent, for further answer unto said bill, avers that if said T. L. Lewis used the language imputed to him in said bill (but which is not admitted) to the effect or in substance that the American continent was not large enough to maintain two organizations of coal miners and that he favored one organization of the coal miners of the American continent and the complete recognition of the union's right to organize in every mining district of the country, said Lewis by the use of said language did not intend in any manner to refer to plaintiff's interest in mining or to the plaintiff's men in its employ; but what said Lewis did mean was that, inasmuch as there were at that time two organizations of the laborers in coal mines, one in Canada and one in the United States, there ought to be but one organization for the coal miners of the United States and Canada, so as to harmonize operations in the coal mines of these two territories one with another, and better promote the purposes of the organization of the United Mine Workers, instead of having two organizations for this purpose, one in Canada and one in the United States, as then existing; nor was it the intention of said Lewis by the use of said language, if such language was by him used, to include therein the Western Federation of Miners, which has for its object the unionizing of those engaged in mining gold, silver, copper and other metals and not the mining of coal; so that the interests of the United Mine Workers of America and those of the Western Federation of Miners are not the same, and union with them would be of little, if any, practical advantage to either organization.

This respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says it may be true that plaintiff's employees are not union men, and it may be true that the plaintiff's employees entered into its employment with the agreement that plaintiff should continue to run a non-union mine; but, be this as it may, this respondent avers that he is not aware that plaintiff's employees entered into its employment with the agreement that plaintiff should continue to run a non-union mine.

Amendment E.

But respondent denies that said Green then asked said general manager if he would not submit the proposition to plaintiff's board of directors, but avers that the said general manager himself stated to said Green that he, said general manager, would submit the proposition to plaintiff's board of directors, and respondent believes that said general manager did submit said proposition to said board and that said board refused to accept the same; and thereafter said defendant Green telephoned plaintiff's general manager and asked if he had submitted the proposition to plaintiff's directors, and was told that the proposition had been submitted and that the directors refused to consider the matter in any manner whatever.

Amendment F.

And respondent, for further answer unto said bill, says that he believes that it is true that said Hughes did induce about 24 employees of the Glendale Coal Company to agree to join the union, but denies that said Hughes induced said employees to quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company; and this respondent avers that, after the said men joined the union at the peaceable instance and request of said Hughes, they reported the next morning thereafter for service and work in the mine of the Glendale Coal Company, whereupon the agent and representative of the Glendale Coal Company having authority to employ and discharge its men, learning or having learned that said men had joined the union, stated to such men that their services were not needed longer, and thereupon said men were required to quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company, not upon their own accord but because said company declined to retain them longer in its employ because of the fact that they had joined the union. And this respondent avers that said Hughes, in inducing said men to join the union, did not use or employ 206 any threats, force, violence, intimidation, or other unlawful means, to induce them to become members of said union.

Amendment G.

And for the very substantial and sufficient reason, as this respondent avers, that they have not, nor has any of them, made any effort to bring about or induce plaintiff's employees or any of them to quit its service, and

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
County of Monongalia, To wit:

Before the undersigned authority, a notary public within and for the county and state aforesaid, this day personally came Chas. E. Hogg, who, after being by me duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is one of the counsel for the defendants in the above entitled cause; that the other counsel for the defendants is Adam B. Littlepage, who resides in Charleston, in the County of Kanawha and State of West Virginia; that the affiant resides in Morgantown, in the said county of Monongalia; that affiant met for the first time the defendant A. R. Watkins on the evening of the 22nd of May, 1908, at affiant's residence in Morgantown aforesaid; that prior to that time this affiant had no opportunity to confer personally or otherwise with the said A. R. Watkins in order to prepare his answer in this cause, and that the only information he obtained was from his associate counsel, Adam B. Littlepage; that from the information thus obtained affiant some time prior to said 22nd day of May, 1908, prepared the answer for said Watkins as well as he could; that upon the arrival of said Watkins in Morgantown aforesaid on the 22nd day of May, 1908, this affiant, as counsel for the said Watkins, conferred with him very hurriedly; that affiant read over the answer he had already prepared to the said Watkins, and the said Watkins directed certain changes to be made therein, and that affiant 208 hurriedly made said changes, the whole consultation during the said evening not occupying more than two hours, if that length of time.

Affiant says that when the said answer had been read over to the said Watkins, and corrected as affiant has stated, it was handed to Mr. Uriah Barnes to be copied so as to be signed and verified by the said Watkins; that affiant obtained from said Barnes said answer on the morning of the 23rd of May, 1908, after it had been so copied, and the said Watkins then signed the same and made oath thereto, without reading said answer or having it read to him after being so copied, there not being sufficieot time to read over said answer and enable said Watkins to reach his train to return to his home, and said answer as so hurriedly prepared was filed in May, 1908, in the said suit.

Affiant further says that in the month of July, 1908, he again met the said Watkins, in company with William Green and George W. Savage, in Morgantown, aforesaid, and then had a full consultation with said Watkins, and was fully advised with reference to the facts constituting the defense of the said Watkins and the other defendants in said suit, whereupon this affiant discovered that he had not embodied all of the facts in connection with said case relating to the defense of said defendants in the original answer filed, and that said answer would have to be amended; that, in the light of the information thus obtained by this affiant at the conference held by him with said Watkins, Green and Savage in July aforesaid, he prepared the answers which he has filed for the other defendants, and was enabled by such conference to put in a full, true and perfect answer for the said defendants who have answered the said bill other than said Watkins; that affiant at that time informed said Watkins that it would be necessary for him to amend his answer filed in said case, and affiant arranged to have the said Watkins meet this affiant in Morgantown, West Virginia, on the 13th day of August, 1908, in order to prepare an amended answer for him, said Watkins; that his amended answer was accordingly prepared by this affiant, who also prepared for said Watkins the affidavit accompanying the said amended answer, which affidavit was sworn to by said Watkins on the evening of the 13th of August, 1908.

Affiant further says that the said Watkins was not called upon to go into full detail as to his defense when affiant met him in May, 1908, and that he did not have such opportunity to go into full conference until July, 1908, as already stated; that the failure to make in the original answer of said Watkins the allegations made in his said amended answer is not due to any fault or neglect 209 of the said Watkins, but is attributable more to this affiant, as affiant was in a great hurry to get through with the said Watkins at affiant's first conference with him, and that affiant prepared the said amended answer so as to give the said plaintiff ample time to meet the allegations therein by proof if necessary, and that the amendments to said answer can not occasion the said plaintiff any delay or inequitable hardship.

Affiant further says that he is informed and believes, and so states, that the original answer of said Watkins has not yet been replied to by the said plaintiff, nor has the cause been submitted for hearing on the said original answer, but that the whole matter is still open, nothing having been done except to file the said original answer.

Affiant further says that the said Adam B. Littlepage took no part in the preparation of said answer, as the matter of preparing it was deferred by him to this affiant, and that this affiant had no opportunity of consulting with the said Littlepage after meeting him in Parkersburg, West Virginia, in January, 1908, and that the merits of the case were hurriedly discussed with the said Littlepage on the occasion of affiant's conference with him at Parkersburg.

Hogg, one of the counsel for the defendants in the above entitled cause, to receive instructions with reference to the preparation of an answer for A. R. Watkins to be filed in said suit; that he was not at the residence of said Hogg very long on said evening; that he was handed what purported to be a draft of an answer with certain interlineations therein made, and that the answer was quite long; that during the night he copied the same, and on the next morning handed it to said Hogg as copied; that he knows that same was not read over to the said Watkins but that said Watkins signed and swore to the same without reading it, the said Hogg stating that it was substantially if not exactly as understood by him the evening before when he was at the residence of said Hogg; that said answer was prepared with a great rush; that the train upon which said Watkins left for home on the morning of the 23rd of May, 1908, whistled for the station just about the time said Watkins had signed and sworn to the said answer, and that the said Watkins left the office of the notary public in a great hurry in order to catch the train.

On this fifth day of November, 1910, came the plaintiff, by George R. E. Gilchrist, its counsel, and filed its motion in writing that the clerk of this court do produce certain papers from the file in this cause, specifically described in said written motion, and that upon production and inspection by the court an order be entered filing said papers as documentary evidence to be read on behalf of plaintiff at the hearing of this cause, saving all just exceptions.

216 Motion to Continue Restraining Order, Etc.

(Filed Jan. 14, 1908.)

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE COMPANY, Plaintiff,
vs.
JOHN MITCHELL et al., Defendants.

Comes now the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, the above named plaintiff, and shows to the court:

First. That on the twenty-fourth day of October, 1907, said complainant filed its bill in open court, at Philippi, against said defendants, praying for an injunction, and thereupon a restraining order was issued, conforming to the prayer of the bill; the motion for an injunction as prayed for was set down for hearing in the United States Court room at Parkersburg on the fourteenth day of January, 1908, at 10 o'clock A. M.; plaintiff required to enter into bond in the penal sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000.00) with surety satisfactory to the clerk of this court, and that a copy of the order was ordered to be served upon said defendants, giving them notice of the time for hearing the motion for injunction and further giving to them full notice of the terms of said restraining order.

Second. That plaintiff on said twenty-fourth day of October, 1907, entered into the bond required, and on Saturday, October 26, 1907, caused to be inserted in the Wheeling Daily Register, the Wheeling Daily Intelligencer and the Wheeling Daily News a true copy of said restraining order, certified to be such by the clerk of this court, the said Wheeling Register, the said Wheeling Intelligencer and the said Wheeling News being each newspapers of general circulation, published in the City of Wheeling, West Virginia.

Third. That promptly upon the filing of said bill, plaintiff caused proper subpœna to issue from the clerk's office of this court to each of said defendants, requiring them and each of them to be and appear in this court at rules to be held in the clerk's office at Philippi, on the first Monday in December, 1907, to answer said bill, and to the original and to each copy there was attached a duly certified and sealed copy of said restraining order; that no service was had of any of said subpœnæs, return being made by the marshal that 217 said subpœna was not served, and that said defendants were not found within his District; that thereupon plaintiff caused an alias subpœna to issue, returnable to the first Monday in January, 1908, to the original of which alias subpœna and to each copy there was likewise attached a duly certified and sealed copy of said restraining order; that on the twenty-seventh day of December, 1907, service of said alias subpœna and service of said restraining order was had upon the defendant, T. L. Lewis, individually, and as Vice-President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; that on the thirty-first day of December, 1907, service of said alias subpœna and service of said restraining order was had upon the defendant, William Green, individually, and as President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, and upon the defendant, D. H. Sullivan, individually, and as Vice-President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, and upon the defendant, Lee Rankin, individually, and as Secretary-Treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and service was not had upon any other of the defendants; that thereupon plaintiff caused a pluries subpœna to issue, returnable to the first Monday of February, 1908, for the unserved defendants, to the original and to each copy of which pluries subpœna there was likewise attached a duly certified and sealed copy of said restraining order; that on the ninth day of January, 1908, service of said pluries subpœna and service of said restraining order was had upon the defendant, A. R. Watkins, individually, and as President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and upon the defendant, John Zelenka, individually, and as Vice-President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America and service has not been had upon any others of the defendants.

Fourth. That after the granting of said restraining order and the publication thereof in said daily papers in Wheeling, the said defendants who have finally been served with the alias subpœna and the defendants who have finally been served with the pluries subpœna repeatedly visited Wheeling and interviews with one or more of them from time to time appeared in said daily papers, and there likewise appeared in said papers notices of their presence in the City, yet up until the time stated no service was had, although the requisite papers, during all of that time and on all of those occasions, were for the purpose of service in the hands of a Deputy Marshal for this District; that while the alias subpœna was still in said Deputy Marshal's hands for service the defendant, 218 Thomas Hughes, on the evening of December 3, 1907, was seen and known to be at the St. Charles Hotel on Water Street, in the City of Wheeling, and information to that effect was at once given by plaintiff to said Deputy Marshal, and said Deputy Marshal was by plaintiff requested to at once go and serve said alias subpœna and said restraining order upon said Hughes, yet said officer stated that he did not want to get Hughes then, that Hughes was the smallest one of the bunch, and that he would rather wait and get the rest of the defendants as he was afraid that Hughes would notify the rest of them, if he got him served first, whereupon plaintiff making protest and again requesting the officer to serve Hughes, the officer stated he did not have with him the copy which was in his hands for service on Hughes, but that he had with him the papers for all of the other defendants, and eventually said officer left plaintiff's representatives, who had been urging him to make service on Hughes, and stated that he would have to go to his office, and for them to remain until he came back, which turned out to be ten or fifteen minutes later, whereupon said officer and representatives of plaintiff together went to the St. Charles Hotel, by which time Hughes had gone, and plaintiff could not later locate him again; that after said restraining order was entered articles from time to time appeared in said public press in Wheeling, commenting upon the fact that no service was had and questioning the effect of the restraining order owing to lack of service; that on December 16, 1907, in the Wheeling Intelligencer an article appeared professing to be an interview with the defendant, A. R. Watkins, headed—"To Organize Miners Despite Injunction—Work in W. Va. Begins Today. President Watkins and Others Inaugurate Campaign. Hitchman and Other Pan Handle Mines Included," in which it is stated that defendant Watkins said he and said defendant Green would on that day start the work of organizing the miners at plaintiff's mine; that in the Bridgeport items, taken from the Wheeling Daily News of December 16, 1907, an article appeared which stated that while it had been announced that the United Mine Workers would start to organize the men in spite of the injunction, yet it was not likely that any of the officials named in the injunction would take part in the work; and that an article appeared in the Wheeling Daily News of December 18, 1907, stating that the officials of the Fifth Ohio Sub-District miners' organization began on December 17, 1907, a campaign to organize the hundreds of men employed in the Pan Handle District, and this significant statement followed: "The officials will continue their efforts until stopped by the courts or until they have accomplished their purpose."

219 Fifth. Plaintiff further shows that on the twenty-fourth day of December, 1907, John Morosco, who by plaintiff is known on information to have been and on such information is believed and is alleged to be an organizer for the United Mine Workers of America was detected upon the premises of plaintiff at its mine in Benwood, near the houses in which plaintiff's miners live, but finding himself watched left, and again on the twenty-seventh day of December, 1907, three other persons who professed themselves to be organizers for the United Mine Workers of America and who said they had come there for the purpose of organizing plaintiff's mine appeared near plaintiff's mine and talked on that subject with one or more employees of plaintiff.

Sixth. Plaintiff further shows that while service of said subpœna and service of said restraining order, including notice to the defendants that a hearing upon the motion for an injunction would be had at Parkersburg on January 14, 1908, at 10 o'clock A. M. as aforesaid, has been made upon certain of the defendants named in said bill, yet all of said defendants have not been served, and plaintiff further shows on information and belief that several if not all of the remaining defendants, now unserved, are expected yet to come within the jurisdiction of the court, upon the happening of which plaintiff could get service.

Therefore, plaintiff moves the court that the restraining order heretofore entered on October 24, 1907, be continued until the eighteenth day of March, 1908, during which time intervening between now and then plaintiff may cause proper pluries subpœna to issue from the clerk's office for said unserved defendants; and Plaintiff, therefore, further moves that the hearing upon said motion for injunction, which was set down for January 14, 1908, be continued until said eighteenth day of March, 1908, at Philippi, at two o'clock P. M.; and that the court will please to make such other order in the premises as to the court shall seem meet.

GEORGE R. E. GILCHRIST,
Attorney for Plaintiff.

220 Affidavit of E. T. Hitchman.

(Filed Jan. 14, 1908.)

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE COMPANY, Plaintiff,
vs.
JOHN MITCHELL et al., Defendants.

In Equity.

GLENDALE COAL COMPANY, Plaintiff,
vs.
JOHN MITCHELL et al., Defendants.

Affidavit of E. T. Hitchman.

I, E. T. Hitchman, the undersigned affiant, being first duly sworn upon my oath, in the city of Wheeling, West Virginia, say:

On the evening of December 3d, 1907, I learned from an employee of the Hitchman Company, who had been sent to Wheeling to try to locate some of the defendants who had not been served, that the defendant, Hughes, was at the St. Charles Hotel, on Water Street, in Wheeling, information to that effect being given to me by Clyde Round, our assistant pit boss, who said that he had just come from that hotel and that he had just seen Hughes there sitting in the public room or office of the hotel. I at once directed him to get the deputy marshal, C. E. Williams, and have the deputy go with him to the St. Charles Hotel and serve Hughes. Round at once left me at the hallway leading to the Bijou Theater and went up the stairs and directly came back down stairs accompanied by Williams. The officer said in my hearing then that he did not want to get Hughes; that Hughes was the smallest one of the bunch, and that he would rather wait and get the rest of the defendants as he was afraid that

Hughes would notify the rest of them if he got him served first. I protested to the officer against his failing to make the service, and finally the officer and Round left me, and instead of going to the St. Charles Hotel as I directed them to, which was just down Fourteenth Street two blocks away, the officer walked a few feet from where we were standing on Fourteenth street, down as far as Market street, and turned up Market street. I followed at a little distance myself, and when I got to the McLure House, I saw Round 221 standing outside of the McLure House by himself, and the officer was not with him. I asked Round where the officer was, and he said the officer had told him to remain there until he came back, that he didn't have the Hughes papers in his pocket, and said that he would have to go to his office to get them. I waited in front of the McLure House on Market street with Round for some minutes and then left to go to the St. Charles Hotel myself, telling Round to wait on Williams and to get along as fast as they could. I stopped at the Stamm Hotel to see if Hughes or any of the other defendants were there, and while in there Round and Williams came in and overtook me. I took Williams to task then for not having gone direct to the St. Charles Hotel when Hughes was there and for not having served Hughes; and he said in reply that the reason he hadn't gone to the St. Charles Hotel was because he hadn't had Hughes' papers with him; that he had all the other papers except Hughes, and that he had to go to his office to get Hughes' papers.

We then went from the Stamm Hotel along Water street to the St. Charles Hotel, a half block away, but when we got there Hughes was not in sight. At least fifteen to twenty minutes must have elapsed from the time I urged Williams to go down to the St. Charles Hotel the first time when Round first reported Hughes' presence at the St. Charles Hotel until we finally reached the St. Charles Hotel, at which time we found that Hughes was gone. It wasn't over a two minutes' walk from the Bijou Theater to the St. Charles Hotel.

Since the restraining order was issued in these two cases mentioned in the caption of this affidavit, I have made continuous and earnest efforts to locate the defendants while in Wheeling, and have had repeated dealings with C. E. Williams, who, for the purpose of service, had the papers in his hands in each case. I have kept a careful watch on the newspaper reports of interviews and statements showing the presence of the defendants, or one or more of them, in Wheeling, and wherever possible I have followed up this information for the purpose of verifying the correctness of the statements I found in the papers. In the main, the statements that I have read, and which I attach as exhibits to my affidavit, marked Exhibit No. 1 to 29, inclusive, and identified by the signature of the notary, I have found to be correct, and I have in addition from time to time learned of the presence of one or more of the defendants in Wheeling at times when their names would not appear in the papers as having been in Wheeling. The exhibits referred to are slips cut from the different issues of the papers and are marked so as to show from what issue of what paper the clipping is made.

222 When I learned that it was likely T. L. Lewis would be in Wheeling on the night of December 26th, 1907, and that he would likely take the B. & O. train from Wheeling leaving about half past twelve the next morning, I went to the Bijou Theater, where Williams is ticket taker, and told him I wanted him to be on hand at that train, that I believed Lewis would be there and would try to get out on that train. The officer objected to staying in town over night, but upon my insisting upon his remaining, he finally agreed to do so. I had one of our men watch the train for Lewis and for the purpose of identifying him so that Williams would know him, as Williams said that he did not know Lewis. The officer came to that train, our man pointed out Lewis to him, and the officer then served the papers. When, on the night of December 31st, 1907, I learned that one or more of the defendants would likely be at the Stamm Hotel, I personally went after the officer, found him at the Bijou Theater, and got him to go with me down to the Stamm Hotel. There he served Green, Sullivan and Rankin. When, on the morning of January 9th, 1908, I learned that Wakins and Zelenka were in town and were to be at the office of Patrick McBryde, in the Schmulbach Building, Wheeling, I personally notified the officer and had him meet me at the McLure House. From there we went to McBryde's office, and there the officer served Watkins and Zelenka.

From information received by me from different sources, and from some of the newspaper clippings which I have made exhibits to this affidavit, I have reason to believe, and do believe, that the United Mine Workers of America have not ceased their efforts to unionize the Hitchman and the Glendale mines. I have the statement of Wayne Archer, who is employed by both companies as pay roll clerk and assistant bookkeeper, which I believe to be true, that on December 24th, 1907, in the afternoon, while W. H. Koch and I were in Wheeling, we having left the mine about noon of that day for Wheeling, John Morosco was seen by him, Archer, on the premises of the Hitchman Company and circulating amongst some of the men employed by the Hitchman Company, and was near the entrance to the row of houses in which the men live. I have further statement from Archer that when the man noticed that he had been seen he left the premises and went out on the street. I have further Archer's statement that this man he saw was a United Mine Worker organizer who had been discharged by the Carnegie Company's Bellaire mine for having tried to unionize the miners at that mine, which is run non-union.

223 I have the further information, based on the statement of Mike Popage, an employee of the Hitchman Company, and whose statement I believe to be true, that on Friday, December 27th, 1907, three men were at the Hitchman mine, and that they said they were there for the purpose of organizing the Hitchman miners.

I have the further statement of Frank Wilhelm, of Benwood, who runs a saloon just across the road and nearly opposite our property, that the defendant, Watkins, had been down to the mine a few days before Christmas, and had been in his saloon and over on the company's premises and circulating about among the men for the purpose of finding out how things were going on.

The visit of Watkins, taken in connection with the presence of John Morosco, organizer for the United Mine Worker, and the presence of the three men who told Poppage they were organizers and that they had come to the mine to organize the Hitchman men, leads me to think that the United Mine Workers are still endeavoring to organize our men in spite of the injunction, just as Watkins is reported to have said as set forth in some of the newspaper clippings I have filed.

I believe we can get service on some of the others of the defendants also if proper effort is made.

I further state that copies of the restraining order were printed in full on October 26th, 1907, in the Wheeling Register, Wheeling Intelligencer and Wheeling Evening News.

I make this affidavit for use in support of any motion or of any pleading in which its subject matter is properly usable in either or both of the cases mentioned in the caption.

EXHIBIT NO. 7 TO AFFIDAVIT OF E. T. HITCHMAN.

Taken from Wheeling Daily News, Tuesday, November 12, 1907.

Officials of the Mine Workers Explain More Fully Their Position in Regard to Checks.

Officials of the Ohio miners organization who came to Wheeling Monday night object to the statement in a morning paper today that they came here principally to aid the operators in inducing the miners to accept the clearing house checks. Vice-President Sullivan said to a News reporter Tuesday morning at the Stamm House that that was not the object of their visit at all, but the check matter was a mere incidental to their trip.

He denied also that the board of the Ohio miners had taken action in which they ordered the men to accept the checks. The board discussed the matter but the only action they took was that in preference to letting the men strike or lay idle they would advise them to accept the checks on condition that the store keepers and business men generally would accept them for their face value.

225 The statement that President Green and President Watkins were with Vice-President Sullivan, Vice-President Zalenka and Secretary Pat McBryde at Barton yesterday to insist on the men taking the checks was also incorrect. Messrs. Sullivan and Zalenka were there with Mr. McBryde to settle some local trouble and the check question came up with the result that Mr. Sullivan advised the men just as the state board had decided.

President Green of the Ohio miners, who arrived last night went to Glencoe this morning with President A. R. Watkins and P. McBryde to look into some local matter and from there President Green will go to Cambridge.

While in Wheeling, Vice-President Sullivan received word from National Secretary Wilson that he as an alternate to President Mitchell would be expected to attend the National convention of the Federation of Labor at Norfolk as Mr. Mitchell would not be able to go before the end of the session. Mr. Sullivan will not be able to get away before Friday or Saturday.

Business Affairs of the Mine Workers' Local Being Looked Into by Officials.

All the officials of the Ohio miners' organization, except Secretary-Treasurer W. G. Savage, and all the Fifth Ohio sub-district officials were in Wheeling for a short time this morning. The two Presidents went out the B. & O. this morning, Vice-President D. H. Sullivan will be in town a good part of the day before going over the river to see miners of the sub-district regarding local troubles, and Lee Rankin, sub-district secretary-treasurer, has been kept pretty busy all day looking into the financial condition of several locals.

A committee from the Moore's run local at Bridgeport visited Secretary Rankin at the Stamm House this morning and settled up their business affairs, as did a committee from local 1271, composed of the mill miners at Martins Ferry. The latter was in arrears to the state organization, not having made their payment of dues.

Secretary Rankin said that the refusal of some of the miners to accept the clearing house checks was due to a misunderstanding of conditions and he believes they now have a knowledge of the business that will prevent further trouble as long as the checks are accepted by business men. The trouble at the Russell mine at Tiltonsville and the Y. & O. Florence mine near Martins Ferry has been settled.

226 EXHIBIT NO. 8 TO AFFIDAVIT OF E. T. HITCHMAN.

Taken from Wheeling Daily News, Thursday, November 21, 1907.

Question as to whether serving injunction notices is absolutely necessary—Law holds good if defendants are aware that order is granted—A difficult matter, however, to prove that they have such knowledge.

So far the United States Deputy Marshals who have the papers in the temporary injunction matter recently granted by Judge Dayton against the United Mine Workers' officials restraining them from attempting to organize the men in the Panhandle district have not succeeded in getting service upon any of the defendants.

The reason is due to the fact that all of the officials who are the defendants in the cases are residents of other states, most of them living in Ohio, and since the granting of the order they have not had occasion to come to West Virginia for any period of time.

However, some of the state and district officials were in the city several days ago on business but the deputy marshals did not succeed in locating them, not learning of their presence in the city. According to a statement made by one of the officials none of them are making any attempt to evade the service of the notices.

A question has arisen and has been given to much discussion as to whether it is necessary that the defendants be served with notices and copies of the restraining order, that it may be effective in preventing them from going among the men with the intent of organizing them.

This is the result of opinions being expressed that as a copy of the injunction was published in each of the daily papers that the officials should be aware that of the injunction without having copies officially served upon them.

When asked about this matter yesterday one of the federal court officials stated that it would be a matter for the judge to decide. He said that in many cases where the defendants had knowledge of the granting of the injunction the court has held that it is not necessary that they be officially served with the notices.

But he said the trouble would come when it is attempted to show that these defendants had knowledge of the restraining order. It would be necessary to furnish proof that they were aware of the fact and this would be a very difficult matter in a majority of 227 cases. The fact that a copy of an injunction was printed in the papers would not be sufficient to show that the defendants had gained knowledge of the court's action.

However, there need be no fear of any of the provisions of the court's order being violated as the miners do not intend to pursue any violent course. As stated they are making no attempt to evade the service of the notices and they expect to abide by the law until the matter is settled and also will observe the law afterward whether the injunction is made perpetual or dissolved.

Summons Not Yet Served on Them.

Deputy Marshals Have Not Succeeded in Getting Service on Mine Workers Officials.

The United States Deputy Marshals to whom was assigned the duty of serving the summons on the defendant union officials of the Fifth Ohio Sub-District, and of the United Mine Workers of America, have not as yet succeeded in serving the papers in the injunction suits instituted by the Richland Coal Company, the Glendale Coal Company, and the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company in the United States Circuit Court.

There is considerable diversity of opinion among lawyers as to whether service of notice by publication is valid in a case where one or more of the defendants reside outside of the jurisdiction of the court where the suit is pending. John Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers of America, resides at Spring Valley, Buren county, Illinois. Mr. Mitchell, President Watkins, of the 229 Fifth Ohio sub-district and Secretary Lee Rankin are among those who have not been personally served with the restraining order issued by Judge Dayton. If the case against Mrs. Beymer, who was not a party to the telephone companies injunction can be regarded as a precedent, personal notice is not necessary in order to enforce an injunction order against a person who has not been personally served with the notice of its issuance, if the person comes within the jurisdiction of the court and violates any of the provisions of the order.

Sullivan Picks Lewis to Win in Contest for the Presidency.

Vice-President of Ohio Mine Workers Confident that Bridgeport man Will Be Successful. Officials Left Today for the Highland Plant.

"The mine workers of Ohio are solid for Lewis and indications are that he will win in the fight for the presidency."

This statement was made to a Telegraph reporter this morning by Dennis H. Sullivan, of Coshocton, O., vice-president of the United Mine Workers of Ohio, who has been in the city since Sunday evening looking after conditions and consulting the officials of the Fifth Ohio sub-district. Mr. Sullivan is a warm friend of Mr. Lewis, and says his fight will be on conservative methods. His advancement in the organization has so far been rapid, and his ability is recognized by the miners throughout the country.

Mr. Sullivan is a candidate for re-election to the office of vice-president and William H. Green is also an aspirant to succeed himself as president. It is believed that both have good chances of victory. The locals throughout the state are already voting and placing candidates in the field. So far both gentlemen have the lead, and there is but little doubt of their re-election.

Causing Some Trouble.

Owing to the fact that a number of the coal companies in the Eastern Ohio field have paid in checks during the past few days, 230 resulting from the stringency in the money market, many of the miners became dissatisfied and threatened to quit work. Believing that conditions would become more alarming, President Green and Vice-President Sullivan came here and have been directing their work from headquarters temporarily established at the Stamm House. President Green advised to miners to continue work, assuring them that in his opinion the payment in checks would soon be discontinued. The merchants at the various towns throughout the sub-district have been accepting the checks and the miners are becoming better satisfied, although they will remain discontented to a considerable extent, until the companies resume their payments in currency as formerly.

The main trouble the officials have experienced has been in inducing the foreign speaking miners to believe that the checks are good as gold, and will be redeemed in currency in a short time.

Leave for Donora.

This morning President Green, sub-district President Watkins, Vice-President John Zelenka, and Patrick McBryde, secretary of the operators' association, left for the Donora mine, of the Highland Coal Company, where some trouble exists. The exact nature of the grievances was not learned, but from reports, the trouble is not serious and will be satisfactorily settled at a conference to be held this afternoon. The men did not quit work, but were stirred up over some local grievances, and threatened to strike.

Vice-President Sullivan left at noon today for New Philadelphia, O., where he will take up some local grievances and make a general survey of conditions. He will remain in that section for several days. Secretary Lee Rankin, who has also been here for the past day or two, left for points on the Wheeling and Lake Erie railroad, and after looking after some matters in the interests of the union, he will return to his home at Dillonvale, O.

Miners Resume Work.

At the Red Mud mine of the Pittsburg coal company at Rayland, the men have returned to work, after being out for several days on account of the discharge of a blacksmith. Yesterday Secretary Rankin of the miners, and Secretary McBryde of the operators visited the mine, and after a conference the men agreed to re-enter 231 the mine. The discharged employe was reinstated, and the men were satisfied to return to work. About 100 men are employed there.

Conditions in other sections of the district are normal. The output continues large and there are no grievances to speak of aside from those mentioned.

In a casual way, Vice-President Green this morning took occasion to remark that a morning paper gave a wrong impression when the statement was made that the miners' officials had come here to aid the Eastern Ohio operators.

United States Marshals Are Outwitted by Miners' Officials.

Luckily Escaped Service of Copies of Injunction Granted by Judge Dayton.

Although two or three deputy United States marshals were chasing around town with copies of the injunction granted by Judge A. G. Dayton, in the United States court, at Philippi, in search of Vice-President Dennis H. Sullivan, of the Ohio Mine Workers, Lee Rankin, secretary of the sub-district, and other offcials of the union, the officials easily gave them the slip and got back into Ohio without service.

For two days the hotel- where the officers had been making their headquarters were carefully watched, and the fact that the marshals didn't know the officials by sight made it easy for them to elude service, although neither Mr. Sullivan nor Mr. Rankin made any great effort to keep out of the way. Mr. Sullivan has been on West Virginia soil half a dozen times since the injunction was issued. President Watkins has been here frequently, but states that he has not even seen a deputy marshal.

It is a question of law whether or not it will be absolutely necessary for the papers to be served, as they have been published in the newspapers, but "as a matter of form," the deputy marshals have been very anxious to get their optics on the officials named as defendants in the injunction.

Officials Come to Aid East Ohio Operators.

Both Green and Sullivan Here—Only Foreign Miners Are Objecting to the Temporary Use of Checks—Outlook for the Industry Declared to Be Good.

President William Green of Columbus, the head of the United Mine Workers of Ohio, was an arrival in the city last evening, and is a guest at the Stamm. President Green, in discussing mining affairs last evening, stated that throughout the state the conditions were very satisfactory as to work.

"My advice to the miners has been to stay at work too, as long as possible, and when it became evident that many of them would have to be paid in checks we at once advised that they see their local merchants and arrange with them to accept the checks without discount. We anticipate very little trouble."

The object of Mr. Green's visit here is to look over the situation and where necessary explain to the men the necessity for the issuance of checks.

Sullivan Also Here.

D. H. Sullivan, of the United Mine Workers of Ohio, was in Bridgeport Monday afternoon for a short time, on business connected with the miners' organization. Mr. Sullivan stated that his visit at this time to the Fifth sub-district of Ohio was on account of the paying of the miners with clearing house checks, and his object was to advise and encourage the miners to accept the checks as pay. The trouble, he stated, in convincing the miners that the checks were good, was only with the foreigners who could not speak or read English, and he was of the opinion that the mine officials would be able to influence the men to accept the checks and continue at work. Only a few places in the district are giving the officials trouble and these cases part of the men are willing to work.

Vice-President Sullivan stated that it was not their work but that the officials were glad to help out the operators and do all they could to keep the mines in operation. At a meeting of the state executive committee of the miners it was decided to advise all the 233 miners to accept the checks for pay and to continue at work. Since the meeting both President Green and Vice-President Sullivan and District President Watkins and Vice-President Zelenka went to Barton, where some of the foreigners were finding fault with the checks and held a meeting with them inducing them to accept the checks and continue to work. In the evening Mr. Sullivan left for New Philadelphia to visit the locals in the northern part of the district.

Industrial Peace.

"The miners in Ohio are enjoying industrial peace at the present time," was the answer Vice-President Sullivan gave when asked about the mines in the state. He said the miners were having steady work and difficulty had been the shortage of cars which was effecting all the mining districts in the state. No serious strikes are on and, in fact, he said, there was no strikes in the state at the present time, but at all times there were grievances that had to be adjusted.

The outlook for an interstate agreement between the miners and operators of Ohio, Pennsylvania and Illinois, Mr. Sullivan said, was very encouraging and that another meeting would be held in Indianapolis, December 19th. The operators, he said, had shown a spirit of fairness and the miners the same, which had done much to pave the way for an agreement that would be both profitable to the miners and operators, and that at the coming meeting he expected the agreement to be almost ratified.

Old Officials Re-elected.

When asked about the coming Ohio convention of the miners, which will be held in January, in Columbus, Vice-President Sullivan said all the old state officials would be re-elected. He is a candidate and already over 250 locals have nominated him for another term, and the same number have paid President William Green the same compliment. Both are capable and efficient officials and the miners are wise in re-electing them for another term.

Lewis Logical Candidate.

When asked about the candidacy of National Vice-President Lewis for president of the United Mine Workers, Mr. Sullivan said "Lewis is the logical candidate and will be elected." He praised Lewis and said that the organization would do well to pro-234 mote him to the presidency of the organization, and that he was satisfied he would be elected.

Was It Served?

Question as to Whether Injunction Against Miners Is in Force—Officers Have Not Been Served With Notices and Are Organizing the Miners.

There has been some question raised as to whether the injunction, recently granted against the officials of the coal miners of this district and of the State of Ohio, has been served. The injunction was issued at the request of a number of the Pan Handle operators to prevent the officials from organizing the men employed at their mines. In the past week the officers have been busily engaged in the preliminaries for an organization. They have been mingling among the men at the mines and within the next few days definite steps in the reformation of the unions will be taken.

The miners, so 'tis claimed, take the stand that they are not in contempt of court as the injunction has not been served upon them. In this view they are proceeding with the work. Court officials, on the other hand, it is said, have not received copies of the final papers in the case to serve, but allege that the notice through the newspapers that an injunction had been granted is sufficient notice and that the injunction is in full force.

The positions are unique and in fact are the first of the kind in local injunction cases and any test will be watched with interest.

Lewis Enjoined.

Vice-President of Mine Workers Served With Injunction Notice Issued at Philippi by Judge Dayton Two Months Ago—This Is the First Service Obtained Against Mine Officials.

National Vice-President T. L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America was served with papers in the injunction issued by Judge A. G. Dayton at Philippi, two months or more ago, at the Wheeling station of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad about one o'clock Friday morning while he was waiting for a train to take him down in the state. The papers were served by United States Marshal Elzie Williams.

When Marshal Williams handed Mr. Lewis the papers the latter remarked: "Well, you have caught me at last, haven't you?"

"Yes," responded Marshal Williams, "but you have led me a merry chase."

While the injunction was granted months ago the United States officials have never been able to obtain personal service against any officials of the national, Ohio or Fifth Ohio sub-district named in the restraining order until Vice-President Lewis was captured at the B. & O. depot this morning. It is likely service will be secured on the other officials as soon as they come to town.

The injunction it will be remembered was secured by J. C. McKinley and others and restrains President Mitchell, Vice-President Lewis and all the Ohio and Fifth Ohio sub-district officials from interfering with the operation of mines in the Pan-Handle counties of this state or from talking to or attempting to organize the men here employed. It is one of the most sweeping injunctions ever issued.

Serve Papers.

Federal Authorities Serving Injunction Papers On Mine Workers' Officials.

Federal officers are busy in this city just at present serving the papers in the injunction recently procured by the coal operators against the mine workers' officials of this district and of the state of Ohio, preventing them from further organizing the men at the various mines in the Pan Handle district. The first copies of the paper were served yesterday upon T. L. Lewis and up to last evening that was the extent of the progress made. The papers had not been served upon Organizer Hughes, of near Bellaire, who was the organizer of the district at the time the injunction was procured. He had at that time practically completed arrangements for the reorganization of the miners at Glendale and at the two Richland mines.

The remainder of the papers will in all probability be served in the next couple of days.

Serve Injunction on Mine Workers.

Ohio Officers of Organization Are Restrained—Came Here for Night and Marshal Met Them—Papers Returnable on the Sixth.

The officials of the Ohio State Mine Workers against whom Judge Dayton some time ago issued an injunction, were served last night at the Stamm Hotel by U. S. Deputy Marshal Elza Williams. The officials came here in order that they might start this morning for Lansing, Ohio, where local No. 1609 of the organization, are to dedicate a new hall to-day. In the party served were President of the Ohio Mine Workers, William Green, of Coshocton, Vice-President Dennis Sulivan, of Columbus, and Secretary of Sub-District No. 5, Lee Rankin, of Dillonvale.

237 The papers restrain the officials from in any wise attempting to organize the miners employed at the Hitchman, Richland and Glendale mines in the Pan Handle District, which is under the jurisdiction of those officials. President Andrew Watkins, who is to act as chairman at Lansing, escaped being served through not coming to the West Virginia side last night. The papers are returnable the first Monday in January.

Secretary Rankin Will Issue Call.

Nominations for Sub-District Officers of Miners' Organization Open Monday—All of the Present Officers Will Be Candidates Again.

Secretary Lee Rankin of the miners will issue a call for the nomination of the officers in sub-district 5, Monday, December 23rd. The nominations will not close until January the 1st, that all who desire will have an opportunity to enter.

The convention at which the officers will be elected will be held in New Philadelphia, March 12th and 14th, inclusive. Much business will come up for transaction during the three days' session.

The present officers, President A. R. Watkins, of Yorkville; Vice-President John Zelenka, of Bridgeport, and Secretary-Treasurer Lee Rankin of Dillonvale, all will be candidates for re-election, and in addition the board members and auditors. Just how many candidates in addition to those named above and who they will be remains to be seen.

It is conceded that all of the present officers will be formidable candidates for the position and that additional candidates will have hard sailing. President Watkins has served two terms at the head of the organization, and according to reports from various parts of the district he will be a hard man to defeat.

Vice-President Zelenka, who until his election last spring, officiated in the capacity of interpreter, has made many friends and he is sure of getting a large vote when the ballots are counted.

Lee Rankin, the popular treasurer and secretary, who has held the position for a half dozen years, undoubtedly will top the list for the position. There is not a more popular and proficient official in the organization and his friends predict that he again will be elected without opposition.

Call Issued.

Miners of This Sub-District to Meet in New Philadelphia—President Watkins and All the Present Officers Are Candidates for Re-election.

The call for the convention of the Fifth Ohio sub-division of United Mine Workers of America, to be held in New Philadelphia, March 12, has been issued by the Secretary-Treasurer Lee Rankin of Dillonvale.

The time and place for holding the convention was set some time ago, and was exclusively published in the Intelligencer. The district includes the Panhandle district of this state and the locals on this side of the river will be represented.

The convention will be the largest in the history of the district, and will be the largest sub-district convention in the state, and will represent over 14,000 miners, who have made the district the largest coal-producing section in Ohio.

The date for the nominations for district officers will close January 3, and it is understood that President Watkins, Vice-President John Zelenka and all the other officials will be candidates for re-election.

Call Is Out

For National Mine Workers Convention at Indianapolis Next Month—Will Be One of the Most Important Meetings They Have Held—President John Mitchell May Not Be Able to Attend the Convention.

The miners' local unions over the river in the last few days have received the official call for the national convention which is to start at Indianapolis on the 21st of January and it is to be the most important in the history of the organization because of the change in the administration due to the refusal of John Mitchell to run for president again. While new officers are to be elected they 239 will not take charge till the first of April.

The interstate joint conference not having been definitely arranged that will be one of the most important questions for consideration at the convention, but it will be handled in an able manner by the delegates as the mine workers are anxious to see it again established.

The uncertainty as to whether President Mitchell will be physically able to take part in the deliberations will leave the responsibility to a large extent on the vice-president. There is no doubt about his ability to handle the weighty affairs as his knowledge of details in regard to the basis upon which the inter-state movements were founded, not only at Chicago in 1898 but in 1885 when the first joint movement was organized, will put him in a position to entangle any complications arising and re-establish the inter-state joint movement.

It is well known that Vice-President Lewis is in favor of an interstate joint agreement with some permanent feature connected with it that will prevent a few operators, who may have special advantages, as parties to the movement from breaking up the plan when it is to their interests to do so.

It is conceded by all that the joint method of arranging wage scale is the best plan yet devised to remove the possibility of industrial conflicts. The system has some defects but if all parties interested are sincere there is no doubt that some method can be devised that will give the movement that permanent feature so essential to making a success and placing the mine industry on a permanent and solid foundation by giving to the miner a full share of the results of his labor, to the operator his reasonable profit, and to the consuming public, fuel at such rate as they can well afford to pay.

Lewis Leads for Mine Presidency.

Incomplete Returns Indicate Election of the Bridgeport Man—In 24 Locals of Illinois He Has a Lead of Two to One Over Wilson—Also Shows Up Surprisingly Strong in Pennsylvania.

The voting on National officers for the United Mine Workers will close the last day of this month and the work of counting will start the first day of the National convention which opens at Indianapolis January 21st. While the result in almost every 240 local has been given out locally there has been no effort to tabulate but it is now assured that T. L. Lewis the Bridgeport candidate for president has been elected and the official count will only decide his majority over Mr. Wilson.

In 42 out of a total of 320 locals in Illinois the home of John Mitchell, the detailed vote is known and it shows that out of something over 9,000 votes polled, Mr. Lewis has six thousand to Mr. Wilson's 3,000 or about two to one. This ratio may not continue over all of Illinois, but there is every reason to believe Mr. Lewis will carry the state by several thousand votes. In the 42 locals reported are some of the largest in the state.

In Indiana the ratio established in Illinois has been kept up according to reports that have been received in detail from one-fourth of the locals. In Michigan, Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Iowa, and in fact every district outside of the Central or competitive districts Mr. Lewis has run far ahead of his opponent. He carries every district with possibly the anthracite field show- a large Lewis vote and he may carry all of the district there.

In West Virginia out of 1,200 vote cast in a total of over 3,000 Mr. Lewis will have about 1,000 to 2,000 for Wilson. The light vote cast in West Virginia district is indicative of the vote in most of the other districts of the organization.

Ohio as had been stated in the News from time to time is almost solid for Lewis and there will not be 500 votes against him out of a total of 20,000 or more. In the Fifth sub-district over the river the miners voted almost solid for him. In locals casting anywhere from 200 to 500 votes there are many instances where Lewis got every vote. In only a very few locals where there was a personal grievance against the Bridgeport man was he cut more than two or three votes.

To Organize Miners Despite Injunction.

Work in W. Va. Begins Today—President Watkins and Others Inaugurate Campaign—Hitchman and Other Pan Handle Mines Included—President Green.

Despite the fact that Judge Dayton issued an injunction restraining the officials of the United Mine Workers of America from organizing the miners in the Pan Handle district of this state, the miners' officials will today start to organize the miners into the union.

A. R. Watkins, of Yorkville, Ohio, president of the Fifth Ohio sub-district of the miners' organization, which includes the Pan Handle counties of West Virginia, will today start to organize the miners at the Hitchman mines and the miners just north of the city. To a representative of the Intelligencer President Watkins stated last evening that he would start the work today, and that he thought it was the opportune time for getting the men into the union. He also said that he had received much encouragement of late from the miners on the West Virginia side of the river, and that he would be assisted in the work by President W. H. Green, of the Ohio miners. He is satisfied that a number of the miners wish to become members of the union, and does not anticipate that he will have much trouble in organizing the men.

President Watkins was asked regarding the injunction restraining the officials from organizing the miners. He said that no injunction papers had been served on him, or any other officials, and that he did not see where the injunction could restrain him from doing his duty and organizing the men, and further he would pay no attention to the order as he had not been served with the papers.

President Watkins is a man with years of experience in his work and means just what he says. At no time has he refrained from visiting the West Virginia side of the river, and after the 242 injunction came here and paid the striking miners their benefits until they secured places in union mines. He is a splendid organizer and will take up the work in a way that is sure to secure a number of men back into the union.

Will Organize

Miners On This Side of River In Spite of Injunction—Fifth Sub-District Miners' Officials Are At Work Now—And They Hope To Get Most of the Men in Line.

In spite of the restraining order issued by Judge Dayton at Philippi a few months ago, the officials of the Fifth Ohio Sub-District miners' organization yesterday began a campaign to organize the hundreds of men employed in the Panhandle district, a territory which is included in the Ohio sub-district. The officials will continue their efforts until stopped by the courts or until they have accomplished their purpose.

Two of the officials Tuesday met a good many of the men working in one of the largest mines and obtained from them assurances that they would gladly go in the organization if it was possible to get all the men in. The work is being continued today and will go on the remainder of the week.

Mine Trouble Not Settled.

The trouble at the Dillies Bottom mine, in Belmont county, over sticky bottoms, reported in the News last week has not been settled and the miners are still out. It is a question for the arbi-243 tration board of operators and miners to settle and it is not expected there will be any great difficulty in reaching an agreement.

The voting for national officers of the United Mine Workers must end twenty days before the convention, and as that opens this year January 21, the voting will not cease till New Years. However, practically all the locals have already voted. All in Ohio are through. John Mitchell in an interview given out at New York Monday, said his successor had already been elected, and, while he did not give the name, it is known he meant T. L. Lewis.

Affidavit of Wayne Archer.

I, Wayne Archer, the undersigned affiant, being first duly sworn upon my oath in the city of Wheeling, West Virginia, say:

I am pay roll clerk and assistant bookkeeper at the Hitchman mine and the Glendale mine, with my office at the Hitchman mine. I have been at the Hitchman for nearly three years. I am twenty-six years old and live in Bellaire and have lived in Bellaire twenty-three years. I am well acquainted in Bellaire and in the surrounding country on both sides of the river. On the afternoon of December 24th, 1907, I was at Frank Wilhelm's restaurant and saloon nearly opposite the Hitchman mine and was in company with Mr. R. J. Cotts, the bookkeeper for the same two companies that I work for. We had gone there for our lunch. It was between twelve and one o'clock in the afternoon. I was standing near the window looking across the street and was just in line of the row of the Hitchman houses where the miners live. The row of houses runs away from the street on which the street car line runs and there is 244 a side street or passageway along the entire front of the row of houses which leads from the county road where the street car line runs westward towards the Ohio river. There is a small cinder walk leading from the county road mentioned down towards the river some little distance, probably a hundred and twenty feet or so, until the row of houses is encountered, and from there on down westward in front of the row of houses, twelve double houses in number, and each house being a two-story house, there is a small board walk four or five feet walk right in front of the doors of each of the houses. There is a little porch in front of each house. As I was looking down this row of houses I saw John Morosco coming towards the street car line. Morosco at that time was just at the end of the board walk and apparently had just left the row of houses.

I do not know whether he saw that he was being watched or not because I did not have any talk with him, but he continued coming on up the cinder path and finally came on out off the company's property into the public road which I have mentioned as the county road on which the street car line runs. When he got on to the county road he was about ninety or a hundred feet away from where I was standing. I recognized Morosco as a man I have seen and known of in Bellaire as an organizer and interpreter for the United Mine Workers of America. Practically all the foreign speaking element of miners employed by the Hitchman Company at its mine in Benwood live in that row of houses. I did not see Morosco come out of any one particular house, nor did I see h-m in conversation with any of our men at that time. Morosco was already on his way from the houses when I saw him, and while I kept him in sight he did not return to the houses, nor did he talk to any of our men in my sight. At that hour of day a great many of our men are in the mine, but we always have a greater or less number of men in our employ who are on duty off and on and there is nearly always a lot of the men still in the row of houses. Out of the large number of men we employ there are always some of them to be found in the houses at all times. I continued watching Morosco from the time I first saw him until he took a car northward toward the Benwood ferry. He took the first car going north after I saw him coming from the houses. In natural course he would take a north bound street car and get off at Sixth street, Benwood, and take the ferry in order to get back to where he lives in Bellaire. I did not follow Morosco and therefore do not know just where he went. John Morosco, according to information which I have obtained from B. F. Marling, who is the superintendent of the Carnegie Steel Company's mine at Bellaire, has been at different times employed 245 by the United Mine Workers as an organizer of non-union mines and I myself have known of Morosco in that capacity for the last ten or twelve years. I known Morosco well by sight and have talked to him many times. My father up until about four years ago was one of the owners and operators of a coal mine at Bellaire right near where Morosco lived. My father's mine was non-union. I have seen Morosco about the Hitchman mine since that mine started up non-union after the last strike, and I remember on one occasion he acted as interpreter for some of the men there.

I make the present affidavit for use in support of any motion or of any pleading in which its subject matter is properly usable in either or both of the cases mentioned in the caption.

vs.

Affidavit of B. F. Marling.

I, B. F. Marling, the undersigned affiant, being first duly sworn upon my oath, in the city of Wheeling, West Virginia, say:

I am thirty-five years of age, or will be the last of this month; was born in Bellaire and lived there all my life. I am at present the manager of the Carnegie Steel Company's mine at Bellaire. I have held that position for about three years last past. I was assistant superintendent for about four years before I became superintendent or manager. Prior to that I worked in the mine for seven or eight years. I have worked in coal mines ever since I was about eleven years of age, but not all of the time, however, in that same mine. I know John Morosco, who lives in Bellaire, and have known him for twelve or thirteen years. He used to work in the same coal mine with me. I mean the Carnegie Company's mine that I am now superintendent of. He worked there last when I was assistant superintendent. I believe the last place I can now recall where Morosco worked in a mine was at the Empire mine. That mine is just below Bellaire and is on the Ohio side of the river just opposite the Hitchman mine. When Morosco worked at the Empire, De Armit was operating the mine and was attempting to run it non-union. Morosco got employment there at the Empire mine at that time as a non-union man and at the same time was really the secret representative of the United Mine Workers and was paid by the United Mine Workers to go into that mine, work non-union, and then try to unionize the mine while in the bank. He was found out and discharged. This was about 1902, I think; at any rate it was during the time that De Armitt was trying to run that mine non-union. I know this part of Morosco's history to be true, because he told me so himself. He laughed about the matter, especially about getting double wages for the time he worked there.

I had an experience with Morosco myself last fall, I think it was in August, or early in September. The Steel Company's mine is run non-union and was being run so at that time. Along during that summer, John Zelenka, who I know personally and know to be the vice-president of the sub-district 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers, came about our mine trying to organize the men and unionize the mine. Zelenka came to me as superintendent and wanted to deal for the men and have the union recognized. I told him that I wouldn't deal with him, but would only deal with the men themselves. Zelenka finally got some of the English speaking people that worked in the mine to agree to join the union and he got them to have a meeting and declare a strike. Mr. Zelenka called me up the same night by telephone and informed me that they had declared a strike. We operate our mine up Indian run and all the foreign element lives up the run, and that night between eleven and twelve Morosco called the foreign element out of bed, told them the strike had been declared, and that if they went back to work the next day that they were liable to be hung. There were a lot of other fellows with Morosco. I know this because a number of the men who lived in those houses and who were awakened, talked to and threatened by Morosco told me this 247 the next day. This happened the same night and after Zelenka telephoned to me that the men had declared a strike that night. Zelenka did not tell me that he was going to get Morosco to visit our foreign speaking people that night, but I know that the men that went up there did not know Morosco before that time, and I am reasonably certain that Morosco went up there under instructions from Zelenka. These men that went up there that night were English speaking people and could not talk the language of these other men in the houses. Morosco went along to do the talking and did it. The next morning the men that Zelenka had gotten to join the union failed to show up, but the foreign speaking element that Morosco threatened the night before showed up and were ready to go to work. Zelenka had gotten the mine crippled by getting the drivers to strike, who were English speaking people, so I sent the foreign element home again, and it wasn't a week until the majority of the drivers seceded from the union they had just joined and came back to work non-union and are working so for us today.

I therefore know John Morosco and his business from his own statements to me of what he did and from an actual experience with him at our own mine.

I make this affidavit for use in support of any motion or of any pleading in which its subject matter is properly usable in either or both of the cases mentioned in the caption.

Decree Overruling Motion to Dismiss.

And at the same day, to-wit: On the 5th day of November, 1910, the following order was made and entered of record, to-wit:

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE COMPANY
v.
JOHN MITCHELL et al.

Heretofore in this cause came John Mitchell, W. B. Wilson and Thomas Hughes by Charles E. Hogg, and filed their plea 248 and motion for the special purpose only of asking a dismissal of this cause as to them, because process had not been served upon them; and the complainant, by George R. E. Gilchrist, counsel, asked a dismissal of said motion, and a ruling of the court that said parties, by such appearance, had waived the service of process and should be held to be before the court and be required to answer.

And the matter involved in said motions having been heretofore fully argued orally and by briefs filed by counsel, and now having been fully considered by the court, it is adjudged that said plea and motion in effect constituted a special appearance for the sole purpose of asking a dismission of said cause on the ground of the non-service of process, but that said bill, by its allegations charging a conspiracy between these non-served defendants and those served in the cause, and seeking an injunction restraining all parties involved in the conspiracy charged from alleged contemplated unlawful acts and conduct, for which, if said allegations be true, the court is of opinion that suit could be brought against said Mitchell Hughes and Wilson independently if found in this district at any time, and that they are proper parties before the court by representation through service upon their co-defendants, it is therefore ordered that both of said motions be overruled and that said complainant has right, if it desires so to do, to sue out and serve process upon said defendants, Mitchell, Hughes and Wilson, but until said process shall be served said three defendants shall not be required to answer.

Motion and Plea of John Mitchell.

249 President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; W. B. Wilson, of Blossburg, Pennsylvania, and a Citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, Individually and as Secretary-Treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; William Green, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; D. H. Sullivan, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Vice-President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; George W. Savage, of Columbus, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Secretary-Treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; A. R. Watkins, of Yorkville, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; John Zelenka, of Warrenton, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Vice-President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; Lee Rankin, of Dillonvale, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Secretary-Treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and Thomas Hughes, of Shadyside, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Defendants.

Comes now John Mitchell, named as one of the defendants in the above entitled cause, and appears specially for the purpose hereinafter set forth and for no other purpose, hereby disclaiming for and on behalf of himself any appearance to the merits of said cause, and hereby moves the court to set aside any return of the Marshal on the summons issued in said cause and to disregard such return; because this defendant avers that on the 24th day of October, A. D., 1907, he was not within the State of West Virginia, nor has he been within the said State at any time since the 24th day of October, A. D. 1907, nor is he in said State at this time; but this defendant avers that he has been a resident during all that 250 time and a citizen of the State of Indiana, and that during all that time this defendant has had no agent or other person within the State of West Virginia, nor has he now within the State of West Virginia any agent or representative upon whom process may be legally served; and this defendant further avers that process to answer said suit has not been served upon him at any time within the State of West Virginia; and this defendant further avers that the above named suit was not brought to enforce any legal or equitable lien upon or claim to, or to remove any encumbrance or lien or cloud upon the title to real or personal property within the Northern District of West Virginia, being the district wherein said suit was brought and is now pending.

And so this defendant prays the judgment of this Honorable Court whether he should be compelled to appear herein, or plead to the bill filed in said suit, for the reason that he has not been served with process to answer the said suit, and is not compellable or required to appear or plead to the said bill, and has not accepted and does not accept service of process to answer said bill, nor does he waive a due service of process upon him to answer said bill; and for the further reason that this defendant may be properly served with process in a suit originally instituted in the State of this defendant's residence and citizenship; and, further, because this defendant is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia and also a non-resident of the Northern District of West Virginia, and can not be lawfully proceeded against in said suit; and, because, further, the court may not lawfully make an order directing this defendant to appear, plead, answer or demur to said bill by a day to be by the court designated, nor can such order be lawfully served upon this defendant in said suit, nor can such order be lawfully published under any act of Congress now in force and applicable to said suit.

And this defendant further avers that there is no business or engagement requiring this defendant to make his personal appearance in the State of West Virginia, either in the Northern or Southern District thereof, nor is it the intention of this defendant to make his personal appearance in the State of West Virginia, either in the Northern or Southern District thereof, within any future definite period of time, so far as this defendant knows and so far as he is now advised.

And this defendant asks that the temporary restraining order issued in the above cause by this Honorable Court on the 24th day of October, A. D., 1907, be set aside, and that the bill, so far as it affects this defendant, being instituted for injunctive relief, be dismissed; for the reason and because, as this defendant has here shown to the court, he has at no time been lawfully served 251 with process to answer the said bill, and inasmuch as he does not reside, as hereinbefore shown, in the State of West Virginia, and can not and does not intend to appear within the said State of West Virginia, he can not be lawfully served with process to answer the said bill and required to appear thereto in the Northern District of West Virginia.

And now this defendant, having brought to the attention of the court its want of jurisdiction over this defendant because of its inability to lawfully serve this defendant with its process to answer the said bill, asks that the said court take no further cognizance of the said suit, and that the same be dismissed, so far as the same affects this defendant; this defendant hereby in nowise waiving or hereby intending to waive the lawful service of process upon him, and hereby declaring that he does not appear to the merits of the said bill, nor does he by this statement hereinbefore contained intend to appear to the merits of the said bill, but only bringing to the attention of this Honorable Court its want of jurisdiction over this defendant.

Comes now W. B. And this defendant further avers that there is no business or engagement requiring this defendant to make his personal appearance in the State of West Virginia, either in the Northern or Southern District thereof, nor is it the intention of this defendant to make his personal appearance in the State of West Virginia, either in the Nothern or Southern District thereof, within any future definite period of time, so far as this defendant knows and so far as he is now advised.

And this defendant asks that the temporary restraining order issued in the above cause by this Honorable Court on the 24th day of October, 1907, be set aside, and that the bill, so far as it affects this defendant, being instituted for injunctive relief, be dismissed;

Motion of Plaintiff to Deny Motion of Defendants.

(Filed May 26, 1908.)

In the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE COMPANY, Plaintiff,
vs.
JOHN MITCHELL et al., Defendants.

Comes now the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, the above named plaintiff, and shows to the Court:

First. On January 14, 1908, certain defendants, John Mitchell, W. B. Wilson, George W. Savage, individually, and in their several official capacities, and Thomas Hughes, by Adam B. Little-258 page and Charles E. Hogg appeared specially to move the court to dismiss said suit as to said defendants, and did move the court to dismiss said cause as to them, and in support of said motion filed a plea in abatement of said unserved defendants duly verified by affidavit, and a consideration of said motion was deferred until March 18, 1908, and on March 18, 1908, said Adam B. Littlepage and Charles E. Hogg did not appear and press their said motion.

Second. Although such plea in abatement was really read to the court by said counsel in presenting said motion and then filed as shown by said order of January 14, 1908, said defendants' said counsel failed to leave said plea with the clerk of said court and the same has not come into the physical possession of this court to this date.

Third. At the request of plaintiff's counsel of record made by mail on January 20, 1908, said Adam B. Littlepage sent to plaintiff's said counsel one of the pleas in abatement similar to that used in court on January 14, 1908, as aforesaid, which plea with the correspondence accompanying and identifying same is herewith filed and made a part of the supporting affidavit of plaintiff's counsel.

Fourth. On May 13, 1908, said defendant Savage, individually, and in his official capacity, was duly served within this district, and pluries subpœnæ are now in the hands of the proper officer of this court for service upon the remainder of said defendants, first named herein as unserved on January 14, 1908.

Therefore, plaintiff, by its said counsel asks leave of court to withdraw its said motion made March 18, 1908, that said motion to dismiss be denied, that said plea in abatement be overruled, and that said unserved defendants be assigned to appear and answer over to the merits of the cause, but only so far as said Savage in his individual and said official capacity is concerned, and by its counsel plaintiff now again moves the court that said motion to dismiss be denied, that said plea in abatement be overruled, and that each of said unserved defendants, namely: John Mitchell and W. B. Wilson, individually, and in their said official capacities, and said Thomas Hughes, be assigned to appear and answer over to the merits of the cause, and that in the consideration of plaintiff's motion to that effect as to each of said unserved defendants, the court will consider 259 the plea filed with this motion and referred to as furnished to plaintiff's counsel by said Littlepage as a counterpart of the plea in abatement filed by said Littlepage and said Hogg, as counsel for said unserved defendants January 14, 1908.

And plaintiff asks that the court will make such other order in the premises as to the court shall seem meet.

DEAR SIR: I have mailed you today under separate cover a copy of the bill in the Hitchman case, and between covers have included a copy of the restraining order entered October 24, 1907, as well as a copy of the further order entered January 14, 1908. I promised to mail you a copy of the bill on returning home last week, but time required to print the order of the 14th inst. caused the few days' delay.

I have not received from you a copy of the plea in abatement, which you filed at Parkersburg on the 14th, and would be glad to have you send me one. I suppose you have been busy and overlooked mailing it.

I received a letter similar to yours from the clerk, Mr. Harrison. I will look up the matter at once, and give it necessary attention. I was of the impression that the plea had been left with the clerk.

MY DEAR MR. GILCHRIST: I beg to apologize to you for the delay in answering your recent request for a copy of the special plea we submitted in the cause of Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. vs. John Mitchell and others at Parkersburg recently.

I have not been at my office since the Senate convened, and have been greatly pressed for time.

I received a letter from Mr. Harrison, clerk, and Hon. C. E. Hogg, requesting me to forward this special plea, saying you had called for same. I am enclosing you a copy. One or two of the special pleas were signed and sworn to, and I was of the impression the same was left with the papers at the Parkersburg clerk's office. Mr. Hogg was of the impression I brought them away. I did not do this, however, but am enclosing herewith to you the one intended for President Green, but on account of personal service upon him, he returned it to me, and I herewith hand same to you. As soon as you shall have gotten through with it, please mail the same to Mr. Harrison, or you can retain it until we meet at Philippi in March.

I am doing my best to get the answer in readiness so as to submit the same to Mr. Hogg, and then to you.

Please forgive me for not having written you earlier.

262 EXHIBIT NO. 4 WITH AFFIDAVIT.

WHEELING, W. VA., February 7, 1908.

Hon. Adam B. Littlepage, Charleston, W. Va.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLEPAGE: I am just in receipt of your letter of February 5th, enclosing one of the special pleas which you prepared for Mitchell to sign, and, subsequently, changed to Green, but which, owing to Green having been served, Green returned to you unsigned. As I understand it, the paper you enclosed is mutatis mutandis just like each of the four pleas which are supposed to be on file in the clerk's office in the Hitchman case and as well as like four similar pleas which are supposed to be on file in the same office in the Glendale case. As a matter of fact, as I recall the occurrence, you and Judge Hogg had with you only one of the pleas in the Hitchman case and none in the Glendale case, when we were at Parkersburg on the 14th ultimo, but the remaining three pleas in the Hitchman and all four pleas in the Glendale were outstanding, having been sent by mail to the respective defendants for their signatures; and that as fast as received, duly signed and sworn to, they would be filed by you in the clerk's office; these pleas, as I understand it, were to be the pleas of the defendants, Mitchell, Wilson, Savage and Hughes.

I note what you say about sending to the clerk the paper you have enclosed to me, when I shall have gotten through with it, or that I may retain it, if I prefer to do so, until we meet at Philippi in March.

I suppose you have just inadvertently suggested my mailing the paper to the clerk, because that paper, of course, would have no place in the record.

I will treat the enclosed paper as being mutatis mutandis copy of the four pleas in the Hitchman and of the same number in the Glendale case.

I thank you for taking the time to look up this copy for me, as I know your many professional and political engagements must keep you very busy.

With best wishes for your nomination for Governor on the Democratic ticket, if you will have it, believe me to be,

Very truly yours,

(Signed) GEORGE R. E. GILCHRIST.

263 EXHIBIT No. 5 WITH AFFIDAVIT.

(This is a carbon copy of a form, similar to the three pleas hereinbefore copied, which is unexecuted, and to which is attached a blank affidavit and jurat.—Clerk.)

Decree Directing Taking of Testimony.

Hogg, their attorney, and by consent of said parties, by their said attorneys, it is ordered that all evidence not introduced by orders entered this day that may be desired to be introduced in this cause by the parties or any of them shall be introduced orally to the court in its presence, instead of by means of depositions taken and filed in the cause.

M. at the Court House in Philippi, be fixed as the time and place when and where the hearing of such evidence shall commence, and such hearings shall be continued from day to day and from time to time as the court may determine until concluded.

(Filed Jan. 2, 1912.)

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

v.

JOHN MITCHELL, of Indianapolis, Indiana, and a Citizen of the State of Indiana, Individually and as President of the United 264 Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; T. L. Lewis, of Bridgeport, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Vice-President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; W. B. Wilson, of Blossburg, Pennsylvania, and a Citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, Individually and as Secretary-Treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; William Green, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; D. H. Sullivan, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Vice-President of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; George W. Savage, of Columbus, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Secretary-Treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; A. R Watkins, of Yorkville, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; John Zelenka, of Warrenton, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Vice-President of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; Lee Rankin, of Dillonvale, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Individually and as Secretary-Treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; and Thomas Hughes, of Shadyside, Ohio, and a Citizen of the State of Ohio, Defendants.

Exceptions Taken by the Served Defendants to the Evidence Introduced by the Plaintiff in the Above-entitled Cause, to be Argued and Considered on the Final Hearing Thereof.

These exceptions will point out first those parts of the documentary evidence which the served defendants regard as exceptionable and concisely state the ground of exception, and will also designate by reference to the page or pages where found 265 those parts of the depositions taken in the cause that ought not, in the judgment of counsel for the served defendants, be considered, on the ground of their incompetency, irrelevancy or immateriality, as the case may be, setting forth also succinctly the ground of exception to such oral evidence.

I.

The said defendants except to the use as evidence of the sworn separate answer of the defendant A. R. Watkins, individually, and as president of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, which was filed May 26, 1908, for the following reasons:

(1) Because no statement or admission appearing in this separate answer can be used as evidence against the co-defendants of the said Watkins.

(2) Because the said answer has been, by the consent of the court and without objection on the part of the plaintiff, withdrawn from said case as an answer, and therefore it only has the force and effect at the most of an affidavit.

(3) Because there is nothing contained in the said answer in the way of evidence that bears upon any of the material issues of fact as raised by the pleadings in this cause.

II.

Also to the order entered in this cause June 26, 1908, extending to July 16, 1809, the time within which the remaining served defendants were required to file their answer in this cause, for the following reasons:

(1) An examination of the order discloses that it was entered by the consent of the parties to the cause.

(2) Because it does not appear in the record upon what ground the motion was predicated.

(3) Because it has no bearing upon any question raised by the pleadings herein.

III.

Also to the use as evidence of the joint and several answer of the defendants Lewis, Green, Sullivan, Savage, Watkins, Zelenka
266 and Rankin, filed July 13, 1908, for the following reasons:

(1) Because said answer has been withdrawn, and can not be treated as evidence for any purpose whatever in the cause, inasmuch as it is neither an affidavit nor necessary to prove an allegation in the said bill for any of the purposes of this suit.

(2) Because it is not competent as a matter of evidence, as there is nothing to give it the character of evidence.

IV.

Also the use as evidence of the separate answer of the defendant Green, filed July 13, 1908, for the reasons stated under exception No. III.

V.

Also to the use as evidence of the order entered in this cause July 13, 1908, filing the answer last referred to, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the said order is already a part of the record.

(2) Because it does not possess the character of evidencee for any purpose of this suit.

VI.

Also to the use as evidence of the sworn separate answer as amended of the defendant Watkins, accompanied by his own affidavit and those of Charles E. Hogg and Uriah Barnes, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the said answer was only tendered and never filed in said cause.

(2) There is nothing contained in said answer that can be treated as evidence in this cause bearing upon any of the issues in the suit.

3. The affidavits of said Hogg and Barnes can not be used as testimony in the cause for any purpose.

267 (4) Any and all of the documents under this head are immaterial, irrelevant and incompetent.

VII.

Also to the use as evidence of the order entered herein on August 20, 1908, tendering and asking leave to file the sworn amended answer of said Watkins, accompanied by the affidavit of himself and those of said Charles E. Hogg and Uriah Barnes, for the same reasons assigned under exception No. VI.

VIII.

Also to the use as evidence of the order entered in this cause July 22, 1910, withdrawing the separate answer of the defendants Green and Sullivan, and the original and amended answers of Watkins, and the joint and several answer of all the served defendants, for the following reasons:

(1) Because said order is already a part of the record.

(2) Because it does not possess the characteristics of testimony.

(3) Because it was entered with*o*ht objection from the plaintiff, who was present in court at the time by its counsel.

(4) Because the reason or ground of withdrawal does not appear in the record, but will be stated by affidavit at the hearing, and of which the plaintiff's counsel is already advised.

IX.

Also to the use as evidence of the order entered December 15, 1908, containing the motion of the served defendants to dissolve in part and modify the temporary injunction awarded herein, for the following reasons:

(1) Because said order is already a part of the record in the cause.
(2) Because said order does not possess the characteristics of evidence for any purpose herein.

X.

Also to the use as evidence of the order entered December 15, 1908, deferring further proceedings in the cause until the 268 further order of the court, pending the court's decision upon said motion to dissolve in part and modify said injunction of May 26, 1908, for the following reasons:
(1) Because said order is already a matter of record and its introduction in evidence is unnecessary.
(2) Because the said order is not evidence for any purpose in this cause.
(3) Because the ground which actuated the court to defer further proceedings in the cause is not set forth in the record.

XI.

Also to the use as evidence of the opinion of Alston G. Dayton, Judge, filed September 21, 1909, overruling said motion to dissolve in part and modify said injunction, for the following reasons:
(1) Because said opinion is already part of the record.
(2) Because it can not be treated as evidence for any purpose whatever.

XII.

Also to the use as evidence of the order entered October 6, 1909, overruling said motion of the served defendants to dissolve in part and modify said injunction of May 26, 1908, and directing further proceedings in said cause to be resumed, for the following reasons:
(1) Because said order is already a part of the record in the case.
(2) Because it can not be used as evidence for any purpose whatever herein.

XIII.

Also to the use as evidence of those parts of the record mentioned and described in the memorandum of counsel for the served defendants, filed November 20, 1909, in the matter of their appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals from the order of this court overruling their motion made December 15, 1908, to dissolve in part and modify the injunction of May 26, 1908, adding to the said parts of 269 the record mentioned in said memorandum the affidavits filed by the plaintiff on its application for the injunction, for the following reasons:
(1) Because these matters already are a part of the record in this cause.
(2) Because none of said documents can be used as evidence for any purpose.

XIV.

Also to the use of the order of November 20, 1909, extending the time for filing the record with the clerk of the Circuit Court of Appeals, for the following reasons:

(1) Because said order is already a part of the record.

(2) Because it can not be used as testimony for any purpose in this cause.

(3) Because the ground upon which the court extended the time is not made to appear in the record.

XV.

Also to the use as evidence of the order entered April 15, 1910, showing the dismissal of said appeal, and containing the mandate of the Circuit Court of Appeals to this court directing that such further proceedings be had in the said cause by way of execution as according to right and justice and the laws of the United States ought to be had, the said appeal notwithstanding, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the said order is already a part of the record.

(2) Because the said order and mandate can not be treated as evidence bearing upon any of the issues or questions arising upon the record.

XVI.

Also to the use as evidence of the plaintiff's written motion filed January 14, 1908, in open court at Parkersburg, the time originally set for the hearing of the plaintiff's motion for an injunction, wherein plaintiff, as a preliminary to contempt proceedings and in laying the foundation thereof, set forth in the motion and in the affidavits filed in support thereof that the served defendants,
270 some or all of them, were in defiance of the restraining order entered October 24, 1907, still endeavoring to unionize plaintiff's mine and endeavoring to have plaintiff's employees join the union while still in plaintiff's employ, in breach of plaintiff's contractual rights with its said employees, for the following reasons:

(1) Because said documents are already a part of the record in the cause, having been filed herein.

(2) Because these affidavits can not be treated as evidence upon the final hearing of the cause.

(3) Because the matters set forth in said affidavits, if they be true, arose after the institution of this suit, and therefore can not be treated as testimony here.

XVII.

Also to the use as evidence of the affidavit of E. T. Hitchman, dated January 11, 1908, including therewith accompanying exhibits numbered 1 to 29, inclusive, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the said affidavit is already on file in this cause.

(2) Because neither the affidavit nor exhibits filed therewith can be treated as evidence for any purpose on the final hearing of said cause.

XVIII.

Also to the use as evidence of the affidavits of Wayne Archer and B. F. Marling, each of which bears date January 11, 1908, for the following reasons:

(1) Said affidavits are already filed.

(2) They can not be treated as evidence for any purpose in this cause.

XIX.

Also to the use as evidence of the transcript of the record in the Circuit Court of Appeals, on appeal of this cause, the motion of the appellee to dismiss the appeal, the opinion of the court thereon, and the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals entered therein,
271 all duly certified in manner to conform to the provisions of section 905 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for the following reasons:

(1) Because each and all of said documents are already matter of record.

(2) Because they can not be treated as evidence for any purpose in this cause, as they do not bear upon any issue or question arising herein.

XX.

Also to the use as evidence of the stipulation between the attorneys of the plaintiff and the served defendants that all evidence not introduced by orders entered on the said 5th day of November, 1910, may be introduced by the parties orally to the court in its presence, instead of by means of depositions taken and filed in the cause, for the following reasons:

(1) Because said stipulation is already a matter of record.

(2) Because it is not competent as evidence.

XXI.

Also to the use as evidence of the "Proceedings of the Eighteenth Annual Convention of the United Mine Workers of America, held in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana, January 15 to 22, inclusive, 1907," for the following reasons:

(1) Because said proceedings consist of a printed volume of several hundred pages and contains nothing applicable to any of the issues or questions arising herein.

(2) Because in the introduction of a document like this it is the duty of the party introducing it to designate the parts thereof which he desires to use as evidence, to avoid encumbering the record and to give the opposite party an opportunity to contest the competency of the parts desired to be introduced.

(3) Because if the parts desired to be used are those contained in the bill as excerpts therefrom they are admitted to be true, and there is no issue created in the pleadings to which the evidence may be applied.

272 XXII.

Also to the use as evidence of the "Proceedings of the Ninth Annual Convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, held at Wheeling, W. Va., March 14, 15, 16, 18 and 19, 1907," for the reasons assigned under exception No. XXI.

XXIII.

Also to the use as evidence of the brief for appellants in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, Case No. 9409, on appeal from an order of this court overruling the motion to modify the injunction, which is marked "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 6," for the following reason: that the said brief can not be used as evidence for any purpose in this cause, as it possesses none of the characteristics of documentary evidence. It is not evidence.

XXIV.

Also to the use as evidence of the original bill filed by the Glendale Coal Company against John Mitchell and others in this court October 26, 1907, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the allegations in the bill of the Glendale Coal Company, a corporation, in a separate and distinct suit from the above cause, can not be used as evidence on behalf of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company.

(2) Because an answer has been filed in said Glendale case positively denying the material allegations of the bill, and therefore nothing contained in said bill can be offered as evidence here.

(3) Because the Glendale Coal Company, being a corporation separate and distinct from the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, another corporation, any acts done with reference to the property of the former company can not be used as evidence in support of other acts alleged to have been done with reference to the property of the latter.

XXV.

Also to the use as evidence of the original summons in the Glendale case, including the return of service as to each of the defendants, designated and identified as exhibits Nos. 8, 9 and 10 of the 273 plaintiff's documentary evidence, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the summons is a mere act of the clerk, and the return that of the marshal, and therefore such acts can not be treated as evidence against the served defendants for any purpose.

(2) Because a summons cannot be used as evidence, nor the return thereof, for any purpose.

XXVI.

Also to the use as evidence of the restraining order of October 24, 1907, and the bond and its approval, in the Glendale case, for the following reasons:

(1) Because these documents can not be treated as evidence for any purpose.

(2) Because they do not bear upon any issue or question in this cause.

(3) Because the Glendale case is that of a separate and distinct corporation and the matters connected with its business, either in or out of court, can not be tr-ated as evidence in favor of another corporation against the defendants, even if it had the character of evidence, which it does not possess.

XXVII.

Also to the use as evidence of the restraining order of January 14, 1908, and the bond and its approval, in the Glendale case, for the reasons stated under exceptions Nos. XXV. and XXVI.

XXVIII.

Also to the use as evidence of the temporary injunction and the affidavits read in support of the bill May 26, 1908, in the Glendale case, and the bond given, with the approval of the clerk, for the reasons stated under exceptions Nos. XXV., XXVI. and XXVII.

XXIX.

Also to the use as evidence of the seven items mentioned in an order entered in the Glendale case November 5, 1910, the 274 subject matter of the items being the answers filed in the Glendale case and subsequently withdrawn, for the reasons stated under exceptions XXV. and XXVI.

XXX.

Also to the use as evidence of the four items mentioned in an order entered in the Glendale case November 5, 1910, the subject matter being the motion to modify the injunction in that case and the subsequent action of the court in overruling that motion, for the reasons stated under Nos. XXV. and XXVI.

XXXI.

Also to the use as evidence of the joint and several answer of T. L. Lewis and others in the Glendale case, filed in this court September 5, 1910, for the following reasons:

(1) Because of the reasons stated under Nos. XXV. and XXVI.

(2) Because there are no admissions or statements in said answer that can be used as evidence herein.

XXXII.

Also to the use as evidence of the replication to the answer of the served defendants in the Glendale case, for the reasons stated under exceptions Nos. XXV. and XXVI., and for the reason that a replication can not be treated as evidence, it being the mere act of the plaintiff in making up the issue in the cause.

XXXIII.

Also to the use as evidence of the order entered November 5, 1910, suspending further proceedings in the Glendale case pending the final decree of this court, or the appellate court, in this cause, for the following reasons:

(1) Because it does not bear on any question or issue arising in this cause.

(2) For other numerous and obvious reasons apparent to the court.

275 XXXIV.

Also to the use as evidence of the bill filed by the Richland Coal Company against John Mitchell and others in this court October 24, 1907, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the Richland Coal Company is a separate and distinct corporation from the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, and any acts done with reference to the property of the former can not be used as evidence in favor of the latter.

(2) Because the matters contained in said bill are mere ex parte declarations of a corporation through its representative or agent in the draft of said bill, and the allegations therein cannot be used, upon any ground, as evidence against the served defendants or any of them in this cause.

(3) Because the allegations in said bill are all positively denied by the answer filed in said Richland case.

XXXV.

Also to the use as evidence of the restraining order entered October 24, 1907, in the Richland case, in this court, and the bond and its approval, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the said restraining order is based upon the allegations of the plaintiff in said bill, before any service had upon the defendants, and was therefore an ex parte act as to them.

(2) Because the said bond and its approval were acts of the same character.

(3) Because of other obvious reasons apparent to the court.

XXVI.

Also to the use as evidence of the summons for the defendants in the Richland case in this court, together with the returns of service as to each defendant served, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the summons is a mere ex parte act of the clerk.
(2) Because the summons can not be used as evidence for any purpose in this case.
276 (3) Because it is a summons issued in a separate and distinct suit.
(4) Because of other obvious reasons apparent to the court.

XXXVII.

Also to the use as evidence of the temporary injunction awarded April 17, 1909, and the affidavit read in support of the injunction, in the Richland case in this court, for the following reasons:
(1) Because the issuance of said temporary injunction is simply an act of the court in the course of its practice.
(2) Because the temporary injunction does not possess any of the characteristics of documentary evidence, and is incompetent as evidence for any purpose herein.
(3) For other obvious reasons apparent to the court.

XXXVIII.

Also to the use as evidence of "Cotts' Exhibit No. 1," purporting to be a tabulation from the books of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company for the period from May 2, 1903, to April 2, 1903, and from May 23 to June 23, 1903, for the following reasons:
(1) Because the data contained in these statements were in large part obtained second-hand from other parties and are not shown to be authentic.
(2) Because the production of the mines in the year 1903 is not material, nor does it bear on any issue or question raised by the pleadings in this case.

XXXIX.

Also to the use as evidence of "Cotts' Exhibit No. 2," purporting to be a memorandum prepared by the witness from the books of the plaintiff relating to the tonnage production of coal from March 20, 1904, to April 24, 1904, and from June 15, 1904, to July 15, 1904, for the reasons stated under exception No. XXXVIII.

277

XL.

Also to the use as evidence of "Cotts' Exhibit No. 3," purporting to be a memorandum prepared from the books of the plaintiff covering the tonnage production of coal from March 16 to April 16, 1906, and from June 12, to July 12, 1906, for the reasons stated under exception XXXVIII.

XLI.

Also to the use as evidence of "Cotts' Exhibit No. 4," purporting to be a statement showing the tonnage production of coal by the plaintiff for the years 1902, 1903, and thence on to and including all the intervening years to the month of November, 1910, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the tonnage production for the years preceding 1907, is not material and does not throw any light upon the questions involved in this suit.

(2) Because the data contained in said exhibit are not shown to be authentic and derived from the personal knowledge of the witness.

XLII.

Also to the use as evidence of "Cotts' Exhibit No. 5," purporting to be a card evidencing form of contract between the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company and its employees beginning with January, 1908, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the said form of contract was adopted after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because if such a contract were made it could not operate to the prejudice of the defendants in their efforts peaceably to promote the membership of their organization.

(3) Because as appears from the evidence in this case it is not the contract made with the men prior to the institution of this suit.

XLIII.

Also to the use as evidence of "Cotts' Exhibit No. 6," purporting to contain a list of the names of plaintiff's employees during the years 1908, 1909, and to December, 1910, for the reason that 278 the number of men employed by plaintiff is not material to the matters in controversy in this suit.

XLIV.

Also to the use as evidence of "Koch's Exhibit No. 3," purporting to be the official mining scale of the United Mine Workers of America of the Pan Handle District of West Virginia in effect April 1, 1903, and ending March 31, 1904, for the following reasons:

(1) Because what the mining scale was in 1903 and 1904 is not material herein.

(2) What the mining scale was at any time is not material as to any issue or question raised by the record in this case.

XLV.

Also to the use as evidence of "Koch's Exhibit No. 4," the character of which is described in volume 1 of plaintiff's evidence, beginning at the bottom of page 170 and continuing nearly to the bottom of page 172, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the agreement between the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company and J. C. McKinley for his own company can not have any bearing upon any issue raised in this case.

(2) Because the matters referred to in the exhibit occurred long prior to the institution of this suit.

XLVI.

Also to the use as evidence of "Koch's Exhibit No. 5," purporting to be a scale for the month of April, 1904, as shown in volume 1 of plaintiff's evidence at pages 172 and 173, for the reason that this scale adopted in 1904 can have no bearing upon any issue or question raised in this case.

XLVII.

Also to the use as evidence of "Koch's Exhibit No. 6," purporting to be "Official Mining Scale between the Operators and the United Mine Workers of America for the Pan Handle District of West Virginia, in effect April 1, 1904, and ending March 31, 1906," and also to which is appended four rules marked respectively Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, and all of which appears on pages 174 and 279 175 of volume 1 of plaintiff's evidence, for the following reasons:

(1) Because it is not material what the scale was in the years 1904, 1905 and 1906 as to any questions arising in this suit.

(2) Because no evidence of a mining scale for any purpose is properly admissible as evidence in this case.

XLVIII.

Also to the use as evidence of "Koch's Exhibit No. 7," purporting to be a scale between the plaintiff's employees and the plaintiff, in effect April 1, 1906, and ending March 31, 1908, together with the regulations applying to such employment, as fully shown in volume 1 of plaintiff's evidence, beginning at the bottom of page 175 and continuing to the bottom of page 177, for the reason that none of the matters contained in this exhibit is relevant to any issue or question arising in this case.

XLIX.

Also to the use as evidence of "Koch's Exhibit No. 8," purporting to be "Official Mining Scale of Association of Pittsburg Vein Operators of Ohio for their mines in Belmont, Harrison and Jefferson Counties and the United Mine Workers, in effect April 1, 1906, and ending March 31, 1908," for the following reasons:

(1) Anything contained in said exhibit is foreign to the issues in this cause.

(2) For other obvious reasons to be assigned on the hearing.

L.

Also to the use as evidence of "McKinley's Exhibit No. 1," purporting to be a report of a joint conference of coal miners and operators of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, held in 1906, at Indianapolis, Indiana, January 25 to February 2 and March 20 to 29 of this year, for the following reasons:

(1) Because what transpired at said conference in nowise relates to any of the issues or questions arising in this case.

280 (2) Because the matters in said exhibit occurred prior to the institution of this suit and are in nowise connected with the object or purpose of this suit.

LI.

Also to the use as evidence of "McKinley's Exhibit No. 2," purporting to be a report of a joint conference of the Illinois Coal Operators' Association and the United Mine Workers of America, District 12, held at Springfield, Illinois, May May 17, to June 1, 1906, for the reasons stated under exception No. L.

LII.

Also to the use as evidence of "McKinley's Exhibit No. 3," purporting to be report of a joint conference of coal miners and operators of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, held at Toledo, Ohio, April 14 to 17, 1908, for the following reasons:

(1) Because said matters reported in said exhibit occurred after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because there is nothing therein that relates to any issue in this case.

LIII.

Also to the use as evidence of "McKinley's Exhibit No. 4," purporting to be a report of the proceedings of a joint conference of coal operators and coal miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, held at Cincinnati, March 8 to 29, 1910, for the reasons assigned under exception No. LII.

LIV.

Also to the use as evidence of "McKinley's Exhibit No. 5," purporting to be a report of President T. L. Lewis to the Twentieth Annual Convention of the United Mine Workers, for the following reasons:

(1) Because it purports to be proceedings which originated after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because there is not designated any part of said proceedings as bearing upon the issues in this cause, and the report is too voluminous to require search to be made by the court and counsel in the cause.

281 (3) Because, so far as counsel is able to ascertain, there is nothing in this exhibit bearing on the issues in this case or any of them.

LV.

Also to the use as evidence of "McKinley's Exhibit No. 6," purporting to be the report of Vice-President John T. White to the Twentieth Annual Convention of the United Mine Workers of America for the year 1909, for the reasons assigned under exception No. LIV.

LVI.

Also to the use as evidence of "McKinley's Exhibit No. 7," purporting to be the report of W. D. Ryan to the Twentieth Annual Convention of the United Mine Workers of America, for the reasons assigned under exception No. LIV.

LVII.

Also to the use as evidence of "McKinley's Exhibit No. 8," purporting to be official mining scale of Association of Pittsburg Vein Operators of Ohio for their mines in Belmont, Harrison and Jefferson Counties, Ohio, and the United Mine Workers of America, being wage scale for 1908, for the following reasons:

(1) Because any wage scale for the year 1908 does not bear on any issue in this cause or question arising therein.

(2) Because any wage scale between the United Mine Workers of America and other persons can not bear upon any issue in this case.

And as a further reason applying to McKinley's exhibits Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, it does not appear that they are authentic, or are true copies of the original; and, further, it does not appear that the original can not be produced.

LVIII.

Also to the use as evidence of "Cotts' Exhibit No. 7," purporting to be the "Tonnage Hitchman Coal & Coke Co., 1910," as supplementary to "Cotts' Exhibit No. 4," and fully shown on pages 3 and 4 of volume 2 of plaintiff's evidence, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the tonnage of the mine of 1910 is entirely foreign to the issue.

282 (2) Because the tonnage at any time is irrelevant, not tending to prove any of the issues between the parties.

LXIX.

Also to the use as evidence of "Cotts' Exhibit No. 8," purporting to be a list of the names of plaintiff's employees with whom contracts were made by the printed card, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the card system was not adopted until the first of January, 1908, some months after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because it does not represent the contract actually made prior to that time.

LX.

Also to the use as evidence of "Pickett's Exhibit No. 1," purporting to be "Notice to the miners of the Hitchman mine of a mass meeting on Friday evening at 6:30 P. M. at Nick Hiles' baseball ground for the purpose of discussing the principles of organization," which fully appears in volume 2 of the plaintiff's evidence at pages 11 and 12, for the following reasons:

(1) Because it is not known who placed the card at the point from which it was taken.

(2) Because it is not connected with any of the defendants.

(3) If it were so connected, it does not tend to prove any unlawful act or charge made in the bill.

LXI.

Also to the use as evidence of "Pickett's Exhibit No. 2," purporting to be a notice similar to that contained in Pickett's exhibit No. 1, for the reasons stated under exception No. LX.

LXII.

Also to the use as evidence of "Albert Jarrett's Exhibit No. 1," purporting to be a charter issued to the employees of the 283 Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, the contents of which appear in volume 2 of plaintiff's evidence at pages 93, 94 and 95, for the following reasons:

(1) Because what the Hitchman employees did after the company started to run non-union is obtaining an independent charter of their own does not bear upon any issue or question raised by the pleadings in this cause.

(2) Because the defendants or any of them are not connected with the matters to which said exhibits related.

LXIII.

Also to the use as evidence of "McKinley's Exhibit No. 9," purporting to be an official mining scale in force from April 1, 1910, to March 31, 1912, for the following reasons:

(1) Because it relates to a matter transpiring after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because what the mining scale was among the United Mine Workers, or even the employees of the plaintiff, is not material as to any of the issues raised in the pleadings.

LXIV.

Also to the use as evidence of what purports to be three letters addresed to J. C. McKinley, bearing date respectively, August 25, 1908, September 4, 1908, and September 14, 1908, each of which letters is signed by William Green, and all of which are found in volume 2 of plaintiff's evidence at pages 189 to 195, inclusive, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the said documents relate to matters occurring after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because they contain nothing material or relevant to any issue in this case.

LXV.

Also to the use as evidence of "Austin's Exhibit No. 1," purporting to be a notice of a meeting at Nick Hiles' baseball ground, as shown in volume 2 of plaintiff's evidence at pages 233 and 234, for the following reasons:

284 (1) Because none of the defendants are connected with this notice.

(2) It does not appear that the notice related to any unlawful act on the part of the defendants or any of them.

(3) It does not appear that the notice contains anything bearing on the issues in this case.

LXVI.

Also to the use as evidence of "Austin's Exhibit No. 2," purporting to be another notice of the same character as that contained in his exhibit No. 1, for the reasons stated under exception No. LXV.

LXVII.

Also to the use as evidence of "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1," purporting to be "Proceedings of Joint Conference of Coal Operators and Coal Miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, held March 8 to 29, 1910," for the following reasons:

(1) Because the matters contained in said exhibit transpired long after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because it does not appear what part of said exhibit is to be used and we are left to determine what part thereof is to become evidence in this case.

(3) Because there is nothing contained in said exhibit bearing on the issues in this cause.

LXVIII.

Also to the use as evidence of "Savage's Exhibit No. 1," introduced by plaintiff on cross-examination of the witness, purporting to be a copy of the strike order by the Ohio miners in January, 1911, as shown in the served defendants' evidence at pages 47 and 48, for the following reasons:

(1) Because said exhibit contains matter transpiring after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because it has no bearing whatever upon any issue or question arising herein.

LXIX.

Also to the use as evidence of "Lewis' Exhibit No. 1," purporting to be the report of the proceedings of the annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America held in 1911; introduced on cross examination, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the matters therein transpired long after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because what it contains does not bear on any issue or question in this cause.

LXX.

Also to the use as evidence of "Lewis' Exhibit No. 2," introduced on cross-examination, purporting to be a copy of the United Mine Workers' Journal of January 26, 1911, on the front page of which there purports to be given the picture of John Mitchell, ex-president, and the expenditures for the year 1910, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the matter contained in said exhibit arose after the institution of this suit.

(2) For other apparent reasons to be assigned on the hearing of the cause.

LXXI.

Also to the use as evidence of "Lewis' Exhibit No. 3," introduced on cross-examination, purporting to be a copy of the United Mine Workers' Journal of January 26, 1911, as shown in the served defendants' evidence at pages 284 and 285, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the matter contained in said exhibit occurred in 1911, after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because it does not bear upon any of the issues in the cause.

LXXII.

Also to the use as evidence of "Lewis' Exhibit No. 4," introduced on cross-examination, purporting to be a copy of the United Mine Workers' Journal of Thursday, January 26, 1911, as shown 286 in the served defendants' evidence at page 285, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the matter contained in said exhibit transpired after the institution of this suit.

(2) Because the said exhibit contains nothing relevant to any issue or question in this cause.

(3) Because the matter therein contained is not duly authenticated, and it does not connect the defendants therewith.

Before proceeding with the exceptions hereinafter taken to certain parts of the evidence introduced in chief by the plaintiff, contained in two volumes, and to certain parts of the evidence introduced by the served defendants, and brought out on cross examination, contained in one volume, it seems proper to concisely state the issues or questions raised by the pleadings in the cause, that the court may the more readily determine whether or not the evidence excepted to ought to be admitted or the exceptions sustained.

Statement of Issues or Questions Involved.

(a) It is admitted, as alleged in the bill, by the answers of the served defendants that the plaintiff's mine is equipped and has shipping facilities, is engaged in mining coal and shipping the same, and that the product of its mine is 500 tons per day.

(b) That prior to April 1, 1906, plaintiff operated its mine on a union basis, and that after that date it has run its mine non-union, and that the strike of April, 1906, was ordered by the association.

(c) That the plaintiff proposed to its employees that they continue at work for it until the signing of the scale with other operators, and that it would then pay them any additional sum earned between April, 1, 1906, and the signing of the scale, provided the scale when signed should provide for an advance in wages on work done on and after April 1, 1906.

As to the matters above designated (a), (b) and (c), no evidence is admissible one way or the other, because the allegations made by the plaintiff are admitted to be true.

(d) An issue is made by the pleadings that the United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate asociations or branches, 287 by its officers, agents, employees and servants, have sought and are now seeking, by inducements, threats and intimidation, to cause the employees of plaintiff to leave its service, and to cause others who have engaged to enter plaintiff's service to break their engagements and not work for plaintiff, and to prevent others from working for plaintiff, and to compel plaintiff to employ none but persons who are members of the United Mine Workers.

(e) It is in issue also whether the United Mine Workers of America is a secret voluntary association; because it is averred that it is by the plaintiff, and denied by the served defendants.

(f) It is averred that the United Mine Workers' Association has certain express objects, some lawful and others unlawful; and it is denied that said association is endeavoring to carry out any unlawful purpose, and it is denied that any of its purposes is unlawful; so that the issue is raised as to whether or not the association or any of its purposes or objects be unlawful.

(g) It is also in issue whether or not the defendants have agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, to unlawfully persuade, entice and procure plaintiff's employees to break and disregard their several contracts with plaintiff, all with the avowed purpose of compelling plaintiff to unionize its plant without its consent; and it is also in issue as to whether or not to such end they have unlawfully and maliciously agreed, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy to compel, by threats, intimidation and other unlawful means, plaintiff's employees to join the union.

(h) It is also in issue whether or not defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out and are about to finally accomplish, namely: to cause plaintiff's mine to be shut down, its plant to remain idle, its contracts to be broken and unfulfilled, until such time as plaintiff shall unionize its mine and surrender the control and management of its business to the United Mine Workers' organization.

(i) It is also in issue whether or not the defendants knew prior to the institution of this suit that each of plaintiff's employees
288 should not become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and that if they did become members thereof their employment with plaintiff should thereby cease and determine so far as their working for plaintiff is concerned, and that to this effect each of the said employees had signed a contract with the plaintiff.

The above statements, designated respectively by the letters (a) to (i) inclusive, embody substantially what is not in issue and what is in issue between the parties to this suit; that is, the statements from (d) to (i) inclusive present the only questions the court is called upon to decide in this cause.

LXXIII.

Also to that part of the deposition of the witness Edward T. Hitchman, appearing in plaintiff's evidence, volume 1, on pages 37, 38, 40, 41, 42 and 43, detailing the witness' experience with union labor while employed by his company or companies, both in Pennsylvania and West Virginia, for the following reasons:

(1) Because all of the matters referred to are foreign to the issues raised by the pleadings.

(2) Because it is not material what the witness' experience was with union labor, as it can have no bearing at all for any purpose of this suit; it throws no light upon the issues.

(3) Because if the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. desired to run its mine upon a union basis the reasons for so doing were purely a matter of its own concern, as the plaintiff had the right under the law, without assigning any reason, to discontinue the use of union labor and return to non-union labor; motive in a case of this sort is wholly immaterial.

LXXIV.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Hitchman appearing at pages 46 and the few pages following, relating to the number of days the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company was idle by reason of the strike prior to its resumption on a non-union basis, for the reasons assigned under exception No. LXXIII.

LXXV.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Hitchman appearing at page 50 and 51 as to what took place between the witness 289 as the representative of the plaintiff and the men entering its employment, that they were to run only as non-union, for the following reasons:

(1) Because all these conversations are mere hearsay.

(2) Because such a condition, if any exists, could not affect the rights of the defendants to pursue peaceable methods to secure members from the employees of the plaintiff.

LXXVI.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Hitchman appearing on pages 53 and 54 as to conversations between witness and the general manager of the plaintiff, Mr. Koch, and Mr. Green, for the following reasons:

(1) Because there has been no proof of any conspiracy existing between the defendants to this suit, as alleged in the bill.

(2) Because a conversation had between Mr. Green and the witness and Mr. Koch could not be used to affect the other defendants, who were absent at the time.

LXXVII.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Hitchman appearing on page 55, wherein it is sought by means of this evidence to introduce certain newspaper clippings as evidence in this cause, for the reason that this is hearsay evidence, and therefore incompetent.

LXXVIII.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Hitchman appearing on pages 61, 62, 63 and subsequent pages, volume 1 of plaintiff's evidence, setting forth the reasons why plaintiff unionized its mine in 1903, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the motive for such action has nothing to do with the issues here.

(2) Because it is otherwise incompetent for reasons to be assigned at the hearing.

LXXIX.

Also to that part of the deposition of R. J. Cotts appearing on pages 84-91 inclusive, volume 1 of plaintiff's evidence, showing the tonnage production of the plaintiff during the period stated, for the reason that the productive capacity of the plaintiff's mine is stated in the bill and admitted by the answer, and therefore the evidence does not relate to any issue involved in this case.

LXXX.

Also to that part of the testimony of said Cotts appearing on pages 91 and 92, 93 and 94, as to the price per ton of coal, for the reason that the evidence does not bear upon any issue raised in the case.

LXXXI.

Also to that part of the evidence of said Cotts appearing on page 95, showing strike occurrences during the period named, for the reason that said evidence is not material.

LXXXII.

Also to that part of the evidence of said Cotts at pages 99 and 100 in which the written contract between the plaintiff and its employees beginning January 1, 1908, is recited, for the following reasons:

(1) Because the card itself is the best evidence.

(2) The contract was made after the institution of this suit.

LXXXIII.

Also to that part of the deposition of W. H. Koch appearing on page 123, volume 1 of plaintiff's evidence, in answer to the fourth and fifth questions from the top of the page, for the reason that said testimony does not bear upon the issues here.

LXXXIV.

Also to that part of the testimony of said Koch appearing on pages 124 and 125, in answer to each of the questions ap-291 pearing on said pages, for the reason that the said evidence is foreign to any of the issues raised in this cause.

LXXXV.

Also to all the testimony of said Koch appearing on pages 126, 132, inclusive, so far as it relates to strikes and losses incident thereto sustained by the plaintiff, for the following reasons:

(1) Because it does not bear upon any of the issues arising in this cause.

(2) Because it all arose prior to the institution of this suit, and does not relate to any of the acts or matters charged against the defendants in the bill.

LXXXVI.

Also to that part of the testimony of said Koch appearing at pages 172 and 173, purporting to be a recital of the document filed by the plaintiff as "Koch's Exhibit No. 5," for the same reason assigned under the exception to said document heretofore made.

LXXXVII.

Also to that part of said Koch's deposition appearing at pages 174 and 175, volume 1 of plaintiff's evidence, which purports to be a recital of what appears in "Koch's Exhibit No. 6," for the reasons assigned under the exception heretofore taken to said exhibit.

LXXXVIII.

Also to that part of said Koch's evidence appearing at pages 175 and 176 and 177, containing a recital of what appears in "Koch's Exhibit No. 7," for the reasons assigned under the exceptions heretofore taken to said exhibit.

LXXXIX.

Also to that part of said Koch's evidence appearing at page 184, in answer to the last question on said page, for the reason that any agreement or understanding between the plaintiff and its 292 men as to conditions under which they were to work could not affect the lawful rights of the defendants.

XC.

Also to that part of said Koch's evidence appearing on page 214, relating to matters pertaining to the business of the Glendale Coal Company, for the reason that the same is entirely foreign to the issues in this case.

XCI.

Also to that part of the testimony of E. C. Pickett appearing on page 224, in answer to the second question on that page, for the reason that the same is hearsay, nor does it relate to any issue in the case.

XCII.

Also to that part of said Pickett's evidence in answer to the first and second questions on page 225, for the reason that same does not relate to any issue herein.

XCIII.

Also to that part of the testimony of John Oliver appearing on page 258, volume 1 of plaintiff's evidence, relating to the strike of 1904, for the following reasons:

(1) Because it is a matter that arose long prior to the institution of this suit, and is in nowise connected with it.

(2) Because the testimony is wholly immaterial.

XCIV.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Cotts appearing at page 3 and 4 of volume 2 of plaintiff's evidence, in answer to the last question on page 3, for the reason that the matter referred to originated after the institution of this suit.

XCV.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Pickett appearing on page 9, in answer to the third question from the top of the 293 page; for the reason that the evidence is immaterial to any issue raised in this case.

XCVI.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Pickett on pages 9 and 10 in answer to the last question beginning on page 9, for the reason that the same does not relate to any issue herein.

XCVII.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Pickett appearing on pages 11 and 12 in answer to the last question on page 11 for the following reasons:

(1) Because the defendants are not connected with the notice.

(2) Because it does not tend to show any unlawful act of the defendants.

XCVIII.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Pickett appearing on page 12 and 13 in answer to the last question on page 12, for the reason stated in No. XCVII.

XCIX.

Also to that part of the deposition of Wm. M. Daugherty appearing on pages 22 and 23, in answer to the last question on page 22 and the first question on page 23, for the reason that the method of organizing the plaintiff's mine in 1903 is not material to the issues herein.

C.

Also to that part of the deposition of said Daugherty appearing in answer to the last question on page 45 and to each and every question on pages 46 and 47 down to and including the answer to the third question from the top on page 47, for the reason that the matter is wholly immaterial as to the issues in this case.

CI.

Also to that part of the deposition of Albert Jarrett appearing at pages 93, 94 and 95, containing a recital of the charter of 294 Independent Mine Workers of West Virginia, and the answer to the first question at the top of page 95, for the reason that it does not apply to any of the issues in this case.

CII.

Also to that part of the testimony of the witness McKinley at page 125, in answer to each of the five questions at the top of said page, for the reason that the same is foreign to any issue raised by the pleadings in this case.

CIII.

Also to that part of the deposition of said McKinley appearing at pages 150 and 151, in answer to the last question on page 150 and to the question propounded by the court on page 151, for the reason that the witness details an isolated case, and it does not bear upon any of the issues arising in this suit.

CIV.

Also to that part of said McKinley's evidence appearing on page 152, for the reasons stated under exception No. CIII.

CV.

Also to that part of the deposition of said McKinley in answer to the last question but one on page 176, and to the answer to the last question beginning on page 176, for the reason that it does not relate to any issue raised in this case.

CVI.

Also to that part of the deposition of said McKinley in answer to the first question at the top of page 177, and the second question from the top, for the reason that the same is incompetent and irrelevant.

CVII.

Also to that part of the testimony of said McKinley appearing on page 181, including the last question on said page and the answer thereto on page 182, for the reason that the same does not bear on any issue in this case.

295 CVIII.

Also to that part of said McKinley's evidence in answer to the last question on page 186 and the first question at the top of page 187, for the reason that it does not relate to any matter connected with this suit.

CIX.

Also to that part of the deposition of said McKinley in answer to the last question on page 187, for the reason that it is foreign to the issues in this case.

CX.

Also to that part of the testimony of John H. Sivert appearing in volume 2 of plaintiff's evidence, beginning with the second question from the bottom of page 249 and continuing thence through page 250 and page 251 down to and including the answer to the last question on page 252, for the reason that the said evidence does not apply to any of the issues or questions arising herein.

CXI.

Also to that part of the testimony of John Mooney, appearing in volume 2 of plaintiff's evidence, in answer to each and every question on pages 260 and 261; also the answers to the last three questions on page 262, the answer to each and every question on page 263, and the answer to the first question on page 265, for the reason that said testimony does not relate to any issue herein.

CXII.

Also to that part of the testimony of Robert Myers, appearing in volume 2, being the answers to each of the last five questions on page 277 and to each and every question on pages 278 and 279, for the reason that it does not relate to any issue herein.

CXIII.

Also to that part of the testimony of C. C. Rowand, appearing in volume 2, in answer to the last four questions on page 294 and the first two questions on page 295, for the reason that said testi-296 mony does not relate to any issue in this cause.

CXIV.

Also to that part of the testimony of E. A. Upstill, appearing in volume 2, in answer to each and every question on page 318 after the first two questions on said page; also the answers to each and every question on pages 319-333, inclusive, 335, 336, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344 and 345, for the reason that all of said testimony relates to a matter not mentioned in the bill, and such evidence has no bearing whatever upon any issue or question arising upon the record in this case.

Explanatory Statement.

Counsel for the served defendants respectfully requests the court to bear in mind, in passing on the foregoing exceptions, that the court reserved the matter of disposing of objectionable testimony until the final hearing of the case; so that all the testimony went in under objection, to be urged at the hearing. In this situation of the case, the served defendants, in the cross examination of the witnesses, were necessarily required to cross examine as to all matters brought out, not knowing what the court would reject and what it would retain for consideration as bearing on the issues or any of them. Therefore, wherever the foregoing exceptions are sustained such part of the evidence on cross-examination as relates to the part as to which such exceptions are sustained is not to be considered by the court. So wherever anything has been brought out in rebuttal by the served defendants relating to plaintiff's evidence excepted to and the exception thereto sustained, it will not be considered by the court, but will be treated as a part of the evidence, excepted to in each and every case where the exception to plaintiff's evidence is sustained by the court; and this the served defendants by counsel ask may be done.

The undersigned defendants therefore pray that their aforesaid exceptions to the evidence taken and filed in this cause may be allowed to them and to each of them, and that the parts of the evidence to which the said exceptions and each of them relate may not be considered by the court and that the same be stricken from the record in this case as evidence therein for the purpose of a final hearing of said cause, and that the injunction heretofore awarded in this case may be dissolved in toto, and that they have a decree for their 297 costs by them and each of them about the prosecution of said suit in their behalf incurred and expended.

Narrative of Testimony.

(Filed July 10, 1913.)

In the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE COMPANY, Plaintiff,
vs.
JOHN MITCHELL et als.

Amendments proposed by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company to the narrative lodged in the Clerk's Office of the said Court at Philippi, West Virginia, by the defendants, John Mitchell and 298 others, of the testimony of witnesses who testified upon the trial of said cause, and which narrative was prepared and filed by them under the provisions of equity rule 75 in perfecting an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit from the final decree entered in said cause on the 18th day of January, 1913.

EDWARD T. HITCHMAN.

Direct examination:

My name is Edward T. Hitchman, I reside in Wheeling, W. Va., my age is forty-three years and my business coal operator. Have been engaged in the coal business twenty-three years, nine years of that in West Virginia. Was engaged in business in Washington County, Pennsylvania, immediately prior to coming to West Virginia, and operated a coal mine there for about twelve years. My operations in Pennsylvania were in the Pittsburg District. Witness was asked whether in Pennsylvania he had any dealings with the United Mine Workers of America, and replied that he did not know whether they were called the United Mine Workers of America then or not, and that he was not able to answer that. Witness further testified that in Pennsylvania he ran a union and also a non-union mine, but that latterly he ran his mine non-union. When witness came to West Virginia he located at Benwood, and established the mine now known as the mine of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company. That was in 1901. The operations were begun there in the early summer of 1901. The opening up of the mine consumed some time, and it was in the early winter of 1902, or early in the winter of 1902, that they started to mine coal at that mine.

Counsel for defendants interrupted and asked the witness whether he shipped coal, to which witness replied: "We did not ship any." Counsel for defendants then asked "You began to mine?" to which witness replied, "Yes, sir, and we may have shipped a little; I do not know."

On further direct examination, witness was asked, "When you employed labor in the opening up of the mine, was that labor union labor—meaning labor contracted for through the United Mine Workers of America—or was it non-union labor—meaning labor not contracted for through the United Mine Workers of America?" and replied: "It was not contracted for through the United Mine Workers."

299 Witness was asked: "When you first started to mine coal was the labor you contracted, or the labor you employed, union or non-union?" and replied, "Non-union."

Following questions by the court, the witness said that the Hitchman mine was opened up non-union, and at first operated non-union.

Witness further testified on direct-examination that the mine was operated non-union until April, 1903. W. H. Koch is the General Manager of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, and witness was associated with him in a business way in opening up the Hitchman mine at Benwood. Mr. Koch came from Pennsylvania with witness in order to establish the Hitchman mine. Witness is and always has been President of the Board of Directors of the Hitchman Company. Mr. Koch was in charge of the operations in the opening up of the Hitchman mine, and has always been the General Manager. When the Hitchman Company first started to mine coal, it disposed of the coal mined by it to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. The Coal Company had a contract with the Baltimore & Ohio with reference to supplying coal to engines.

Counsel for defendants interrupted to inquire whether the contract was in writing or whether it was verbal, and upon the witness testifying that it was a written contract, counsel for defendants objected to witness testifying about a contract that was in writing.

Upon further direct examination the witness was asked to state to whom the Hitchman Company disposed of its product, and under what circumstances when the Hitchman Company was first put into operation in the mining of coal, and replied that his company disposed of the coal to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company under a contract that the railroad company had made with witness previous to the opening of the mine. Witness said that the daily supply furnished to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad was very small to commence with; that it practically commenced at nothing and gradually increased as the company could get it to them. Witness was asked: "Did the B. & O. at that time and has it since that time, and does it today at that place have any other coal station or method of getting coal except through its dealings with the Hitchman Company?"

300 And replied, "They don't get it any place else." Witness further testified that the Hitchman Company now supplies the B. & O. with engine coal and that its mine is the coaling station of the B. & O. Witness was then handed the certificate of incorporation of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; it was offered in evidence and over objection made by defendants' counsel, was admitted subject to such exception, and marked Hitchman Exhibit No. 1.

On further direct examination, witness testified that all of the incorporators whose names appeared on the certificate of incorporation referred to are living today except John F. Hosack, who is now deceased, and that since the incorporation of the company, E. T. Hitchman, W. H. Koch, John F. Hosack, E. A. Upstill, Howard Hazlett, Lawrence E. Sands and George R. E. Gilchrist, have been members of the Board of Directors; and that since the death of Mr. Hosack the Board of Directors has consisted of six members.

Witness is acquainted with the defendants, T. L. Lewis, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, and Lee Rankin; got acquainted with them along in the last nine years—has known some of them longer than others.

Witness further testified that in 1902 he was interested in operating a coal mine near Mt. Pleasant in Jefferson County, Ohio; that in the main the same persons were interested with him in the ownership of that mine as were interested with him in the ownership of the Hitchman mine. The Mt. Pleasant mine was opened up by witness and those associated with him as its owners.

Witness was asked: "Did you while you were in charge of the Mt. Pleasant mine have any business dealings with T. L. Lewis, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins and Lee Rankin?" and replied, that he had. Witness further testified that he transacted business with them regarding the union; that that mine in Ohio was run union, and that they represented the United Mine Workers, and that witness had dealings with them—some of them—well all of them, witness thinks.

Witness says that the Hitchman mine was run non-union after it was opened up in 1902, and until about April, 1903; that during the spring of 1903 witness was at the Mt. Pleasant mine most of the time.

Witness was asked how it came that the Hitchman mine became unionized during the spring of 1903, and answered, "Well, the Ohio mine was run union from the beginning—from the time we 301 opened—and the mine officials—organizers and so on—tried to organize the Hitchman mine at Benwood, and they threatened me in Ohio—that they would close our mine down in Ohio if we did not allow the men at Benwood to organize, and the men seemed to be anxious to organize at Benwood and they were allowed to do so."

Witness further testified that the men at the Hitchman mine were not organized but a short time until they came out on a strike in 1903; that they struck on April 1, 1903, he thinks it was; that they were out on a strike at that time fifty some days.

Witness said that he could not recall what was the daily production of coal at that time. He said that the company's chief customer at that time was the B. & O. Railroad Company; that the company furnished them coal for their engines.

Upon being asked what happened when the men struck, after becoming unionized, with reference to the B. & O. engine coal, witness replied: "They had to get it elsewhere."

Counsel for defendants interrupted to inquire with the words, "That was in 1903?" and the witness replied, "Yes."

On further direct examination, witness was asked: "You say that you ran a union mine first in Pennsylvania and then latterly ran a non-union mine. What was your experience with reference to strikes and troubles, and annoyances, while you were running union in Pennsylvania?"

Counsel for defendants objected to the question and the court ruled that the witness being President of the company and his conduct being involved in this matter the witness would be allowed to answer the question simply as explanatory of the reason for his course of conduct.

The answer of the witness was as follows: "While the mine that I was connected with there was union, we had trouble all the time—strikes for weeks at a time, and then probably only for one or two days at a time, and the people I was connected with there could not stand for that, and we threw the union over, and ran non-union after we had had it for a year or two."

Witness was asked what influence did that experience of his in Pennsylvania have with reference to his conduct in opening up the Hitchman mine non-union, and replied: "So long as we had the contract with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad I felt that we were bound to furnish them coal, and I felt we could do it a good deal
302 better with a non-union mine than we could with a union mine. When we went there, I said there should not be anything else but a non-union mine, and we started out in that way."

Witness was further asked: "And you eventually unionized under the compulsion you have mentioned, owing to the Mt. Pleasant mine being in union territory and being run union?" and replied, "Yes, sir."

Witness was asked what his experience with the union was with reference to strikes after the 1903 strike which followed the unionizing of the mine, and said that there was more or less trouble all the time that year, but no serious trouble until 1904; that in 1904, the men were all brought out on a strike again.

The witness was also asked: "What became of the B. & O. trade if it had any with you in 1904, during the 1904 strike?" and answered: "They forced us to fulfill our contract with them."

In reply to the question: "What did you do?" witness said: "To take care of any coal they might bring there, we had to put it on their engines for them."

Witness was asked if the Hitchman Company did that, and replied that they did in 1904. In reply to a question as to how the company did it, witness said: "We had to go to quite an expense. We closed up our mine mouth, which was a slope, and built an incline down under their tracks and took the coal from the cars off of their siding along the main tracks, and hauled it up this incline and over this pit mouth, and up around over a steel trestle that we have, over to the coaling station."

Counsel for defendants interrupted with: "That was during the strike of 1904?" to which witness replied, "Yes, sir."

Upon further direct examination, witness was asked if he recalled about how long that strike lasted and that condition lasted with reference to supplying the B. & O. coal, and replied: "Fifty some days;" that he did not remember the exact number of days.

Witness further testified that the next year following the settlement of the strike in 1904 there was not very much trouble with the union with reference to strikes or other troubles, and that down to April, 1906, there was not a great deal of trouble; an occasional day they would decide not to work, or something.

Witness was asked what happened in April, 1906, and replied: "They came out on a strike again."

303 Witness was asked to state what dealings he had, if any, with any of the defendants with reference to the continuation of work at the Hitchman mine pending a settlement of the national strike which had been ordered April 1, 1906, and answered that he did not have any personally himself at all.

The court asked this question: "What was the cause of the strike in your mine in April, when it was union? What grievance was there?" The witness inquired, "In 1906?" to which the court said, "Yes, sir," and the witness then replied: "Why, in the 1906 strike, we could not agree on a scale of wages, but we agreed with our men and our men agreed with us that they should continue at work, pending a scale, and the men did work for a while after the first of April, (I do not know how many days), under those conditions."

Witness was further asked: "Was this agreement, as to the scale, general, or was it just at your mine?" and answered: "It was national." He was asked, "Did you have any understanding with them, if the scale was raised, that you would pay it?" and answered: "Yes, sir; we did."

Witness said this was an agreement with the company's men.

Counsel for defendants said: "I did not catch the drift of that answer, and the testimony given. As I understand, you had an agreement pending the adjustment of the scale, with your men, to continue work, did you? Is it that what you said?" and the witness replied: "The men were to continue work."

Defendants' counsel said: "You agreed that they should continue, pending the adjustment of the scale?" to which the witness replied: "Yes, sir; that we would pay whatever the scale was; whatever was agreed to, we would pay it."

Upon further direct examination the witness was asked this question: "The scale you refer to as not having been agreed upon April 1st is the scale that was being discussed by the operators' association, in convention, with the miners, in convention?" and answered: "It was." The witness was then asked: "Was the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company a member of that operators' association?" He replied: "It was not." The witness was asked where those operators were located that held that convention—in the main. He replied: "In Ohio." He was asked if they were competitors of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company in the general markets, and replied: "They were."

304 The witness further testified that pending the settlement of a scale which was in course of adjustment between the operators' association and the miners, in convention, the Hitchman Company at that time ran its mine union and agreed with its men that if they would continue at work the company would pay them from April 1st whatever the new scale might be; that if the new scale when agreed upon was lower than the scale the company was then paying when the scale expired March 31st, 1906, there would be no reduction upon the wages as paid to the men, and that if the scale was raised as the result of this conference between the operators' association and the United Mine Workers the company agreed with its men that if they would work the company would pay them the increased amount dating it back to April 1st, 1906.

Witness further testified that he knows that the defendant officials of the United Mine Workers were advised by the general manager of the Hitchman Coal Company of that arrangement which the company had with its men.

Witness was asked: "What caused the men at the mine to strike after having worked for some time, on April 16th, 1906?" and replied that he presumed the strike was caused by the officials; that they would not allow the men to work under that arrangement. The witness further testified that when the men struck the mine was shut down, and that it was idle at that time for fifty some odd days.

Witness was asked: "What was the condition of your trade, in a general way, especially with regard to the service rendered the B. & O. at the time of that strike?" and replied: "We had to repeat just what we did in 1904. They held us to the contract, and made us take care of the coal that they brought there, and put it on their engines, and the same conditions existed as in 1904. The company kept that up during the entire period of the strike. This was in 1906.

Witness further testified that during the 1904 strike, and during the 1906 strike, the company had other trade besides the railroad trade, and that relatively the other business compared with the business the company had with the Baltimore & Ohio at those periods in the proportion of about half and half; while at the time of the 1903 strike the Baltimore & Ohio got the most of the business. The company extended its commercial business as time went on, and its present operative condition is that about half of its business is commercial business and about half is railroad. During the fifty some odd days of the 1906 strike the mine was closed down all the time entirely. The company took care of the Baltimore & Ohio 305 trade as it had done in 1904, and the company's other trade just had to go, as the company could not take care of that, there was no way to do it. This was also true of the company's trade in 1904, during the 1904 strike; and to the extent that the company had commercial business in 1903 it was the same. The company lost that business. The company has company houses in which some of the company's men live; those houses adjoin the mine. There are thirteen double houses, making the equivalent of twenty-six single houses; during the period of these strikes the company's men who were living in the houses at the time of the strikes just continued to stay there.

The witness was asked: "At the time this strike was in progress in 1906, and before you resumed work non-union, what dealings did you have with your men looking to their resuming work?" and replied: "Along about the first of June following the strike, Mr. Koch was away on a trip, and Mr. Pickett, our mine superintendent, telephoned me that some of our men wanted to meet me. I met with them by appointment through Mr. Pickett, and they wanted to know how they could get back to work—that they could not stand it any longer; that they were not getting any benefits, and they must get back to work; and I told them that they could go back to work, but they could not go back as members of the United Mine Workers of America; that from that time on, this mine would be run non-union, and the company would deal with the men, or with each man, individually, from that on. The result of the negotiations was that they went to work non-union." And witness further said: "I told them they could not work there any other way, and that each one would have to re-employ himself and work non-union.

The witness testified that he told these men that the company's mine would be run non-union. The court said to the witness: "Then just tell what was the extent of the agreement between you and your men. Just what it was, if anything," and following an interjection by defendants' counsel of the words: "And whether it was with them individually or as a body," the witness replied: "I had my understanding with a self appointed committee, that came to see me, that they were to work non-union, and that every man would have to get his own job back from the mine superintendent, individually, and that we would have no more union—that we would treat with the men individually."

The witness further testified that the men wanted to know what the company was going to pay them—what scale the company would pay them—and that he told them he could not arrange a scale with them, but that Mr. Koch would when he came home; they went to work without any scale the next day; a scale was subsequently agreed upon between the men and the company.

Witness was asked this question: "How much time, if any, has your company lost by reason of labor troubles since resuming work non-union in June, 1906?" and replied: "None at all."

The witness further testified that he was present at the McLure House in the spring of 1906 when there were with him Mr. Koch, the manager of the Hitchman Company, and the defendant, William Green; that he does not remember all of the conversation that took place in his presence there between Mr. Koch and Mr. Green on that occasion. Witness remembers, as far as witness was concerned and as far as the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company was concerned, that Mr. Green was told that if he brought the company's men out on a strike that he would be taking something away from them he would never be able to give back to them; that those men—if they stayed with the union or struck with the union—would never get work at the company's mine again; that they never could get the jobs back that they had at the company's place.

The following question was asked by the court: "Was Mr. Green informed in that conversation that if the union insisted on calling your men out on a strike, that you would re-organize your mine as a non-union mine?" and the witness replied: "Yes, sir."

Upon further direct examination the witness said that the occasion and origin of this conversation between Mr. Koch and Mr. Green was by appointment, he believed, but that he did not know absolutely: that the company's men were working and they wanted to work, and the union wanted them to come out—the officials wanted to bring them out; that the company was insisting that its men be allowed to work; they were working and were satisfied; and this conversation with Mr. Green was with reference to the men continuing to work.

The witness was handed a paper filed January 14th, 1908, which contained an affidavit to which his signature appears, and attached to that affidavit are twenty-nine exhibits, the exhibits consisting of clippings from newspapers. He was asked to look at the paper and say whether the signature is his signature, and whether the clippings were taken from the papers they purport to have been taken from.

307 The witness answered that the signature was his signature, and that the newspaper clippings are the ones taken from the papers which they were supposed to be taken from. This paper and the attached newspaper clippings related to the preliminary motion filed at Parkersburg, January 14th, 1908, upon the subject of the acts of defendants in attempting to organize the plaintiff's mine in defiance of the restraining order which had been granted on October 24th, 1907. The paper and these newspaper clippings are the same as those heretofore admitted in evidence as being items mentioned in the order entered November 5th, 1910, in the Hitchman case, to the admission of which in evidence the defendants objected.

Cross-examination:

When the Hitchman mine was opened in 1902, the production was small and its capacity greatly increased as time went on; the mine was opened in the summer and fall of 1902 for the shipment of coal; the mine was unionized in April, 1903; at that time the Mt. Pleasant mine was being operated union by witness.

The witness was asked and answered questions as follows:

"Q. I believe that you stated that the men at the Hitchman mine were anxious to unionize?

A. Yes, sir, they asked if we had any objections to their unionizing.

Q. And you said you had not, and they were accordingly unionized?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You also stated in that connection that the defendants in this case threatened to close down the Mt. Pleasant mine unless you did unionize the Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There are ten defendants in this case as you are aware, Mr. Hitchman, are there not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which, if any, of these defendants, made that threat to you?

A. Mr. Watkins. Mr. Sullivan did not make it as a threat; he got around it in another manner and wanted to know what we would do if he did do that."

When asked further questions the witness said that Mr. Watkins made this statement to witness at the Mt. Pleasant mine; that there was no one present except Watkins and witness; thinks that Mr. Sullivan was not present at that time; does not remember what Mr. Sullivan's language was.

The Hitchman mine continued to run union until April, 1906.

308 Witness does not recollect the amount of coal that was being furnished the B. & O. Railroad Company at the Hitchman mine, when the union organized the mine; between that period, and a year after, the company increased the output to the B. & O.; the output may have increased in 1905 over 1904; the daily output since April 12, 1906, has not increased aside from the increase in traffic on the B. & O. making a greater increase of coal necessary for the business of the B. & O.; the management of the company's business is under the control of a Board of Directors.

Witness became acquainted with the defendants Lewis, Green, Sullivan, Watkins and Rankin in the nine years; that is, during the last nine years beginning with 1901.

Witness and his associates never had the Mt. Pleasant mine fully developed; began with union labor there when shipping of coal was commenced, and continued.

Witness stated that he had business transactions with Lewis; he was with him in an operators' convention at Wheeling; he had nothing to do with Lewis then with reference to making a contract to unionize the Hitchman mine. Witness met Watkins first at the Mt. Pleasant mine; John Stevenson was President of Sub-District Five when the Hitchman Company organized its mine; he was one of the men who represented the organization when the company unionized; witness met Rankin along with Stevenson. Rankin was Secretary of the organization that Stevenson was President of; witness had dealings with Rankin in that capacity. Witness never met Sullivan with relation to the Hitchman mine; met him with reference to the Mt. Pleasant mine.

The following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. You say that you had trouble all the time that your mine was running union, from 1903 to 1906. What do you mean by that term: 'You had trouble'?

A. Well, everything did not run smoothly. Occasionally we would lose a day. The men would have some grievance or other, and they would not go to work.

Q. And you adjusted that, and they resumed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that is what you mean by 'having trouble?'

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had a contract and they claimed that the contract was violated by you, did they not?

A. No, I think not. Well, probably they did, yes.

Q. They made some complaint that the contract was not being carried out?

A. Yes, sir.

309 Q. And you examined into it—(Interrupted).

A. And then they broke their contract by not working.

Q. That is to say, until it was adjusted?

A. Yes, sir, until it was adjusted.

Q. And when it was adjusted they resumed?

A. Yes, sir."

The witness further testified that he could not say definitely how many men the company employed during the time the mine was running union.

Witness was asked: "Have you as many or more since you have been running non-union as you had when you were running union?" and replied: "It has varied."

Witness further testified the mine has increased its capacity and taken on more men; in April, 1906, the men went out on a strike in compliance with directions from the union; the Hitchman Company desired them to remain pending the question of a scale; the men were asking an increase; we said we would pay whatever the scale was; we agreed to pay it if they would remain; we agreed to pay the scale that the union proposed at that time, and the men worked for a while, and went out about the middle of April.

When the mine started up non-union the agreement in regard to the men was that they were to work non-union; the company guaranteed them that they would make as good wages, or that it would pay them as good wages, as anybody else did; they were to get as good wages as any other men could get; so far as witness made a contract with the men it was verbal; there was a scale drawn up under which the men were to work; there was no written contract at that time; that was referred to the general manager, Mr. Koch; the company simply decided to run non-union; that is as far as witness went with the matter; witness was acting in Mr. Koch's place, he being away; the board of directors of the company adopted a resolution to run the mine non-union and to employ only non-union men; witness is speaking from recollection entirely—has not the records with him; does not know personally that the defendants were advised by the general manager of the agreement on the part of the company with the men as to not joining the union.

In 1907, when the injunction was sued out in this case, the company had thirteen double houses, counted as twenty-sig single residences, each residence being designed to accommodate one family; the company had the heads of more than twenty-six families in its employ at that time; witness could not say how many heads

310 of families, or married men, and single men occupied these twenty-six single residences. The company was employing about three hundred men at that time, but how they were divided as to heads of families witness does not know; the company had one hundred and fifty or two hundred men, or more, that were not living in company houses; the men double up pretty thick in some of those houses, and witness would not undertake to say that at least two hundred and fifty men employed by the company at that time were not living in the company houses; these other men rented houses of other people and paid their rent.

Witness does not recollect what time in the spring of 1906 it was when he met with Mr. Koch and the defendant Green at the McLure House in Wheeling; must have been between the first and middle of April, 1906; Green met Mr. Koch by appointment, and witness was with Koch; the purpose of the meeting was to talk over having our men continue at work.

Witness ran his mines in Pennsylvania on a union basis two or three years; it was in Washington County, Pennsylvania; witness worked there for several years; when witness came from Washington, Pennsylvania, he had not been actually out of the coal business at all; was out of active management of the mine about eighteen months; when witness came to West Virginia from Washington County he sold his mines in Pennsylvania; they were non-union when witness disposed of them; witness does not know but thinks they were probably afterwards unionized; witness is not a member of the United Mine Workers of America; has examined the constitution of the National organization, the one put in evidence, examined it several years ago; so far as witness knows the constitution put in evidence is substantially what the constitution was at the time the witness contracted with the union in 1903, in that constitution sub-district 5 is practically the same as it was in 1903; when the Hitchman Company made its contract to run the mine union in 1903, witness supposed that the United Mine Workers were working under a constitution; witness never called it in question personally; witness also knew the United Mine Workers had a local at the Hitchman mine; the company collected dues assessed against the men and transmitted it to the proper authorities of the United Mine Workers from 1903 to 1906,—three years; witness does not remember of having his attention called to the preamble prefixed to the constitution; a copy of which is filed as Exhibit No. 1; does not remember that his at-311 tention was directed to the preamble prefixed to the constitution of District 6; witness collected a part of the newspaper clippings attached to his affidavit filed in January, 1908; collected a part of them himself; does not know who collected the balance of the clippings; in April, 1906, the men were at work and the company offered to pay them the advanced scale proposed if they would continue and not come out; the company offered to pay the proposed advanced scale right then and there; the men did not want to come out; the union said the men could not stay even if the scale were accepted by the company; the company's men reported that the officials did not allow them to work that way under any circumstances; the company's men reported that; witness knows from the company's general manager that this was the case; does not know it personally.

R. J. COTTS.

Direct examination:

My name is R. J. Cotts; residence, Glendale, West Virginia; age thirty-five years; occupation, bookkeeper for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; have been employed as bookkeeper of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company since June, 1903; prior to that time was chief clerk in the yard office of the B. & O. R. R. Co. at Benwood, W. Va. The orders for cars for the Hitchman mine came to witness's office through the superintendent's office of the B. & O., and were given by witness to the yard people for distribution. Cars were then, pursuant to that, given to the mine; witness therefore had some means of knowing the amount of business to a certain extent that was being done by the Hitchman Company; the books of the Hitchman company are very extensive; many entries; could tell from the books in any one statement the amount of production at any given time by collection from the general books. Knows from the records on the books whether the Hitchman company in the month covered by March 2d, 1902, to April 2d, 1902, mined and disposed of coal for engine use and for commercial use, by shipments; knows this in part from his observations while he was in the employ of the B. & O., in the yards; can tell from the memorandum what the total of the coal mined and disposed of for commercial purposes was in that particular period, but can not give the figures off hand, aside from his tabulations; witness can not tell the amount for the same period that was furnished to the B. & O.
312 R. R. Co. for engine use aside from witness's tabulation; passing to the subsequent period from May 23d, 1903, to June 23d, 1903, witness's answer would be the same; to the period from March 20th, 1904, to April 20th, 1904, witness's answer would be the same; to the period from June 15th, 1904, to July 15th, 1904, witness's answer would be the same; to the period from March 16th, 1906, to April 16th, 1906, witness's answer would be the same; to the period from June 12th, 1906, to July 12th, 1906, witness's answer would be the same. With regard to the output or tonnage of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company for engine use and for commercial use for the year 1902, arranged quarterly, witness's answer would be the same, beginning July, 1902; then for October, November and December, 1902, and for the year 1903, in like manner, the witness's answer would be the same; for the year 1904, in like manner, the witness's answer would be the same; for the year 1905, for the year 1906, for the year 1907, for the year 1908, for the year 1909, and for the year 1910, including the month of November, in like manner, the witness's answer would be the same.

Witness is handed a paper which is marked Cotts' Exhibit No. 1, and is admitted in evidence, and says that he prepared the tabulation of the tonnage from the books of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; that the tonnage as shown from March 2d to April 2d, 1903, is 6273.10 tons of commercial coal and 7432.95 tons of engine coal; witness means by engine coal, that it was furnished to the B. & O. directly on their engines; the tonnage from May 23d to June 23d, 1903, was 2460 tons of commercial coal and 8119.25 tons of engine coal.

Witness is handed a paper which is Cotts' Exhibit No. 2 and is admitted in evidence, and says that the tabulation was made by him from the books of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; that the tonnage shown from March 20th to April 20th, 1904, was 11133.70 tons of commercial coal and 8768.65 tons of engine coal; the period from June 15th to July 15th, 1904, shows a production of 6363.50 tons of commercial coal and 12505.70 tons of engine coal.

Witness is handed a paper which is marked Cotts' Exhibit No. 3 and is admitted in evidence, and says this paper was prepared by him from the books of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; the period from March 16th to April 16th, 1906, shows a production of 9151.10 tons of commercial coal and 16293.25 tons of engine coal; the production from June 12th, 1906, to July 12th, 313 1906, shows 6615.95 tons of commercial coal and 15953.35 tons of engine coal.

Witness is handed a paper which is marked Cotts' Exhibit No. 4 and is admitted in evidence, and says he prepared this paper from the books of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, and the tonnage shown for the quarter ending September 30th, 1902, is engines 4177.95 tons, commercial 272 tons; for the quarter ending December 31st, 1902, the engine tonnage was 12154.95 tons, commercial coal 569.85 tons; total tonnage for the year 1902, engines 16332.90, commercial 841.85.

The tonnage for the first quarter 1903, ending March 31st, was engines 9704.60, commercial coal 1772.75 tons; for the second quarter ending June 30th, 1903, the engine tonnage was 10412.50, commercial 2636.70 tons; the third quarter ending September 30th, 1903, the engine tonnage was 23441.80, and the commercial 21873.50 tons; for the fourth quarter ending December 31st, 1903, the engine tonnage was 26251.10, commercial 18188.45 tons; total tonnage for the year, 69810. tons of engine coal, and 60471.40 tons of commercial coal.

For the first quarter of the year ending March 31st, 1910, the engine tonnage was 35,900.35 tons, commercial 47,278.15 tons; for the second quarter ending June 30th, 1910, engines 36,745.20 tons, commercial 55,002.85 tons; for the third quarter ending September 30th, 1910, engines 39,416.85 tons, commercial 15,212 tons; for the months of October and November of the fourth quarter, engines 27,214.35 tons, commercial 24,889.45 tons; total tonnage for the eleven months of 1910 is, engines 139,276.75 tons, commercial 142,382.45 tons.

Witness further testified that the price paid by the B. & O. R. R. Co. to the Hitchman Company for the engine tonnage of 7,432.95 tons, mentioned in Cotts' Exhibit No. 1, for the period from 315 March 2d, 1903, to April 2d, 1903, was ninety cents per ton, witness thinks, but he is not positive of it; for the next tonnage, 8,119.25, for the period from May 23d, 1903, to June 23d, 1903, it was $1.00 per ton.

As to the price for the commercial tonnage for these two totals, witness replied that there was no fixed price, but that it would be approximated at about a dollar per ton.

Upon being asked the same question as to the 8,768.65 tons, being the amount of engine coal for the period from March 20th, 1904, to April 20th, 1904, as shown by Cotts' Exhibit No. 2, witness replied that the price was a dollar.

Upon the same question being asked as to the 12,505.70 tons of coal covering the period from June 15th to July 15th, 1904, as shown by Cotts' Exhibit No. 2, the witness replied that the price was ninety-five cents per ton; and with regard to the commercial coal footings on that same exhibit witness said the price per ton would average about ninety-five cents; it varied.

Asked the same question as to the tonnage of 16,293.25 tons of engine coal for the period from March 16th, 1906, to April 16th, 1906, as shown by Cotts' Exhibit No. 3, the witness said that the coal from March 16th, 1906, until April 1st, 1906, was billed at ninety-five cents, and the coal from April 1st to April 16th, was billed at a dollar.

Asked the same question as to the footings 15,953.35 tons of engine coal for the period beginning June 12th, 1906, and ending July 12th, 1906, as shown by Cotts' Exhibit No. 3, the witness replied one dollar; witness stated that the approximate price of the commercial coal evidenced by the two totals on his Exhibit No. 3 varied; it averaged about ninety-five cents per ton.

Upon being asked what in a general way for the year 1902, the company received per ton for coal as shown by the tabulation for the year 1902, embraced within Cotts' Exhibit No. 4, witness replied that the engine price at that time was ninety-five cents, but he does not know what the commercial coal was.

For the year 1903 witness says that previous to April 1st, 1903, the commercial coal averaged about $3.00 per ton, due to the anthracite strike; engine coal previous to April 1st was ninety-five cents, and after April 1st engine coal was a dollar, and commercial coal would average about a dollar, the price of commercial coal had come down very materially after the settlement of the anthracite strike, from an average of three dollars to one dollar, approximately.

316 Asked as to the price for the year 1904 of commercial and engine coal received by the company for the tonnage as shown for that year by Cotts' Exhibit No. 4, the witness said the price would average about ninety-five cents for commercial, and after April 1st, ninety-five cents for engine coal.

Asked the same question for the year 1905, the witness said the price of engine coal was ninety-five cents, and the commercial coal would average about ninety-five cents.

Asked the same question for the year 1906, the witness replied the engine coal was ninety-five cents to April 1st, and from April 1st, it was a dollar, and commercial coal would average between ninety-five cents and a dollar.

The witness was asked the same question for the year 1907, and replied the engine coal was a dollar, and the commercial coal would average about ninety-five cents.

For the year 1908, his answer was that the prices were about the same as 1907.

For the year 1909, his answer was, engine coal in 1909 was a dollar, and commercial coal would average ninety-five cents.

For the year 1910, including the month of November, witness said engine coal to April 1st, 1910, was a dollar, and from April 1st, $1.05, and commercial coal would average about ninety-five cents.

The witness Cotts further testified that the first strike occurred April 2, 1903, and the mine resumed May 23, 1903; the second strike was on April 20, 1904, and the mine resumed June 15, 1904; the third strike was April 16, 1906, and the mine resumed non-union on June 12, 1906; it has run since June 12, 1906, non-union, and there has not been any strike in that period.

The following question was asked by the Court: "What have been the wages paid since June, 1906, as compared with those paid by union mines?" and the witness replied: "In practically every instance we paid the same scales as the miners' organization,—that is, the union scale,—with one exception, and we paid more than the organization demanded in that exception."

Upon further examination of the witness, he testified that that is the condition today; that that was the condition at the time of the attempted unionizing of the men in the summer and fall of 1907, and that that condition has continued ever since. From the books of the company witness knows that the company's men, who continued at work for sixteen days in April, 1906, were paid 317 at the advance which the union asked for; that this was the basis upon which the compensation of the men was figured at the pay ensuing the first day of April and up to the time the men quit work on April 16, 1906; the increase being that which was demanded by the United Mine Workers of America of the operators, and which increase was the subject of contention and the reason the scale was not signed April 1st between the operators and the United Mine Workers of America; the advance paid was 5.55% over the scale which expired March 31, 1906, and that pay was made April 25, 1906; the men were not working for the company on April 25, 1906, when that pay was made, but they were all there on pay day; and the company paid them the advanced wages demanded by the United Mine Workers in a scale which had not at that time been agreed upon; this payment of 5.55% was made pursuant to an offer accepted by the men prior to their striking April 16, 1906; the company was not willing to sign the scale then because there was some contention about the price for run of mine coal. The price for run of mine coal had been up in 1903 and had been settled at that time. The scale of the United Mine Workers for the price of run of mine coal is seven-ninths witness thinks, but is not positive of that—seven-ninths of the price of screened coal, and in the particular vein of coal the company is working the screened coal only ran about sixty per cent. instead of seven-ninths which they demanded, and its scale of run of mine coal has been figured at about 64.7% of the price of screened coal; the company had never paid the union scale for run of mine coal based on the seven-ninths previous to 1903 and the organization there, the company paid so much a car for mining coal; after the mine was unionized in 1903, the company paid for that time on the run of mine basis about sixty-two per cent of the price of screened coal, and agreed to make a test and see the actual percentage of screened coal that its coal contained and make its scale from that information; but after the company started in this test in the summer of 1903 there was some contention raised among the men that the test was not being made fairly, and they struck and were out one day, (witness can not give the date of that); Mr. Haskins was the president of the Ohio miners and he came down and settled it by agreeing that the company should pay a tonnage basis; and the coal that went on engines the company was to pay a run of mine rate of thirty-four cents, which was an increase of about one cent and a half above what it had been paying; since that time the 318 company has always figured the run of mine on the same basis that that was at that time.

The witness was asked the following question: "So that while the company was willing to pay the increase of 5.55% demanded by the union at the time of the contention about the new scale of 1906, the company, if it had signed the scale at that time with the union, would have had to forego the advantage that it had already obtained by reason of the settlement of the run of mine question?" and answered: "Yes, sir."

To the further question: "It having been settled to the satisfaction of the union and its men once before, it would then be subject to a new contract?" the witness said: "Yes, sir."

The witness further testified that under the proposed scale of 1906 the scale of run of mine coal was seven-ninths he thinks, but is not positive about it, and that the price of screened coal in 1906 was 50.5 cents a ton, witness thinks.

Question by the Court: "And what was run of mine?" to which witness answered, "We paid thirty-one cents a ton."

Upon further direct examination the witness Cotts, was handed a card marked Cotts' Exhibit No. 5, which was admitted in evidence, and said of it that it is a memorandum of employment between the company and the men employed.

Upon direction of the court, counsel for plaintiff read the card marked Cotts' Exhibit No. 5. It reads as follows:

"I am employed by and work for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company with the express understanding that I am not a member of the United Mine Workers of America, and will not become so while an employee of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. is run non-union and agrees with me that it will run non-union while I am in its employ. If at any time while I am employed by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. I want to become connected with the United Mine Workers of America, or any affiliated organization, I agree to withdraw from the employment of said company, and agree that while I am in the employ of that company that I will not make any efforts amongst its employees to bring about the unionizing of that mine against the company's wish. I have either read the above or heard the same read."

Upon further direct examination the witness said: "Before a man gets his check, or is permitted to go to work, he is sent to the office, and that memorandum is read to him or he reads it
319 himself, if he is able to, and he signs it or not, as he sees fit, but he has to sign it before he is accepted for employment." The witness was further asked: "If a man does not sign the card, is he employed?" and replied: "No, sir, we have never had a case of that kind though."

The witness says he can not tell how many of these cards the company has in use by reason of the men having entered the employment of the company. He is shown a paper marked Cotts' Exhibit No. 6 purporting to be a memorandum or list of men employed during the year 1908, and those employed during 1909 and those employed during 1910, down to December 9th, and was asked if he prepared that and if he prepared it from the records of the company, and if it is correct. The witness replied that he prepared Cotts' Exhibit No. 6, and that it is correct, except possibly some of the names are not spelled exactly right, and he added: "It was as near as we could tell them by their signature."

Over objection the court admitted the memorandum; counsel for plaintiff producing and filing with the list, the cards in question which have on them the names of each one of these men as they signed them.

Counsel for defendants objected and excepted to the admission in evidence of the card marked Cotts' Exhibit No. 5, and to the list of persons employed and signing these cards marked Cotts' Exhibit No. 6, and the following took place:

The Court:

Q. "When did you first enter into this contract? When was the arrangement made?"

A. "The written contract we made commencing January, 1908, and previous to that it was verbal."

Q. "Is this contract the same as the verbal one had with the men in 1907?"

A. "Yes, sir."

Upon further direct examination the witness was asked the following question: "At the time of the proposed strike April 1, 1906, when the company proposed to and did pay its men an increase of 5.55% in order to get them to continue to work, what arrangement, if any, that you know of, was made by the company with the men respecting the disposition of the coal that might be mined by the men pending the adjustment of the scale between the Opera-320 tors Association and the United Mine Workers of America?" and replied: "It was agreed that only such coal would be mined as would take care of the fuel requirements of the B. & O., and no commercial coal was to be mined."

And the witness further answered: "We only got out the engine coal. We did not load a car during that period."

The following then took place:

The Court: "Let me ask you one question:

Q What knowledge, if any, did the officers of the United Mine Workers have of the facts that you have detailed here, that you would pay the increased scale price, and that you would agree only to get out the fuel coal for the railroad that you were under contract for? In other words, did they know that when they called this strike?

A. Yes, sir; I think they knew it through Mr. Koch.

Q. What do you base that on?

A. On a telephone conversation that I heard him have from one end of the line.

Q. Who was that with?

A. He talked to Columbus, I believe with Mr. Sullivan, but I am not positive who was at the other end.

Q. Who did that talking at your end?

A. Mr. Koch, the General Manager."

Cross-examination:

This conversation over the phone took place some time during April, 1906; witness could not say the date; it was in April, 1906; witness thinks it was before April 12, 1906; witness knows that some time in April, 1906, Mr. Koch talked over the phone about this additional scale and this price and said he would give it; this additional scale was what the miners' union proposed; the term 5.55% additional of the scale applied to everything—the whole scale; it was a general increase; a mine scale is based on pick mining; the scale price from 1904 to 1906 was based on 85 cents for pick mining; the miners demanded 90 cents for the ensuing period from April 1, 1906, which would be an increase of 5.55%; that same increase would be all over the mine, day work included; to all kinds of coal, pick and machine; so far as applying that increase went it 321 was not material whether the company produced and marketed run of mine coal alone or whether the company produced and marketed screened coal—there was practically no difference.

Upon further cross examination the witness said that as bookkeeper for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company he used double entry; that he prepared personally Cotts' Exhibits 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6; Cotts' Exhibit No. 1 purports to give the daily output for the month of March, 1903, in tons; witness keeps no day book and no journal; keeps a mine register to keep the tonnage in—the entries of the daily output; that register does not contain the names or numbers of the miners producing coal—that is not the way the company figures tonnage; the company takes the railroad weights of the cars after they are loaded for its tonnage; this the company obtains from the return shipments and sales; witness gives the matter of weights and shipments his own personal supervision so that he can verify them himself; he prepared those absolutely; did not take bills of lading for the shipments that were made; don't get bills of lading for coal; the Railroad Company furnishes a weight sheet for the coal loaded every day showing the weights; it comes to the office through the mail and that is what those weights are figured from. Cotts' Exhibit No. 2 purports to give the output daily from the 20th day of March to April 1st, and from April 1st to April 20, 1904; the daily output in 1903 previous to June, 1903, witness took off the books; he did not compare that personally; he did not enter the original weights in the mine register; he was not in the employ of the Hitchman Company at that time; witness took this memorandum from a book which had already been made up by somebody else; and that is what he found there; he can swear that it is a portion of the company's records; he believes it to be correct; but he does not know that of his own personal knowledge.

The Court:

"Q. Let's see if I understand. Up to some date, you stated. What was it?

A. Up to March, 1903.

Q. And prior to that time you were not in the employ of the company?

A. No, sir; I came in June, 1903.

Q. And up to that date you simply take this from the books?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after that date the entries in the books were made by you?

A. Yes, sir.

Upon further cross examination witness testified that Cotts' Exhibit No. 2 purports to give the daily output for parts of the 322 two months of March and April, 1904; that he took the last ten days in March and the first twenty days in April, 1904, because he was figuring the tonnage for a month before and a month after each strike, on those tabulations; that the company kept on running continuously from the 20th of March to the 20th of April, 1904; that Cotts' Exhibit No. 3 is a statement of the daily output from March 16th to April 16, 1906, and a statement from June 12th to July 12, 1906; that his object in making that up in the manner in which he did, was for the same purposes—for a month before and a month after the strike; in making the compilations in Cotts' Exhibits No. 1, 2, 3 and 4, he used the mine register; the mine register contained entries made by himself; he won't say that he made absolutely all of them; other clerks in the office made other entries; in testifying to the accuracy of these compilations, witness is not limited to what he saw in the mine register—not absolutely; the company makes its invoices off of that and that is what the company has been paid for, according to these weights; witness could not make up these compilations here from memory; he relied upon the register; part of which was made up by himself and the other part by others; witness could not say what proportion of the register was filled out by others; witness will not undertake to say in any one year how much was filled out by himself and how much by others—that is part of the daily routine there; witness made up the mine register from reports made to him from the weigh master's office of the B. & O. Railroad Company—the weigh master of the B. & O. Railroad Company; they furnish the Hitchman Company weights from different places; as far as the engine coal is concerned, the Hitchman Company weighs that coal itself; it has men employed to weigh the coal; witness never weighed a pound of it; the Hitchman Company gets those weights from the weigh master who weighs the coal and furnishes a report and a ticket from the B. & O. engineer showing that he got that much coal; witness made up this mine register as to the engine coal from reports brought to witness by the weigh master; the weigh master attended to the weighing of the coal and made these reports to the Hitchman Company; and from these reports that the weigh master brought to the Hitchman Company, the entries of the engine coal were made by other clerks in the office; the witness made very little of it—practically none; part of the commercial coal was weighed in Benwood at the shipping point; coal consigned to the Lake or points on the C. L. & W. division of the B. & O. is weighed at Holloway Ohio; coal consigned east is weighed at Fair-323 mont; these reports were sent to the company by the weigh master of the B. & O. people; frequently or generally sent by mail; witness took these reports that were sent the company of these weigh masters and transcribed from those reports into the mine register; and from that witness made these copies.

Upon further cross examination the following questions were asked and answers made:

"Q. Don't you know that the United Mine Workers, when they proposed the increase of scale beginning with April 1, 1906, were endeavoring to get the different mines not only in Ohio, but in West Virginia, to sign that scale?

A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. Well, you know that they proposed the 5.55% advance?

A. As far as we were concerned, yes, sir.

Q. Well, didn't you say that that was the union scale proposed?

A. Yes, sir; that was the union scale, but I do not know what their endeavors were in relation to other mines.

Q. Did you not know that they were proposing a uniform increase?

A. Referring to mines in Ohio; not in West Virginia.

Q. Well, weren't they endeavoring to apply the same scale to all mines in West Virginia and the Panhandle?

A. They may have been in the Panhandle, yes, sir.

Q. Well, if they were endeavoring to do that and you people agreed to sign that scale, or to accept that advance, there was nothing then between you and the United Mine Workers?

A. I had nothing to do with the agreement.

Q. I say there was nothing between you?

A. I can not answer the question.

Q. Well, could there have been? Do you know of anything that could have been between you?

A. Why, the only thing between us was that run of mine proposition, again—coming back to the seven-ninths instead of what we were paying."

Upon further cross examination the witness said that the 5.55% applied to screened coal and to run of mine coal; that he heard Mr. Koch say that he was willing to give it; the company thought that 5.55% increase applied to both screened coal and run of mine coal, but the other side didn't think so; the company had never paid the seven-ninths of the screened prices which they then incorporated in their scale or did have, but the company had 324 a special arrangement made there at one time to take care of its run of mine coal; the company is practically the only mine that pays for coal on a run of mine basis, and this special scale was made for its benefit in 1903, and when the question came up in 1906, of the signing of the scale again, it is witness's understanding the union tried to get the run of mine coal back to the seven-ninths basis; this scale that was submitted contemplated not only the 5.55% increase, but also a price of seven-ninths of the price of screened coal to be paid for the run of mine coal—that is my understanding; the company increased the price of run of mine 5.55% over what it had been paying previous to April 1, 1906,—on a basis fixed by Mr. Haskins; witness's understanding is that the union desired a uniform price of seven-ninths for the screened coal; that difference existed between the company and the union; that was a difference in favor of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company and against the miners; but when the miners quit there was no difference between the miners and the Hitchman Company, but only between the union and the Hitchman Company; that difference existed between the miners' officials, and not between the company's men and the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; the men were satisfied with the price the company was paying for run of mine coal, and all the coal mined in April was run of mine coal and paid for at the run of mine price; the men were not disregarding the union's regulations at that time; that regulation was fixed by Mr. Haskins under previous contracts.

The Court:

"Q. Let me see if I understand that; Haskins had been the State President or President of District No. 6?

A. No, he was President of the Ohio State organization—that is District No. 6.

Q. And he had made a special provision in reference to this run of mine coal, because of the condition of your mine and the character of the coal?

A. Because of the character of the coal; yes, sir.

Q. Was it different from that of the other mines?

A. It is different from the coal that this seven-ninths per cent. is based on. That was Hocking Valley coal, which mines very large, and there is very little slack in it.

Q. Now, because of the slack and because of the expense of mining, he determined that this rate that he fixed for you was fair in proportion to the seven-ninths he required from other mines?

A. Yes, sir.

325 Q. And this had been in existence by reason of his determination to settle—your special rates?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, let me ask you this question: What, if you know, was this strike against—all of the operators or against individual operators. For example: If an operator had yielded to this scale would they have withdrawn the strike or do they continue the strike in such cases?

A. I could not answer as to all operators. The Pittsburg district got to work before the strike was settled in our territory.

Q. But what I want to know is this: Here were a number of operators in your district?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, suppose one of those had complied and signed the scale, would the strike have been declared off at once against that mine?

A. I do not think so."

Upon further cross examination witness said: My understanding of it at that time was that they would settle by districts only; witness did not inform himself as to conditions upon which the strike would be suspended as to each operator.

Witness was asked this question: "Don't you know it was to the interest of these people to get each operator to accept, as fast as it was possible to do it, and that it applied to the whole district, and as fast as one accepted it, the men went in?" to which witness replied, "I did not understand it that way; no, sir."

Upon further cross examination witness said he never talked to an officer at all; he did not know of them—was just giving his understanding of it; if it were otherwise, witness does not know it.

Witness knows that machines are used at the Hitchman mine; he does not know anything about conditions in the Hocking Valley; there is not very much difference between the conditions which can be applied to a mine which uses machines and to a mine that uses the pick only; there would be a little more slack from the machine cut than there would be from the pick cut; that slack would have to be taken up; it would take time and labor from the employee.

Witness was asked this question: "Exhibit No. 5 purports to be a contract such as you began making with your employees of January, 1908, does it not?" and replied, "Yes, sir, some time in January."

Witness further testified that beginning with June 6, 1906, all contracts between the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company and its employees were verbal; he does not know exactly how many men the company employed when it started up non-union in June,

326 1906; would say about two hundred; the number of those miners increased up to January 1, 1908,—it varied; the mine superintendent, Mr. Pickett, employs the miners that work in and about the Hitchman Coal mine; the time of those employees was kept by the mine boss, boss driver and weigh master; witness made the entries on the books of their time, and value of their services—their labor; had nothing to do with fixing the terms of employment of the men; was not present with the mine superintendent in all cases when employments were made; can not specify what contracts were made between any of the employees of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company through its mine superintendent; could not name any that he was present at—don't remember—but he had been present on several occasions; witness received his information from the mine superintendent or from the General Manager—from both places, and heard a good many contracts personally, but he could not name the men now; witness does not know but very few of the employees; would not know all of them today; if the company's own men were to come out here today, witness would not know all of them.

Witness was asked this question: "Then after all, your information as to these contracts that were not in writing is quite general and yet indefinite?" to which he replied, "Yes, sir." And to the further question: "And you are not able to specify?" witness replied: "I am not able to specify."

Upon further cross examination the following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. Coming down to this written contract that has been exhibited here as an illustration of what all of them contained. Where are these kept?

A. In the office.

Q. You do know about them then commencing with January 1, 1908?

Yes, sir.

Q. Exhibit No. 6 purports to contain a list of the employees of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company for the years 1908, 1909 and 1910?

A. That list of men is a list of the men that were employed during those periods. They are not all there now, and some of them did not stay very long. It is a list of people though that were employed and went to work."

Witness further answered and said, that he has no tabulated list of the men who were employed beginning with June 327 6, 1906, and continuing through the intermediate period up to January 1, 1908; that his pay roll shows; he could furnish one from the pay roll.

Upon further cross examination the following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. And all you know about these men being in the employ of the company is what you see from the pay roll?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who places these names upon the pay roll?

A. I do.

Q. Who furnishes you that list?

A. Which list?

Q. That you place upon the pay roll—the names of the employees?

A. We have it in the office.

Q. Who brings it to the office?

A. Why, all the loaders and machine men I get myself when they go to work, and the day men I get their names and time from the superintendent's time book.

Q. He furnishes you his time book from which you take the list and place the names upon the pay roll?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, the mine superintendent?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you get the names of all inside men, mining from him?

A. No, I get the names of all working day work, such as drivers, timber men and so on; a man loading coal—a miner—I get his name myself when he comes into the office to get his loading checks.

Q. Then you get the names of all those working in the mine, yourself, from the employees?

A. All the loaders and the machine men I get myself; the drivers and day men employed inside the mine I get through Mr. Pickett, from his time book."

W. H. Koch.

Direct examination:

My name is W. H. Koch; residence, Glendale, West Virginia; age, thirty-seven, business, manager Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; have been such manager since its incorporation; has the same position with relation to the Glendale Coal Company; the Glendale Coal Company's mine is in Marshall County about two miles south of the Hitchman mine and its property adjoins the Hitchman; the office of the Glendale mine is at the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company's office, and the Glendale mine is 328 operated from that office; the members of the board of directors of the Glendale Coal Company are the same as the members of the board of the Hitchman, and they have always been the same.

Witness has lived in West Virginia about nine years; resided in Pennsylvania prior to coming to West Virginia; was there engaged in the coal business with the Ellsworth Company; was with them about eighteen months just previous to coming to West Virginia; have been employed in the coal business all together for about twenty years; have been manager of the Glendale and of the Hitchman all of the time the Hitchman has been opened and ever since the purchase of the Glendale mine in 1905, which witness thinks was about that time.

Mr. Pickett is the mine superintendent; he has charge of the employing of men at the office there for both mines. When the Hitchman was being opened up non-union labor was employed, that is, the men were not members of the United Mine Workers of America; the mine was opened up non-union; the Hitchman Company got down to the business of really supplying coal in the fall of 1902, witness thinks it was; at that time the company was running non-union, but subsequently the mine was run union and the unionizing of the mine came about in this way: "The board of directors, which included myself, were opposed to having a union mine, owing to previous experiences that some of us had had, but during the spring of 1903 there was some agitation started among some of our men to organize. In the meantime we owned an Ohio property and Mr. Hitchman reported that they had threatened to close up the Ohio mine—which was run union—if we did not organize at the Hitchman mine. I learned afterwards—in fact I talked with the men about the organization—that the union had organizers in our mine and were working with our men, which brought about this feeling."

The following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. You mean they had sent men into your employ for the purpose of creating discontent and organizing your men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, when this result had been accomplished and the men seemed desirous to organize as the result of the efforts of the organizers, who had entered your employment as employees and were unwittingly employed by you, what did you do or what did you say? Did you meet the men?

A. I met the men and told them if they preferred to or-329 ganize they could do so. I did not tell them about the Ohio proposition. After consulting with the company we decided the best thing we could do was to let them organize, and I so told the men, and they organized; but the organizer—the man that was working—never went to work any more. He left. He had fulfilled his mission."

Upon further direct examination witness testified, after they organized the men went on a strike, I think the next day; this meeting witness had with the men was in the latter part of March, 1903; the scale expired March 31st, 1903, and the company unionized on the 1st of April, 1903; the men then went on a strike April 2d, 1903.

Upon being asked why the men went on a strike the witness replied that it was due to some difference between the union and the operators, witness does not remember just what. Witness further testified that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company was not connected with the Operators' Association that the union was dealing with about the new scale. Upon being asked how long was the mine idle as the result of that strike of 1903, witness replied that his recollection is the men went to work the latter part of May; he is not positive of the date, though; and upon being reminded that in the testimony it has been stated that it was May 23d, witness says he thinks that date is correct. Upon being asked in what condition that strike left the company with reference to the fulfillment of contracts that it then had for the delivery of coal, witness replied that the company simply ceased to operate and it could not fill any of them; the company had orders at that time for coal; it expected to fill them but was not able to fill them, although it would have been able to fill them had it not had the strike; in ordinary course the company would have filled them. At the time the men went on strike April 2d, 1903, the company was supplying coal to the B. & O.; the coal furnished the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad was the principal part of the business, but it was furnishing some commercial coal.

Witness is referred to Cotts' Exhibit No. 1 and to a number of ciphers under the column of commercial coal under date of March 22d, 1903, and asked his explanation of that; the witness replied that the company did not load any commercial coal that day. On the same exhibit on May 23d and May 25th, and on June 2d, 3d, 5th, 6th, 7th, 14th, 18th, 19th, 29th, 21st, 22d, and 23d ciphers appear under the head of commercial coal and the witness 330 is asked to give his explanation. The witness replied that his explanation was, possibly no cars, for evidently the company did not load any on those dates.

Referring to Cotts' Exhibit No. 2, 1904, March 20th and 27th, and April 1st, 3d, 10th, 17th and 20th, there are ciphers and witness is asked his explanation. Witness replied that all of those dates except two undoubtedly were Sunday and as to those two more than likely the company did not have cars.

In the same exhibit, June 15th, 16th, 19th and 26th, and July 3d, 4th and 10th are ciphers, and the witness is asked his explanation. Witness replied Sundays or days without cars, one or the other.

On Cotts' Exhibit No. 2, June 15th, 1904, there is nothing but ciphers in the engine column and the witness asked if he can explain that. Witness replied there must have been a strike that day and no coal.

Witness further testified that the company while running union had a few similar difficulties from time to time but they were adjusted without extending into any considerable strike; they are distinguishable from what would be called a regular strike. The company never had any shut down or suspension even for one day running non-union, neither before the company was running union nor since when running non-union.

Referring to Cotts' Exhibit No. 3, in the commercial column, March 18th to March 25th, 1906, there are ciphers and witness is asked his explanation. His reply was that it was likely Sunday. In the same exhibit, Cotts' Exhibit No. 3, in the commercial column, April 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th, there are nothing but ciphers. Witness is asked to explain that, and on the same exhibit where the engine coal is tabulated there seem to be no ciphers. To this witness answered that was during a period that the company worked—that the company's men worked under an agreement that they were to take care of the engine fuel but the company agreed not to load any commercial coal; that is the reason this tabulation shows no commercial coal mined, but it does show that the company mined engine coal.

"The Court:

Q. Was that on account of the strike conditions?

A. Pending a settlement we got our men to work and 331 agreed to pay them the advance, and they worked, but only to take care of the engines.

Q. That was at the end of the scale and pending a settlement as to what the scale should be?

A. Yes, sir; there was a general strike on the first of April, but our men continued at work.

Q. That was in what year now?

A. Nineteen hundred and six."

Upon further direct examination, witness was asked:

"Q. That was at the time immediately preceding the breaking away from the union by the men and the running of the mine non-union?" to which the witness replied: "Yes, sir."

"The Court:

Q. How long did they continue to get out engine coal at that time?

A. Sixteen days.

Q. From the first day of April to the 16th?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then there was a total suspension?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did that last?

A. Until June 12th of the same year.

Q. Have you any method by which you could estimate the average daily loss to the company on account of the total suspension during that period of time—not accurately but an estimate of it?

A. I would say roughly $7,500.00.

Q. Tell how you figure that $7,500.00?

A. I figure fourteen days in April and twelve in June; that would be twenty-six days, and in the twenty-six days we produced at least thirty thousand tons of coal, which at twenty-five cents net per ton would be $7,500.00. On a daily basis figured at twelve hundred tons, which would be a fair average at that time, it would make $300.00, at twenty-five cents net per ton."

Upon further direct examination, going to Cotts' Exhibit No. 3 again, and taking the aggregate of coal produced for commercial and engine use for the month preceding the strike on April 2d, 1903, and taking into consideration the aggregate of the coal produced for commercial and engine use for a month next ensuing the resumption of work May 23d, 1903, the witness was asked what was the company's net loss as the result of the strike inaugurated April 2d, 1903, 332 and which terminated when the men resumed work union May 23d, 1903; the witness answered: Purely as a daily loss it would not be as much per day because the company was not producing as much coal at that time as the period just referred to before—1906—but it was very disastrous for the company in a business way right at that time on account of trade the company was trying to get and had hopes of securing, which of course it lost, and that went to other fields because the company was unable to take care of it; it is pretty hard to give you that in dollars and cents; the company was running approximately five hundred tons a day at that time, and the loss on that, well, witness does not think the company's profit would have been more than eighteen cents a ton possibly, so that five hundred tons would only be ninety dollars a day; the company took care of the B. & O. engine coaling business while the men were on strike, but not from the company's mine however; the railroad company brought the coal there from other mines and forced the company to deliver it to their engines, and that necessitated the closing up of the company's pit mouth and arranging a kind of incline there and installing a stationary engine, and it had to handle the coal out of these hopper bottom cars by running over its property and on over a trestle into the bin in the usual way at a great big expense; the company tried to get the railroad company to pay it for it, and witness remembers the figures the company gave them were thirteen cents per ton that it cost the company to handle it; the recollection of witness is that it was about four hundred tons of coal a day that the company handled for the B. & O. in that way resultant upon that strike, but he says he may be wrong in that; if it was four hundred tons a day and it cost the company thirteen cents, that would be $52.00 a day; the men were on strike at that time fifty-one days so that it would amount to about $2,600.00.

Passing to the 1904 strike, the witness was asked what was done by the company, if anything, with reference to supplying coal or coaling the engines of the B. & O. during the period the men were on strike, beginning April 20th and extending to June 15th, 1904, and replied, "The same arrangement."

Upon being asked what witness would say about the cost to the company and its losses pursuant to that arrangement resultant upon that strike, the witness replied: "We not only lost the business from our own coal and the profit on it, but we were put to the additional expense of handling this coal for the railroad company, and at 333 that time they used nearly six hundred tons a day as against about four hundred tons the previous strike, and the cost would be proportionately larger of course."

Passing to the 1906 strike the witness was asked if the company made any arrangement about loading coal for the B. & O. and was put to any additional expense, and replied: "The same arrangement; we handled the coal in the same manner."

Upon being asked how much was the company's approximate loss arising from that method of supplying coal to the B. & O. during the 1904 strike, the witness replied: "Counting the loss of profit on our coal and the cost of handling the other coal, I would roughly say that it would aggregate three hundred dollars a day;" that strike was in operation from April 20th to June 15th, 1904, which would be about fifty-six days—$17,000.00.

Coming to 1906 the witness was asked what he would say was the aggregate loss to the company, and replied: The loss was greater at that time because the company's output was larger. Witness says he does not remember the dates, but upon the dates being suggested, April 16th to June 12th, he answered fifty-seven days; and being asked if he would not exclude June 12th because the men went to work on that date, said, Yes, sir; including the cost of handling the coal for the railroad company witness feels safe in saying that the company lost $400.00 a day at that time, that is, for the fifty-six days, and in addition to that the company lost all its commercial tonnage for the first sixteen days.

Upon being asked what the company's loss would approximately be upon the commercial coal which witness had just said the company lost by reason of the strike called April 1st, and which the company's men did not obey until April 16th, owing to the company having arranged with them to continue work at the increased price, provided they were asked only to mine engine coal, the witness replied that the loss would be about $2,100.00.

The witness is handed a small pamphlet entitled "United Mine Workers of America, District No. 6, Ohio, issued by the authority of the Executive Board of District No. 6, Ohio Miners, United Mine Workers of America, G. W. Savage, Secretary-Treasurer, for scale year April 1, 1908, to March 31, 1910," and is asked to state what it is and where he got it. Witness replied that it is what it purports to be on the face of it, and was furnished witness on request 334 by the defendant Lee Rankin; he was secretary-treasurer of the sub-district of District 6, and this pamphlet is offered and admitted in evidence marked Koch's Exhibit No. 1.

Witness is handed a paper purporting to be an official mining scale of the Pittsburg vein of subdistrict 5 of District No. 6 U. M. W. of A., Belmont, Jefferson and part of Harrison counties, Ohio, and the Pan Handle district of West Virginia, "All persons accepting employment in this mine hereby agree to be governed by the following rules and regulations," and witness is asked to look at the paper and state what it is. Witness replies that it is the scale of wages for the district as stated in the question; it was furnished the witness through the miners' officials; that paper is offered and admitted in evidence and marked Koch's Exhibit No. 2, to which the served defendants objected.

Witness is handed a paper headed, "Official Mining Scale, United Mine Workers of America of the Pan Handle District of West Virginia, in effect April 1, 1903, and ending March 31, 1904. All persons accepting employment in this mine hereby agree to be governed by the following rules and regulations," and witness is asked to look at this paper and state what it is and where he got it. Witness answers: This is a scale covering the prices to be paid for the different work for the period just stated in the question, and was made by the operators of the Pan Handle District together with the representatives of the miners; this paper is offered and admitted in evidence marked Koch's Exhibit No. 3 to which the served defendants objected.

Upon being asked from whom he got the paper marked Koch's Exhibit No. 3 witness replied that usually the operators and miners when they meet appoint a committee of both to have the scale printed and they furnish it to the operators interested.

Witness is handed a document consisting of four typewritten pages, which is headed, "The following conditions are attached as an amendment to the official mining scale, United Mine Workers of America, of the Pan Handle District of West Virginia, and are to be considered by both the United Mine Workers as well as the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company as a part of said scale." The paper has attached to it on the third page under the heading "Signed for Operator, W. H. Koch, Manager for Hitchman Coal & Coke Co., 5/22/03," and under the heading, "Signed for Miners," are the names "C. W. Savage, Secretary and Treasurer, John Stevenson, President Subdistrict 5 of 6; William Daugherty, John F. Jewell, Z. C.
335 Martin." Attached to that agreement and as the fourth page, there is matter which contains at the foot the following: "For the Company, J. C. McKinley, George W. Savage, John Stevenson." Witness is asked to look at this paper and state what he knows about it; witness replies: This paper is an agreement that was made between himself representing the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company and J. C McKinley for his company covering special conditions that were not covered by the regular scale for that period, and on the part of the miners witness remembers distinctly of Stevenson being there as well as Daugherty, Jewell, and Martin, whose signatures are attached.

Witness was asked what connection, if any, had that paper with the signing of the scale by the Hitchman Company and the resumption of work May 23d, 1903, immediately following the strike of April 2d, 1903, and replied: "The scale that was gotten up was prohibitive for us under our conditions, and that agreement was made a part of it or we would not have signed it.

The witness was asked the following question and gave the following answer:

"Q. This paper contains on its first page, under paragraph second the following language: Coal to be paid for on run of mine basis. Price of run of mine coal to be three-fifths of scale price based on ninety cents per ton for coal over a one and three-eighths inch screen. If this is not satisfactory to the miners affected a test is to be made lasting for two weeks or fourteen days over screens as agreed upon by this district, viz: 1⅜ inch space between bars with a ⅝s bar and sixty superficial feet area. What, if anything, has that provision to do with the arrangement you spoke of yesterday having been entered into relative to a modification made by the union of the union scale for your company upon the subject of the run of mine coal scale?

A. The price designated in the union scale I think is based on 7-9 of the screen price, but is not operative to any great extent at No. 8 mines, owing to the fact that these mines have no occasion to use it to any extent, whereas at the Hitchman mine, owing to our supplying engine coal, and at the McKinley mine, owing to some local trade that they have there, it was used very largely, and the 7-9 proposition was so out of reason compared to our coal that it made it prohibitive, and that is the reason we insisted on getting a percentage that was equitable; hence that agreement."

336 That paper is offered and admitted in evidence marked Koch's Exhibit No. 4, to which the served defendants objected.

On further direct examination the witness, W. H. Koch, was asked the following question: "Look at the paper now handed you headed, 'Scale for month of April, 1904,' and sub-headed, 'Wheeling, W. Va., April 14, 1904.' At a joint conference of operators and miners of sub-district 5 of District 6, Ohio, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted: 'First: This convention do now adjourn to meet Tuesday, April 26, 1904, at 9 o'clock, A. M., at Wheeling, W. Va.; that last year's scale and conditions shall prevail until the 30th of April with the reduction called for by the Indianapolis Convention. Second: That a committee of two operators and two miners be appointed to examine the scale and issue statement to superintendent and miners of the district. Committee for the Miners: W. H. Worker and Lee Rankin. Committee for the Operators: J. J. Robey and P. McBride,' another sub-heading reads as follows: 'The Official Mining scale, U. M. W. of A. of the Pittsburg Vein of Sub-district 5, of District No. 6, in effect April 1, 1904, to end April 30, 1904. All persons accepting employment in this mine hereby agree to be governed by the following rules and regulations." This paper has at the bottom of it, on one side, the following signatures: 'James Minder, Hugh Mullen, James Jarrett, Com.,' and on the other side having the printed signatures 'Signed on behalf of the operators: J. J. Robey, P. McBride. On behalf of the miners: W. H. Worker, Lee Rankin,' and in writing the signature, 'Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, W. H. Koch, Manager, 4/18/04.' Look at that paper and state what it is," and replied, "This was the scale agreed upon for that month between the operators and miners and was called a temporary scale and was signed by me and used as such."

The attention of the witness was directed to the figures "4/18/04," and he said that this paper was signed on the 18th day of April, 1904.

The paper referred to above was then offered and admitted in evidence, marked Koch's Exhibit No. 5, to which the served defendants objected.

The witness further testified that after the signing of this paper, Koch's Exhibit No. 5, on April 18, 1904, the men employed by the company who were then working union, struck on the 20th 337 day of April, 1904, and that as the result of that strike, the mine was idle until, witness thinks, some time in June.

The witness was asked the following question: "I now hand you a printed paper having attached to it a typewritten sheet of paper; the paper has upon it the following heading: 'Official Mine Scale between the Operators and United Mine Workers of America for the Pan-handle District of West Virginia. All persons accepting employment in this mine hereby agree to be governed by the following rules and regulations. In effect April 1, 1904, and ending March 31, 1906.' The typewritten sheet attached to the printed paper just identified has the following heading: 'The following local rules are made as a part of the Panhandle scale of W. Va. as adopted for the period, April 30, 1904, to March 31, 1906, and are to be recognized as such by both operator and miners interested.' And immediately following that heading are four short rules which I will read.

Rule 1. The check weighman, if possible, must be an employee of the company, but should he be chosen from the outside, he must not be objectionable to the company.

Rule 2. Day labor is allowed to work overtime and to be paid scale price for such overtime. This is to be done without any recess between the end of the eight hour day and the overtime.

Rule 3. Enough men to report for work and work on holidays, Sundays and day on which a death by accident to an employee might occur to keep fuel supplied for engines.

Rule 4. Work shall begin at seven o'clock A. M.; work until eleven o'clock; one hour for dinner, and work from twelve M. until four o'clock P. M., Eastern Standard time.' At the foot of that paper and the language, 'Signed and agreed to on behalf of the company,' is the signature, 'W. H. Koch.' On the other side of the same sheet of paper and opposite the signature of W. H. Koch, and under the heading, 'Signed and agreed to on behalf of the miners,' are the signatures, 'James Jarrett, Walter Miller, S. P. Rowand, James Conoway.' Look at this paper and state what it is?' and replied: "This first paper described by you is a mining scale as regularly made up for the district and for the period mentioned. The typewritten sheet is a special agreement that I made for the company, with our employees, and the signatures represent-338 ing our miners are the ones on the lower right hand corner."

The witness stated that that paper is the scale from April 30, 1904, to March 31, 1906, and that under it the Hitchman Company operated after it resumed work union following the strike which took place on April 20, 1904.

The paper is offered and admitted in evidence, marked Koch's Exhibit No. 6, to which the served defendants objected.

The witness was asked the following question: "I now show you a printed paper purporting to be a mine scale between the employees of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company and the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, in effect April 1, 1906, and ending March 31, 1908, and having also at the head in writing these words: 'All persons accepting employment at the mine hereby agree to be governed by the following rules and regulations.' The paper has some modifications of the printed scale by markings in ink of certain figures opposite the printed figures, indicative of the price to be paid for the particular service, and it has crossed out in ink the following language: 'Rule 9. We adopt the check-off system as a part of the agreement in this district. This pertains to regular dues and assessments of the U. M. W. of A. but shall not give any right to collect fines, unless such fines are ordered by two-thirds of the members of the local union. However, should either the operator, or local union, or the party upon whom the fine is imposed object to said fine, each of them shall have the right of appeal to the sub-district president for a final ruling. Check-off lists shall be handed in at my office not later than 5 p. m. on the 2nd and 17th days of each month; otherwise operators shall not be required to check off same.' In addition to having that rule I have just quoted, and which is printed, stricken out in ink, the following rule No. 10, is also stricken out in ink. 'Rule No. 10. No strikes shall take place at any mine under the jurisdiction of Sub-District 5 of District 6, except for specific violation of agreement. That is, screens irregular; failure to pay on pay day without explanation; violation of mining laws by operators, or reductions from scale wages until the grievance of the mine affected has been thoroughly investigated by the officers of District 6, U. M. W. of A. and operators interested. Any man or men that cause a stoppage of work at any mine in violation of this rule, shall be subject to dismissal at the will of the company.' In addition to this Rule No. 10 last referred to as being stricken out in ink, the third paragraph of Rule No. 19 is stricken out 339 in ink. That paragraph reads as follows: "Miners so suspended shall have the right of appeal to officials U. M. W. of A. and operators interested:' and in addition to having that third paragraph of Rule No. 19 stricken out, Rule No. 22 is stricken out in ink. Rule No. 22 reads as follows: 'Mines to be placed on a screen basis; run of mine to be paid for on an average of each man's screened coal per day. The price of run of mine from Boggs Run mine shall be 61 cents per car.' And in addition to having Rule No. 22 as above stricken out in ink, Rule No. 25 is also stricken out in ink. Rule No. 25 reads: 'No new rule, neither local nor general shall be permitted unless mutually agreed upon by operators and miners interested.' Attached to this printed scale is a slip of paper upon which is written: 'Rule 22. Run of mine coal used at bin to be paid for at the rate of (32 1/3) thirty-two & 1/3 cents per ton, r. of m.' This printed scale has attached to it for the purpose of signature a piece of paper upon which is written: 'Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, W. H. Koch, Manager.' Look at this paper and state what it is?" and replied: "The printed part of it was an old scale that we changed the figures on, with an advance on 5.55% and struck out the part pertaining to the U. M. W. of A. and the men were paid by it for the two years, or the part of the two years that we worked."

This paper was offered and admitted in evidence, marked Koch's Exhibit No. 7, to which the served defendants objected.

The Official Mining Scale of Association of Pittsburg Vein Operators of Ohio for their mines in Belmont, Harrison and Jefferson counties, Ohio, and the United Mine Workers of America was identified by the witness, as being in effect from April 1, 1906, and ending March 31, 1908, and was offered and admitted in evidence marked Koch's Exhibit No. 8, to which the served defendants objected.

Upon further direct examination the witness Koch testified that the Hitchman Company has approximately about five thousand acres of coal, that the Glendale Company has about twelve hundred acres of coal; the Hitchman mine is equipped with mine machinery as well as with electrical haulage—it is a modernly equipped mine; it has a steel trestle about twelve hundred feet long, running over to a bin which is designed and constructed so as to be used as a coaling station; all of this is near the B. & O. roundhouse at Benwood—about twelve hundred feet from the mouth of the mine; the 340 trestle runs out from the mine near the roundhouse that twelve hundred feet over property of the B. & O. in the B. & O. yards; the Coal Company loads coal from the mine from its trestle into cars placed on the main track or on siding near the mine; that coal, the Coal Company ships to different points, to the mills for local consumption, and during lake navigation, which usually starts about the first of April, and ends the first of December, to Lorain, which is called lake coal.

The court asked the witness what thickness of vein of coal the Hitchman Company has, and to which the witness replied, that it averages about five feet eight inches.

Upon further direct examination the witness said that the daily output of the Hitchman mine when the mine is running in full, is about eighteen hundred or twenty hundred tons, that the amount supplied to the B. & O. for engine purposes varies a great deal owing to what their requirements are; the B. & O. coals a large portion of its engines at the Hitchman mine—all of the Wheeling Division—all of the Ohio River Parkersburg division, a great many of the Pittsburg division, and a part of the Central Ohio division, at the time witness speaks; there was not so much at the time of the 1903 strike, because the Coal Company did not have the tonnage to supply them; at the time of the 1904 strike, the company was supplying coal to all of the engines that came into the Benwood yard—witness's recollection is that the company took an average for the time, and it ran about one hundred and ten engines a day; at the time of the 1906 strike the condition was the same. The witness says that at the time the men quit work, April 16, 1906, they had no grievance of any sort with the company, and the company had none whatever with them. The men had not at that time made any sort of complaint to the company.

Witness further testified that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company was not connected at that time with the Operators' Association that was dealing for the new scale with the United Mine Workers of America; that the company was not connected with the Operators' Association.

The witness was asked the following questions and made the following answers:

"Q. At the time the scale with the United Mine Workers expired March 31, 1906, what, if anything, was said or done by you in dealing with the officials of the United Mine Workers, and in dealing with your men, relative to a continuance of work at your mine pending the adjustment or agreement upon a scale between the operators and the United Mine Workers?

341 A. The scale then in force expired on March 31st, and owing to the fact of the necessity of our taking care of the railroad company, I took it up with a committee of our men about continuing to operate provided we paid the advance, as it was talked about.

Q. What was that advance?

A. It was 5.55%. The men seemed willing to do this but preferred to get the sanction of their officers who were then in convention at Columbus, before agreeing to it. I, in their presence, got in connection with Columbus over the telephone and talked with their officers and explained the situation to them, and told them that the men were there with me, and I think some of the men talked also explaining the situation. But I could not get any satisfaction from them and neither could the men. However, regardless of their failure to help us out in the predicament in which we were placed (meaning the officials) our men continued at work on the first day of April, but only to take care of the engine coal. We agreed not to load any commercial coal during that period. On the night of the 15th or 16th of April, I think it was, John Zalenka, who was an officer of the Sub-District, came down and requested our men to call a meeting—that he wanted to talk to them. Some of the men very courteously invited me to be present at that meeting, which I attended. I do not know what Zalenka told them, as I could not understand the language that he used, but I do know that the next day our men went out on a strike.

Q. The men went out on a strike April 16th?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So this visit of Zalenka to the mine, and the meeting with the men, and his talking in a foreign tongue, and your presence at the same meeting where you did not understand what was said, took place on the night of the 15th of April?

A. I presume so. I might say, here, that I do not think he talked in a foreign tongue to keep me so much from knowing what he said, but because a great many of the men present were foreigners.

Q. Were you given any sort of an understanding as to what he did say?

A. Nothing, except the men quit the next day.

Q. Do you know whether any other of the defendants visited your mine during the period the men worked without a scale?

A. Watkins was there. I do not remember the date but it was during that period.

Q. What did he do when he was there, as you recall?

A. Nothing that I know of.

342 Q. Did you have any talk with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, as nearly as you can recall, state what was said or done?

A. My recollection is that I tried to show him that they had not treated us properly.

Mr. Hogg: Who was this, now?

Witness: Watkins, the President of the Local District at that time.

Mr. Hogg: Zalenka was the man that you say was at the meeting on the night of the 15th?

A. Yes, sir. As I said, I tried, to show him that they had not treated us properly and again explained to him in person that if they insisted on those men leaving their work that he or his organization was going to take something from them that they would never be able to give them back,—that is, employment by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company under their rules. I did not see him talking to any of the men but I rather inferred that he found out that a majority were foreigners and that is the reason he sent Zalenka later on.

Q. What, if anything, was the final communication he had with you at that time when leaving you?

A. Nothing.

Q. You mean that he gave you no indication of what he would do?

A. I do not remember just what he said but from my knowledge of the man I feel safe in saying that he didn't say anything.

Q. And do I understand you to say that after he went away that the next thing that happened was the appearance of Zalenka on the ground and his meeting with the men and you, and his talking in a foreign tongue, and you not understanding him, and he going away and the men quitting the next day?

A. Yes, sir; except Zalenka met with me not by any arrangement with me. I simply was notified by the men, which is rather unusual.

Q. Your presence at that meeting, then, was not anticipated by Zalenka?

A. No; he was not looking for me.

Q. You attended because you were asked to attend by some of the men employed by the company?

A. Yes, sir."

Upon further direct examination the witness, Koch, said that he was away from home at the time the company's men made the arrangement with Mr. Hitchman under which the mine resumed work non-union June 12, 1906; that upon his return home 343 he was told about the arrangement made, which was followed out; that he and the men, after his return,—agreed upon the scale of wages, and that that scale is the scale marked Koch's Exhibit No. 7; that beginning with the resumption of work non-union it was distinctly understood and agreed that the men who were employed by the company were not to become members of the United Mine Workers, or any affiliated body, while they stayed in the company's employ, and the company on its part agreed that it would give them employment and not recognize the United Mine Workers while they were at work with the company; as to their compensation for their labor the company agreed to pay the men the same wages as were paid for the same class of work by union mines in that district, or the district over the river, which was the same; when the men were employed at that time the contract of employment to pay the scale mentioned there was verbal.

The following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. Do you still make your contracts in the same way?

A. No and yes. Mr. Pickett employs all the men, and to each and every man is explained the situation as it has existed since that date; but commencing with 1908, I think, we adopted a memorandum which we have been keeping since that time on file, of each man that is employed.

Q. What is the purpose of that memorandum?

A. It is simply a reference—that is all—and the proof that the man knows exactly what the conditions are as well.

Q. You mean that the company uses an employment card upon which the man recognizes that he works under certain conditions with respect to union or non-union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that card express, or does it not express, so far as that question is concerned, the contract which you made with your men when you resumed work June 12, 1906?

A. It expresses it; yes, sir.

The Court: Is this the same card that was filed with Mr. Cotts' deposition?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes, sir."

Upon further direct examination the witness said that he believed that in the talk to the men on April 15, 1906, *Za*lenka spoke in the foreign tongue not for the purpose especially of preventing 344 witness from understanding, but because a great many of the employees were foreigners.

Witness further said that when work was resumed June 12, 1906, a great number of the men who had theretofore been employees of the company returned to work, but they could not apply and be employed in a body; they had to apply individually for their work —each man for himself; and being asked how, as a general proposition, the company's employees ran respecting nationality—Americans and foreigners—witness said that the majority are foreigners; that that condition on that subject existed from the time the mine resumed non-union June 12, 1906, to the time the restraining order was granted in this case on October 24, 1907; that practically the same condition on the same subject existed for the time between October 24, 1907, and January, 1908, and that from January, 1908, to the time witness speaks there has been no material change in the situation upon that subject.

The following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. Now you said a while ago that you had an employment card which served as a memorandum in order to show the men and in order that you yourself might be able to show the men, if any occasion arose for it, or show any one else, the understanding between the men and your company on the subject of the union. Had that any sort of relation to the fact that so many of your men were foreigners?

A. We don't make any exception. Everybody is hired on the same basis.

Q. During the time that the mine was shut down between the period from April 16, 1906, and June 12, 1906, when the mine resumed non-union, were any efforts made either by the men themselves, or by the union officials, or by any one or more of these defendants, that you can now recall, looking to the resumption of mining by your company union?

A. I do not recall any.

Q. Did you during that time from April 16, 1906, to June 12, 1906, make any effort to operate the mine?

A. No, sir.

Q. And the men that struck—where were they during this time?

A. They were around there, I suppose.

Q. Were any of them occupants of your houses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you disturb them?

A. No, sir.

Q. After the mine resumed work non-union on June 12, 1906, were or were not efforts made from time to time by the union officials, or any one or more of these defendants, to influence you to re-unionize the mine?

A. There was.

345 Q. Well, please state, so far as you now recall, what meetings, if any, you had, and what was said or done at those meetings?

A. Upon one occasion Green, Watkins and Zalenka called on me at my office. I inquired their business and they told me they wanted to talk union and tried to explain to me wherein the company would be better off by having the organization there; but I told them that I couldn't see it that way. When leaving Mr. Green asked if I wouldn't think over the matter farther, and I told him that I would. The next time I saw him was in Wheeling and the other two gentlemen were with him—Watkins and Zalenka. He asked if I had given the matter any consideration. I told him I had, but that I hadn't found any reason to change our plans or the decision already made. He asked me then—when separating—if I would not put it up to our board of directors, and I told him I would. I did this at the next meeting and they turned the proposition down most emphatically. I did not see Green for some time, but he called me on the telephone several weeks after and asked me what had been done with that proposition, and I told him that I had put it up to the board of directors and they had refused to consider it in any manner whatever. I think that was the last discussion I had with him regarding that subject.

Q. Were those men—Watkins and Green or Watkins and Zalenka—at the mine more than once during the time intervening between June 12, 1906, and the granting of the restraining order, in October, 1907, relative to unionizing the mine?

A. If they were I don't recall it, but I met them in Wheeling and the same subject was taken up.

Q. In talking with them you and they treated each other in a gentlemanly manner, I presume?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What sort of an explanation, if any, did you give to those men when they were urging you to have the mine run union?

A. Mr. Green endeavored to explain to me the numerous advantages that our company would enjoy by being affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America, and after going into that very extensively, (he is a very able man, by the way), I simply told him that from the experience I had had personally with the union, instead of its being as he said, that we found it to be the contrary.

Q. That is, the Hitchman Company?

A. Yes, sir; and if that was the only inducement he had we could not entertain it at all.

Q. Did he offer any sort of excuse or apology for any of your wrongs as you explained them to him?

346 A. He said that he thought that was a mistake—that it should not have been done—and I told him that he had been given a chance to rectify that mistake before it occurred, and that he had failed to do so.

Q. What did you refer to by that particular reference?

A. To my telephone conversation with him, asking him to permit our men to continue at work.

Q. And that was the time of the strike of April 16, 1906?

A. Yes, sir. Well, pardon me; the telephone conversation was prior to April.

The Court:

Q. What occurred at that telephone conversation prior to April?

A. The officials, as I understood it, were in Columbus, and as I remember it, they were trying to arrange this new scale, but they had failed to agree, and anticipating a shut down of our mine in the absence of any scale I had taken the proposition up with a committee of our men and they were perfectly willing to work, but wanted the sanction of these officers before doing so.

Q. Was it an arrangement whereby you would run your mine pending a settlement of the scale?

A. Yes, sir; for them and with them. I took it up by telephone —which was the only means we had—with the officers in Columbus, and explained to them our conditions there due to our railroad contracts, and the men also, I think, talked with some of them; but they refused to take any hand in helping us out. However, I made an arrangement with the men myself regardless of these officials, and they continued at work for the fifteen or sixteen days of April and until Zalenka put in an appearance; then they quit.

The Court: I understand it now."

Upon further direct examination the witness said that he was manager of the Glendale mine.

At this point the following took place:

"The Court: After this temporary arrangement of the scale of wages, did you agree to pay it?

A. The men were asking for the 5.55% advance and we paid on that basis.

Q. On the advanced basis?

A. Yes, sir; for that period of time.

347 Mr. Hogg: That was paid after the men quit April 30th?

A. Yes, sir; but it was April 25th; it was not due until then.

Mr. Gilchrist: Please explain when and how you paid with reference to time.

A. We have two pay days each month. The period from the first to the fifteenth is included in one pay roll, the payment of which is made on the 25th of the same month. The period from the 16th to the 30th or 31st, as the case might be, is made up on another pay roll, and the payment of that is made on the 10th of the month following, except when it comes on Sunday, then we pay on the Saturday preceding.

Q. Then, as I understand you, in ordinary course you paid these men who struck pursuant to Zalenka's visit April 16th, 1906, an advance of 5.55% on the wages the men were earning prior to April 1st, 1906, which was the union scale?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you paid these men on the next pay day for all the services rendered by them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that they at that time were on a strike?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please explain why, if you were willing to pay the 5.55% advance on the wages, and why if you did in fact, as you have testified, pay this advance of 5.55% to these men at the regular pay April 25th for the services they rendered from April 1st to April 16th, you did not sign the scale with the union inasmuch as you were paying the advance?

A. The only scale we had an opportunity to sign, or could have had, was the one which carried with it that run of mine proposition; that was entirely prohibitive for our property; but we had fought that matter out once with them. Of course, we could not consider it at all—I mean paying it—as far as the run of mine was concerned. Our men did not ask us to pay it; it was only the union.

Q. You say you could not consider it. Why?

A. I don't remember the exact proportion, but I have always understood that the run of mine scale, as it was provided for in the Ohio scale, is based on the Hocking Valley district, which did not make very much slack. Now the run of mine scale as a general proposition is not used in this number eight coal, but only to a very small extent for wagons or boiler coal, or something of that sort—whereas at the Hitchman property, due to the coaling arrangement at the B. & O. roundhouse, we average from forty to fifty-five per cent. of our tonnage that must be paid for on a run of mine basis, varying, of course, with the season and so forth.

348 Q. Well, do you mean to say that you receive such a sum for your coal that if you used the general scale rule in reference to that, it would be unprofitable for you to mine at all?

A. Yes, sir; the coal won't make that. All the different prices of coal are based on the screened coal price, but the only basis that they have in their scale in Eastern Ohio is based on the Hocking Valley field, and our coal has an entirely different formation as regards the percentage of slack which it makes.

Q. And if you had adopted the general rule you would not have been able to fill your orders for run of mine coal, because of the cost of it. Is that what you mean?

A. Yes, sir. Just one moment: I understand that is seven-ninths. I know it is greater than our coal.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. And you know then that to mine run of mine coal at your mine on a union scale would be impossible as a business proposition?

A. Yes, sir; on that basis.

Q. And that arises from the difference in the coal?

A. The nature of the coal; yes, sir.

Q. During the time that the mine was run union you say that you had had this very question up with the union officials, and that the matter had been all threshed out and settled. With whom was that done? Was it John Stevenson?

A. John Stevenson, then president of the sub-district, and Mr. Haskins, president of the state organization of Ohio—both of them.

Q. Well, I saw in one of these Exhibits, I believe in your Exhibit No. 4, which was a modification of the scale upon which the men resumed work upon the settlement of the strike May 23d, 1903, a provision under paragraph second relating to the price of run of mine coal, and providing that the basis should be three-fifths of the scale price based on ninety cents per ton for coal over a 1⅜ screen, and that if this did not prove satisfactory, upon trial, that a test might be made running over a couple of weeks. Was that provision relative to this run of mine question that you have just been talking about?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall or do you know whether any resort was made to a test?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If so, state when and under what circumstances that test was made, and what the result was.

A. We started the test as we agreed to do and the question arose among our men in regard to the disposition of what is called 'bug dust.'

349 Q. Explain what 'bug dust' is.

A. It is machine cuttings—part of the coal—the slack—and in order to adjust that difference of opinion, Mr. Haskins came to my office, and after going over the matter pro and con, we agreed to discontinue this test which was made at their request, and settled on a basis, I think, of sixty-four and a fraction per cent, although I am not sure as to those figures.

Q. For the time that you ran union after the settlement of that question about the run of mine coal, what was the practice of your company relative to paying for run of mine coal?

A. It was all based on that settlement.

Mr. Hogg: You mean from the time the settlement was made, while they ran union?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if your company was willing to pay the 5.55% and did pay it to the men for the time they worked from April 1st to April 16th, 1906, what reason, if any, had you for not signing the scale? Was it this run of mine question?

A. It was the run of mine question.

Q. Was that subject discussed between you and any of the officials as to the reason why?

A. I don't remember.

Q. What was the reason you did not sign it?

A. On account of the run of mine."

D. Ryan, Secretary of the National Organization of the United Mine Workers of America; this was furnished witness together with the report of President Lewis and Vice-President White by a 353 former president—National President—of the United Mine Workers of America. This book is offered and admitted in evidence marked "McKinley's Exhibit No. 7," to which the served defendants objected.

Witness is handed a pamphlet having on its title page the following: "Official Mining Scale of Association of Pittsburg Vein Operators of Ohio for their mines in Belmont, Harrison and Jefferson counties, Ohio, and the United Mine Workers of America," and on the first page the following: "Conditions of the Columbus Day Wage Scale, 1898," and is asked to look at this pamphlet and state what, if anything, he knows about it, to which witness replies, it is the official mining scale for the Eastern Ohio mines, known as No. 8 District, that was agreed upon in 1906 and made effective from April 1st, 1906, to March 31st, 1908, and contained the prices and conditions of labor in and around the mines. This pamphlet is offered and admitted in evidence, marked "McKinley's Exhibit No. 8," to which the served defendants objected.

Cross-examination:

Witness says that the copy of the proceedings of the Eighteenth Annual Convention of the United Mine Workers, held in Indianapolis, Indiana, January 15-22, 1907, inclusive, which was filed as Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 4, was furnished to him by George W. Savage, who resides at Columbus, but witness does not know whether the record of the proceedings of the Convention was made up by George W. Savage or by somebody else; since getting this copy witness has not compared it with the proceedings as made up by the Secretary—all witness knows about this being a copy of the proceedings is that he asked for a copy and this was sent to him—witness asked for a copy of the official report and that was sent to him; witness of his own personal knowledge has no means of knowing whether it is a true copy of the original or not.

With reference to Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 5, purporting to be a copy of the proceedings of the Ninth Annual Convention of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, witness says that that copy was furnished him by the Secretary of Sub-District 5 of District 6 and that the Secretary of Sub-District 5 of District 6 gave it to witness personally; witness does not know whether that Secretary compared this copy with the original to ascertain whether it was a correct copy, but witness thinks that he did, witness says he asked the Secretary for a copy before the 354 Secretary had had it printed and the Secretary said: "Just as soon as I get it fixed up and have it printed I will give you a copy"; witness says that he did not see the Secretary compare it with the original before the Secretary gave it to the printer; witness did not compare it with the original copy after he got it.

As to McKinley's Exhibit No. 1, which purports to be a copy of the Joint Conferences of Coal Miners and Operators of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, witness says that he was a member of that Association—the Operators' Association—and that he was a member of that convention; the stenographic report was made up by Mrs. Mary Burke East; since getting this copy witness has not compared it with the original record; witness could not say definitely where the original record is; he did not compare it with the original; the only way witness knows it is a copy is that it was furnished to him as a copy.

As to McKinley's Exhibit No. 2, purporting to be a report of the Joint Convention of Illinois Coal Operators' Association and the United Mine Workers of America, District 12, held in the months of May and June, 1906, witness says that that was furnished him by the Operators' Secretary; that the witness does not know whether that Operators' Secretary has the original of this record in his possession but supposes that he has; cannot say positively that he has; did not compare this with the original to see if it is correct.

Upon further cross examination witness says that as to McKinley's Exhib-ts numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, witness cannot say where the originals of those proceedings are, neither has he compared any of those exhibits numbered as McKinley's Exhibits 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 with the original record of which they purport to be copies; they were simply furnished witness upon request as copies.

Witness says that as to McKinley's Exhibit No. 8 he obtained that copy immediately after it was made and that he took part in the conventions and meetings that made it; that he knows it is the scale that was adopted then; the 8-hour rule went into effect in 1898—it was generally adopted at that time—and this scale was based on the 8-hour regulation; witness says there seems to be some confusion as to the statement there as to the Columbus Day Wage Scale for 1898. That is merely printed in the front of this scale in order to make the eight hour conditions clear and to cover the condition of labor around the mine.

[End of cross-examination.]

355 W. H. KOCH.

Recalled for further direct examination.

The witness, W. H. KOCH, upon further direct examination was asked the following questions and made the following answers:

"Q. Did you meet William Green, John Zalenka, and A. R. Watkins at your office along about July 1, 1907?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you can recollect what took place and what was said during that visit of those men to your office, state what was done and what was said?

A. Mr. Green was spokesman for the mine officials, and he tried to explain to me in what manner the company would be better off by recognizing the union and unionizing the mine; that they could control them for us, which he evidently presumed we could not do, and the entire conversation on his part was along that line. I could not agree with him and on leaving he asked me to think the matter over."

The witness was then asked the following question: "Well, after they left what, if anything was said?" and to this and to a question by the court the witness replied that he had information shortly afterwards that some of these officials had told one of the plaintiff's men that in this conference with plaintiff witness had decided to unionize the mine and that that man had better join forces with them, (these officials) or the next thing he knew he would be out altogether.

The following questions were then asked and answers given:

"The Court:

Q. That is, you had information to that effect?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, what action did you take upon that information?

A. Upon my meeting with these same officials a short time later in Wheeling, I accused them of circulating that false report, and they denied it—each one of them. I told them that it was not necessary to incriminate themselves, as I knew who said it. Green questioned the correctness of my information, and I told him I had gotten it from one of our men whose word I would take in preference to any of theirs.

356 Q. Did you indicate to these men or any one of them at that time which one of them it was?

A. No, sir.
Q. Had you been told which one it was?
A. Yes, sir."

Upon further direct examination witness said the Hitchman mine is a slope mine; the coal is about eighty feet deep vertically from the surface, and the slope in the mine from the surface to the coal is about nine hundred feet; the coal is hauled out of the mine by an endless rope haulage up the slope; the coal is hauled by electric motors on the trestle.

The following questions wereasked and answers given:

"Q. Give me a short but comprehensive statement as to the effect of stoppages upon your mine with respect to its physical condition and with respect to the expenses incident to keeping up the mine during stoppages.

A. Owing to the nature of the coal, and especially of our roof, it is very expensive on account of the roof breaking and coming down, and of course all that has to be cleaned up at great expense before the mine can resume; and then in a great many instances you lose a part of your coal and the expense of cleaning up would cost more than the coal would be worth.

Q. Can you distinguish as to the effect between the main entries, side entries and rooms, and work gotten in readiness for future mining?

A. It is worse of course on the rooms, and the next worst condition is the room entries. The reason for that is that the main entries are protected more than those entries that you do not expect to operate so long; the consequence is there is more damage done where there is not so much protection; but we leave sufficient protection, of course, to keep the property in good physical condition while operating; but if we suspend a week, or two weeks, or six weeks, or two months, we can not offset that very well.

Q. And as a result of these stoppages, as I understand you, the roof falls in in various places, and in some instances you are unable to ever mine the coal that may be in the rooms, owing to the fact that it would cost more to remove the obstruction and downfall than the coal in the room would be worth?

A. We have had instances of that sort; yes, sir.

Q. During strikes you have had with the United Mine Workers?

A. Yes, sir."

Upon further direct examination the witness said that the Hitchman Company had never had any strikes except when it 357 was running its mine with the United Mine Workers; that the company's earnings depended upon the company's output; that the regularity of production and ability to produce and deliver without disappointment or delay has a great deal to do with the earning power of the company.

The following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. What effect, if any, would stoppages have?

A. In the way of trade, you all understand, there is great competition in this coal business, and we can not go out and get trade by simply asking for it. Those things have to be looked after and cared for, and expenses have to be incurred, and after you get the business, then you would be forced to fail to deliver owing to a strike, in which the buyer is not interested, and most naturally some other fellow will get the business.

Q. Have you experienced such trouble as a result of these strikes incident to your dealing with the United Mine Workers of America?

A. Yes, sir."

Upon further direct examination witness said, with reference to lake trade, that there is a very large territory in the North and Northwest in which there is very little, if any, coal found and that territory is furnished with coal from the coal centers—principally Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and Pennsylvania—and is taken up during the summer season usually, or largely, and owing to the cheaper transportation it is taken to Cleveland, Lorain, Ashtabula, and some other points, where they have dock facilities, and it is loaded on vessels and taken over to the other side to Duluth, Superior, Milwaukee, and a number of other places—and unloaded there, and then delivered from those points; it is stored there until the following winter; the reason it is done in the summer is on account of the cheaper transportation; transportation is cheaper in the summer on account of being able to transport it by water instead of rail all the way, and possibly and largely owing to return cargoes; in explanation of that witness says that a great many of these coal carrying boats come south from that country, bring iron ore down —some of them—and others bring lumber, and going back they take the coal; that the coal trade so far as this lake trade during the summer is concerned is a kind of rush business, and to be in the market the seller must be active and must be able to deliver 358 promptly when he contracts; if it is not furnished during the lake season, it is not furnished that year at all, and that ends it.

The following question was asked and answer given:

"The Court: Is the season governed by the time when the lake freezes up?

A. The insurance partially governs that your Honor. The insurance people are governed by the weather to a great extent—that is, as to the opening time and closing time."

The witness on further direct examination was asked the following questions and gave the following answers:

"Q. Give approximately the date of the opening and the date of closing the lake season. I understand, of course, it depends on the season?

A. Yes, sir. Usually the first of April is set for the opening, or about that time, and from the middle of November to the first of December for the closing, although I have known it to be closed earlier and have also known it to remain open later.

Q. At the time of the attempted unionizing of the Hitchman mine in the summer and fall of 1907, were you mining coal, and if so, were you furnishing lake coal?

A. Yes, sir; we were.

Q. Were you able, as a matter of fact, up to the closing of the season of that year, to fill all the orders that came to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Can you explain why it was that you were unable to do that?

A. Our sales agent in Cleveland disposes of the tonnage that we expect that we will be able to deliver; and based on figures that I had given him he sold a certain amount of lake coal, but before we got through making deliveries we found we needed more men—in fact, we were hiring men constantly, and due to the agitation of the United Mine Workers' Agents we were placed in a position where we did not feel free to hire these men who made applications for work. There was no scarcity of men, but we were afraid to put them on for fear they were sent there for a purpose and that they might cause us trouble. The consequence was our output was cut down and we did not get as much coal out as we needed, and I understood from Mr. Upstill that he had to buy some at other places to take care of that contract.

Q. At the time these proceedings were going on between you and the officials of the United Mine Workers, do you know 359 whether they knew anything about your contract with your men not to become members of the Mine Workers' Union, and on your part that you were to run the mine as non-union?

A. I told them so.

Q. Why does your company still insist on running non-union?

A. We can get better results. We don't have the shutdowns and the annoyances to which we were subjected through no cause of ours or our men either, when we were running union."

Upon further direct examination, the witness said that the method of employment at the Glendale mine as compared with the method of employment at the Hitchman mine is the very same; that the opening at the Glendale mine is a shaft about ninety feet deep, to which statement the served defendants objected.

The following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. Did you ever see a man by the name of Thomas Hughes, one of the defendants in this suit, about your mine, and if so, state as nearly as you now can recall, what he did and what he said?

A. I saw him about the property—in front of the property—and understood from the men that he was there to organize them.

The Court:

Q. Did you have any conversation with him?

A. No, sir.

Q. When was this—before or after your conference with Green?

A. After.

Q. How long after?

A. Possibly six weeks.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Did you see Hughes more than once?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was the next time you saw him?

A. I saw him several times around the Hitchman property and once at the Glendale.

Q. And do you recall the month and the year when Hughes was there?

A. I recall very well the year—1907—and I think the month was September."

(End of direct examination.)

360 Cross-examination:

The witness, W. H. Koch, was asked and answered the following questions:

"Q. Mr. Koch, you organized union beginning 1903, did you not?

A. I did not organize it, no; the miners organized it,—the men there.

Q. And you contracted to run union at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you stated that you met your men—your employees—and stated to them that if they wanted to organize you had no objection to interpose?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say that after you organized there was a strike for one day, after you organized union?

A. No, sir; there was a strike for longer than that.

Q. I understood you to say that the next day after you went on the union basis, the men went out?

A. It lasted about six weeks as I recollect.

Q. I am getting at this first: You stated in your examination in chief that they went out the next day after the union was formed?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you know what that was about? Wasn't it some matter of disagreement in regard to the scale, or something of that sort?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anyhow it was adjusted and they went to work the next day?

A. Beg pardon; I did not say that.

Q. Well, did they go to work the next day?

A. No, sir.

Q. When did they go to work?

A. My recollection is they were out fifty some days after that time.

Q. The next day after they became union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What day did you become union?

A. About the first of April.

Q. And the next day they went on a strike?

A. April 2nd they went on a strike.

Q. Was that a general strike all over the country?

A. I think it was but I am not sure as to that.

Q. Then when the strike was adjusted, they resumed as usual, union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the cause of those men going out on a strike or not?

Witness: At our mine?
Mr. Hogg: Yes.
A. My recollection is it was in regard to run of mine.
361 Q. That was the dispute?
A. Yes, sir,—the run of mine basis.
Q. Were you willing before they came out on the strike to pay the run of mine basis that was paid in Ohio?
A. No, sir.
Q. That was the difference?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. They wanted the run of mine basis that was paid on the Ohio scale and you declined to give it?
A. They wanted the run of mine basis as called for in the scale of the Ohio side.
Q. And you declined to give that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And that brought about the strike?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, during those fifty days while they were out, efforts were made to adjust that difference, I presume, between you and the organization?
A. I suppose there were but I do not remember.
Q. You finally did get it adjusted?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And on a different basis from that obtaining in the Ohio field?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are engines coaled on the Ohio side as they are coaled on your side with run of mine coal?
A. I think they are; yes, sir.
Q. Do you recall at what mines on the Ohio side?
A. There are a number of mines in Ohio that coal engines, I imagine.
Q. And they take the run of mine coal as they take the run of mine coal in West Virginia?
A. I suppose they do but I do not know as to that.
Q. Were you willing to pay the run of mine price for mining engine coal that was being paid on the Ohio side, just before the strike?
A. We had no occasion to pay the scale before the strike.
Q. Well, you were not willing to pay it, were you?
A. We were not asked to pay it before we unionized.
Q. I say after the strike—after you unionized?
A. No, no, sir.
Mr. Hogg: I am now addressing myself to you after the organization on a union basis?
Q. Then when this difference as to the run of mine coal was adjusted, after you went union, it continued until April 1st, 1906, did it, on that basis? You adjusted the price on that basis?
A. The first adjustment was not adhered to. It was to be a test but the miners' officials, through Mr. Haskins, called that test off and we agreed on a price that has been the basis ever since.

362 Q. The test, then, was to bridge over the difficulty you had until you could get some final basis, and it continued until this final basis was fixed, did it?

A. It continued until it was called off.

Q. It was not supposed to be permanent? It was temporary?

A. I think the agreement said for fourteen days.

Q. And then you fixed it permanently?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had no more trouble on account of run of mine coal, while you were running union, as to the price?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. As to the price after you fixed it by agreement?

A. The question came up in the settlement and our signing the scale in 1906.

Q. What difficulty did you have then?

A. When the advance was granted to 5.55% the miners wanted to reopen that run of mine question again.

Q. I do not believe you understand the question I am propounding?

A. Possibly not.

Q. The question I asked is this: After the expiration of the fourteen days, when you adjusted the differences on the scale of run of mine coal, that adjusted it until April 1st, 1906, did or did it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you had no more disagreement or difficulty as to the price of run of mine coal until after the 31st day of March, 1906?

A. As I recollect it that is correct; yes, sir.

Q. And the disagreement between yourself and the union, or between the Hitchman Company and the union, arose out of the price to be paid for run of mine coal?

A. As I recollect it.

Q. You were willing to extend the 5.55% to the screen coal and to the run of mine coal on the basis which you had previously been operating?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you were not willing to accept the basis fixed for the Ohio field for run of mine coal?

A. We were not.

Q. In your examination in chief you stated that there was an organizer among your men preparatory to your adopting the union scale and policy in 1903?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that he went away after you engaged your men on the union basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would state who that man was? What was his name?

A. I cannot recall his name. I could describe the man but I cannot recall his name.

Q. He was none of these defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge if he was a member of the United Mine Workers of America?

A. He purported to be; that is all I know about it.

363 Q. You do not know of your own knowledge?

A. No.

(End of cross-examination.)

E. C. Pickett.

Direct examination:

My name is E. C. Pickett; age, forty-two; residence, Glendale, West Virginia; occupation, mine superintendent—superintendent for the Hitchman and Glendale mines; have worked for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company since November 4, 1901; has been in coal mines nearly all his life, or since he was old enough; during the period after the 1903 strike at the Hitchman mine and up to the time of the strike of 1906 at that mine, the Hitchman mine was operated union; prior to becoming union in 1903, the Hitchman mine was operated non-union; and since it started up after the 1906 strike it has been operated non-union.

The following questions were asked and answers given:

"Q. Do you remember what took place after March 31st, 1906, with reference to the men continuing to work?

A. Well, the men continued to work until April 16th, 1906, and they had a meeting with John Zalenka, or he had a meeting with them. I think it was on the night of the 15th of April. I am not sure about that but I think it was the night of the 15th, and they stopped work on the 16th of April, 1906.

Q. Was there any dispute between the company and the men, so far as you have any knowledge?

A. No, sir; not the men that were working for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company at that time.

Q. Was there any difference that you know of at that time between the officials of the United Mine Workers and the company with reference to the men working?

A. Why, the only difference was that the officials apparently wanted the men to stop. In fact, from that time—from the first of April, or March 31st, until April 16th,—I do not think that any of the officials came around the mine at all until Zalenka came in on the 15th.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any efforts made by Mr. Koch to secure the consent of the officials of the United Mine Workers for your employes to continue at work pending the settlement of the scale between the operators and the United Mine Workers?

A. Yes, sir.

364 Q. And if so, state what that is?

A. Well, at different times—at several different times—Mr. Koch made an effort to have some of the officials come to the Hitchman mine and try to fix up the scale, or some agreement, by which the men would be permitted to work pending a settlement, but he failed to get any of them there.

Q. Did you hear any telephone conversation on that subject?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Between whom, so far as you were informed, at the time?
A. I heard a conversation between Mr. Koch and President Green—at least I was informed it was President Green.
Q. And where was Green?
A. Why, I think he was in Columbus at the time of the conversation, or supposed to be.
Q. Did you hear Mr. Koch say anything in that telephone communication respecting the company's willingness or unwillingness to pay the union scale that the union was contending for?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What, if anything, did you hear Mr. Koch say?
A. Mr. Koch told him that we wanted the men to continue to work and did not want the mine closed. He told him that he didn't want the mine to be closed down—that he wanted the men to continue to work and especially to continue to load the railroad coal, and he told him that the company was willing to pay the price that the men asked, and if they would permit the men to continue to work that he was willing to sign the scale and pay whatever scale was agreed upon, but if they stopped the men that they were taking something from those men that the miners' organization could not give them back—and that was, employment at the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company.
Q. And you say the men struck on April 16th?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Following the visit by Zalenka?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the meeting with the men?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know anything respecting the circumstances under which the Hitchman mine resumed operation, June 12th, 1906, non-union?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. If so, tell what you remember about those facts, giving your personal knowledge and not anything that anybody told you?
A. Well, the men had a meeting with Mr. Hitchman prior to June 12th. I was present at this meeting. Mr. Hitchman told the men that the company would not recognize the United Mine Workers after being treated the way they had been but if the men were willing to go to work non-union that they could do so. Mr.
365 Koch was not at home at the time and Mr. Hitchman told them that he would not sign a scale with them at that time, but as soon as Mr. Koch came home he knew that he would fix the matter up satisfactorily to the men; and the men were perfectly satisfied with that agreement and they went to work non-union.
Q. Were you present at any time in 1907 when there was a meeting between Mr. Koch, William Green, John Zalenka and A. R. Watkins?
A. Yes, sir; I was present.
Q. State, so far as you now recall, what was said at that meeting during your presence and in your hearing?

A. Mr. Green tried to show Mr. Koch where it would be to the advantage of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company to have the men reorganized, and told him that he thought it would be a whole lot better to deal with the officials of the United Mine Workers direct than to deal with the men. Mr. Koch told him from past experience he had found it to be just the opposite, and when they left I remember of Mr. Green asking Mr. Koch to consider the matter and that he would see him at another time.

Q. What difficulties, if any, had the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company encountered during the time the mine was run union?

A. Well, they had numerous strikes—they had several. At different times they had strikes and difficulties that were not caused by any misunderstanding or dissatisfaction among the employes of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, but the strikes were all brought about by the officials of the United Mine Workers, by them ordering the men to strike in sympathy with other mines—a sympathetic strike it is called—or at the expiration of the scale; and one time—I think it was in 1903—my recollection is there was a little dispute over the run of mine scale, but this was the only strike that we had, that I remember of, that was not brought about by the officials of the United Mine Workers.

Q. Explain so far as you now recollect what the trouble was in 1903 as to the run of mine coal?

A. Well, the run of mine price—the scale was based on the run of mine price in the Hocking Valley district, and it was too high for this No. 8 coal—the coal at the Hitchman Company's mine.

The Court:

Q. What was the run of mine price?

A. I am not sure, but it was either seven-ninths or five-sevenths of the clean coal price. I am not sure which it was; I am not positive; it was either five-sevenths or seven-ninths, and I think it was five-sevenths.

366 Q. Five-sevenths of what price?

A. The clean coal price. Whatever the clean coal price was to be, the run of mine price was to be five-sevenths of that I believe.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. If any difficulty arose about that run of mine coal in 1903, how was that difficulty adjusted?

A. Well, the men went to work on an average basis pending a test which was to be made, agreed upon by the officials with Mr. Koch, and the coal was averaged, and the men were paid for the run of mine coal. Whatever the clean coal averaged they were paid the same basis for the run of mine until this test was made. The test was started. I do not remember just the date it was commenced. Mr. Haskins was State President of the United Mine Workers at that time, I think, and he was present when the test was to be made. The test was to be two weeks or fourteen days or something like that but it did not continue for the full length of time. It was called off by Mr. Haskins and a flat price was agreed upon for run of mine coal between Mr. Haskins and Mr. Koch, which has been the basis of run of mine coal ever since.

Q. And you are paying now in mining run of mine coal a price corresponding to that settlement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am not sure that I understood whether you said just what was in controversy between the union officials and the United Mine Workers at the time the men quit work April 16th, 1906. Had the run of mine basis scale in Ohio anything to do with the failure on the part of the company to at once sign the new scale inasmuch as the company announced that it was willing to pay the advance of 5.55%?

A. No, sir; it had not, I do not think.

Q. Did you hear any discussion of that between Columbus and Wheeling in that conversation?

A. The only conversation I heard was Mr. Koch talking to Mr. Green that night. Mr. Koch expressed his willingness to sign the scale or demand that the union was making if the men were permitted to continue at work, and told them that all he asked them to do was to permit the men to work on and that he would sign the scale that might be agreed upon later, or he would sign the 1903 scale—that was the scale the men were demanding at that time.

Q. And that was the scale that you had been working under up to March 31, 1906?

A. Yes, sir; excepting the men were demanding an advance and the company agreed to pay the advance.

Q. What, if anything had you to do with the employment of men at the mine after the settlement of the strike and the 367 going to work non-union, June 12th, 1906?

A. I had full charge of the employment of all of the men and I employed all of them myself.

Q. State as nearly as you can now recollect just what you did and what you said when you came to employ a man?

A. Any man that made application for employment, I told him personally the conditions under which we were working and explained it to him. I told him that we were paying the price which had been demanded by the union and were paying as much as anybody else, but the mine was run non-union and it would continue to run non-union; that the company would not recognize the United Mine Workers of America, but if they (these men) wanted to work under these conditions it was perfectly satisfactory with me, and, if not, why I did not want them to accept of the position at all. And every man that went to work there expressed himself saying that it was satisfactory to him to work under those conditions; that all they wanted was the price; that is, that they wanted to be paid for their work the same as other people.

Q. What, if anything, was said on the subject of their membership in the union if they wanted to continue working at your mine?

A. I also told them that any man who wanted to become a member of the United Mine Workers—that that was his business—but he could not be a member of the United Mine Workers and be affiliated with the United Mine Workers and be under the employ of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, or be under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers; that the mine was run non-union so far as the United Mine Workers of America were concerned.

Q. You mean you made every man understand that while he worked for the Hitchman Company he must keep out of the union?

A. Yes, sir; or at least they said they understood it. They told me they understood it and gave me reason to believe that they understood it.

Q. Since January, 1908, in addition to having the contract such as you have stated you made with the men and make now, what precaution have you taken with reference to having the men indicate in some way their understanding about the question of unionism?

A. We have an employment card at the office that every man receiving employment at the Hitchman mine is required to sign or does sign before he goes to work.

Q. Then I understand you to say that the first thing that is done by the men is to see you and you explain to him the condi-368 tions about the mine and the terms upon which he may work at the mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then if he desires to work under those conditions, you require him further, as an evidence of his understanding of that as to the union question, to sign this memorandum card?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have employed all the men since June 12th, 1906?

A. Well, now, there was a time that I was sick and the men that were employed during that time, of course I did not employ them. With the exception of that time, I have.

Q. With the exception of some temporary illness?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever meet organizer Thomas Hughes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, state so far as you now recall, what he said and what he did, within your personal knowledge?

A. Well, the first time I met Mr. Hughes or saw Mr. Hughes, he was near the tipple of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company looking over the sheets where the weights are put up for the inspection of the coal every day. There is a sheet put up each day near the tipple and he was standing there looking at that sheet. At this time I did not know who he was, but I believe it was that same day, or possibly the next day, I was walking down the board walk in front of the company houses and I saw Mr. Hughes sitting on one of the porches talking to some of the men, and I suspicioned that he was talking organization to them and trying to induce them to join the union; so I went up to him and asked him if he knew he was on the company's property and he said he did. Then I told him, I says, "The best thing you can do is to get off of the company's property and stay off;" and he says, "All right; I can do that, too;" and he got up and walked out on the street. Then I saw him several different times after that and talked to him on different occasions.

Q. Well, on those occasions, what in substance was your conversation as near as you now recall?

A. Well, one day, in particular, I met him in front of the Western Supply Company's store.

Q. Where is the Western Supply Company's store?

A. Why, it is almost directly east of the well, it is in the same building with the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company's office.

Q. Adjoining the mine?

A. Yes, sir; right near the mine. He came up to me and I was talking to him about the organization. He wanted to know 369 why we objected so hard to the union—if the company was willing to pay the price or wages fixed by the union, why they objected so much to the union. I told him it was because they had always in the past caused them so much trouble by the stoppage of the mine, and that they apparently did not want to deal square with the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, and for different reasons; but that these were the principal reasons. As far as the price was concerned, that the company did not object to paying the men the price and as much as anybody else; but even at that it had been proven that the union would not allow the men to work even if the company was willing to pay the price. Mr. Hughes said to me, he says, "Well, it does not make any difference to me, anything about it," he says; "I am working for the union just the same as you are working for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company." He says, "I am getting $3.75 a day for staying here and you cannot stop me from walking up and down this street." I says, "We won't try to stop you." He says, "I am getting $3.75 a day from the union for working here and I am going to stay here until they call me away;" and he did stay there for several days, and when they would be going home from their work in the evening I saw him on several different occasions stopping the men and talking to them. Of course I did not hear what he had to say to them. I supposed that he was talking union to them but I did not hear it.

Q. Do you now recall any other conversation you had with Hughes?

A. Well, one morning I went to the Glendale mine on a street car; this was the day after the men had quit work at the Glendale, or some of the men had quit work there, and I met Mr. Hughes on the pike a little south of the Glendale mine, and he said to me, "Well, I suppose you fellows are good and mad this morning?" I says, "I do not know of anybody being very mad;" and he says, "This puts the men in a pretty bad fix—these men that you discharged the day before;" and he says, "If they go to work and get a job at any union mine, our rule is a man that has been working at a non-union mine and gets employment at a union mine—it is our rule to impose a fine of twenty dollars on each and every man over and above his initiation fee," and he says, "Lots of these men haven't got the twenty dollars to pay." I told him that was not our fault; that they did not have to quit; that they knew the conditions under which they were working and that they did not have to quit; that we did not force them to join the union; that we asked them not to and they agreed not to join." And I left him 370 at that time. I do not remember how long it was then before I saw him again but I saw him nearly every day for a certain period of time. I do not remember how long he was around there but he was there pretty nearly every day for a couple of weeks and may be longer.

Q. Did you hear him make any address at any time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what you now recall as to that?

A. Well, one night he made an address on the steps that go to a gate in front of a residence on the pike just North of the Hitchman mine, and he told the men that the reason the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company did not want to recognize the union was, that it would not be very long until they would work for a whole lot less wages than they were getting then, and he tried to induce them to join the union for their own protection, and said it was only a question of time until the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company would cut their wages, and so on. I do not remember just exactly what he said but that was the substance of his address.

Q. Did he say anything in that address about any of your employes?

A. He did in one particular: he did to one man in particular.

Q. Well, what did he say?

A. He said that the mayor of Benwood had told him that there were better men than William Daugherty, or that there had been better men than William Daugherty, hung; and he said—I don't remember; well he intimated that he thought he ought to be hung, too. I do not remember just exactly the words he said now.

End of direct examination.

Cross-examination:

Upon cross-examination, the witness, Pickett, said that he had been mine superintendent of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company for about nine years; that on and after June 12th, 1906, he had the employment of the men who worked in the mine of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; that when the men came to him to be employed he told them that the Hitchman mine was running non-union, and that it intended to run non-union; that if they worked for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company they would have to work as non-union men; that is what witness said to every one that applied for employment; the men stated that they were satisfied to work with that understanding—they gave me reasons to be-371 lieve that they understood what witness said; some of the men—some of the foreigners could not just talk plain or speak the English language very well—but they always understood, or appeared to, and said that they understood the conditions and were perfectly satisfied; at that time that was all that constituted the agreement with the men when they went to work, and witness continued to employ the men verbally in that manner until the adoption of the card in 1908; then they signed that card and left it at the office.

Upon further cross examination witness said that between the first of April, 1906, and the 16th of April, 1906, witness was present when Mr. Koch was holding a conversation with Mr. Green over the phone. Witness does not know, of his own knowledge, who was at the other end of the phone; witness heard Mr. Koch say to the party at the other end of the phone that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company was willing to pay the advance; that was to be an advance on the price that had been paid for two years previous—or a part of the two years—that the company worked on a price that had been agreed upon between Mr. Koch and Mr. Haskins for run of mine coal.

At this point the witness was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Did you know that at that time the scale proposed by the union contemplated the Hocking Valley scale?

A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Well, you knew that it was to be a uniform scale throughout Ohio?

A. All I know about this scale is that the scale that we were working under had been agreed upon between Mr. Koch and the officials of the United Mine Workers of America, and I naturally supposed it was a union scale.

Q. Well, did you know that was a difference—I mean in the scale of the Hocking Valley and in the Ohio country generally on run of mine?

A. I heard it.

Q. Well, you heard the differences they had were adjusted?

A. I knew they had had just previous to this—that they had had a scale of a certain percentage for run of mine which was based on the per cent. of the screen coal. As I said before I do not remember for certain whether it was seven-ninths or five-sevenths.

Q. You do not seem to catch my question. You recollect that you spoke about there being a test?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that that test was to be made for a period of fourteen days but that it was called off by Mr. Haskins. That is correct, isn't it? That is what you said?

A. Yes, sir.

372 Q. Now, then, you went to work and fixed up an arbitrary basis different from the one in Ohio agreed upon by the union and Mr. Koch?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, that was the basis upon which the advance was to be made?

A. Yes, sir."

Upon further cross examination the witness, Pickett, said that he does not remember the exact date when he first saw Mr. Hughes after the company started to run its mine non-union in 1906, but says that it was along in the fall of 1907; rather thinks it was October, but is not positive; when witness first saw Hughes then, he saw him near the tipple of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; near the pit mouth; did not talk to him on that occasion; just saw him there; did not know him at that time—it was the first time witness ever saw him; at that particular time witness was not informed that that was Mr. Hughes; the next time witness saw Hughes, it was either that same day or the day following. Witness saw him in front of a company house. The houses run east and west and there is a board walk in front of the houses, and witness saw him down in front of a house.

At this point the witness was asked and answered questions as follows:

"Q. You were how far from him when you saw him?

A. Well, I don't just exactly remember, when I first saw him. I was several hundred feet from him when I first saw him.

Q. Then you went to him and asked him his business there, did you?

A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. What did you say to him?

A. I just asked him if he knew he was on the company's property.

Q. And he answered that he did?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you told him to get off?

A. I told him to get off of the company's property and to stay off.

Q. And he got off and went out into the street?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when he got into the street did you try to talk to him some?

A. Not on this special occasion I did not.

Q. Now, when did you next see him?

A. Well, I do not remember exactly the next conversation. I remember of having this conversation that I speak of in front of the Western Supply Company's store, but I do not remember whether that was the next time I saw him or not.

Q. Well, the next time you talked was in front of the Western Supply Company's store?

A. Yes, sir.

373 Q. Do you recollect what he was doing there?

A. He was just standing there.

Q. Was there anybody else there?

A. Not right then.

Q. Now, at that time you engaged him in conversation?

A. No, sir; he engaged me.

Q. Well, what did he say to you?

A. He asked me why the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company objected to the union when they were willing to pay the price.

Q. And you told him your objections?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, that was the extent of your conversation? You told him your objections?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you went on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he and you parted?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, when did you next see him to talk with him?
A. I think the next time was at Glendale.
Q. That was on the property of the Glendale Coal & Coke Company?
A. No, sir.
Q. It was in the town of Glendale?
A. It was on the pike that runs from Wheeling to Moundsville.
Q. Well, what were you doing up there?
A. I had charge of the Glendale mine.
Q. And you were on your way to the Glendale mine?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then on your way there you met him?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you meet him or overtake him?
A. Well, he was standing there and I came up to him.
Q. Was there anybody else there?
A. No, sir.
Q. You had this conversation then with him alone?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, did he there engage you in conversation or did you engage him?
A. Well, I don't exactly remember which one spoke first, but the first words of course—the first thing he said was, "I suppose you fellows are good and mad this morning?"
Q. "Good and mad this morning?" Well, what did you say?
A. I said, "I do not know of anybody being mad."
Q. Well, what else was said?
A. Then he told me—he says, "This puts these men that you discharged yesterday—it puts them in a pretty bad fix."
Q. And what did you say?
A. Well, he continued to tell me the consequences.
Q. Well, now, did you say anything else after he told you the consequences of the discharging of those men?
A. All I said was, that as far as putting them in a bad fix was concerned, they did not have to join the union.
374 Q. And you told him that it was their own fault that they were discharged?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And not yours?
A. That they were working for the Glendale Coal Company and they understood the conditions—that they were not to join the United Mine Workers. If they wanted to, though, they would have to cease their employment with the Glendale Coal Company.
Q. And you gave him to understand that you were simply enforcing your part of the contract by discharging them?
Mr. Gilchrist: He has not said that.
Mr. Hogg: Did I misrepresent you in any way there, Mr. Pickett? If I did, I certainly did not intend to.
Witness: I guess not.

Q. Well, were those men that had been discharged working for the Hitchman Company or the Glendale Company?

A. The Glendale Company.

Q. Well, now, you went on then, did you, to the mine after you finished that conversation? Was there anything else occurred at that conversation?

A. I do not remember of anything.

Q. Well, if there was anything of importance you would likely remember it. Now, when did you next see Mr. Hughes?

A. Well, I could not say just exactly the next time. I saw him so many different times that I cannot say just exactly when was the next time I saw him.

Q. When did you next talk with him, to your recollection?

A. I think it was the night he made the address to the men at Benwood.

Q. Now, where was that address delivered?

A. Just North of the Hitchman coal mine, along the pike.

Q. About how many men were there, do you recollect?

A. I do not know how many.

Q. What would you say, approximately?

A. Oh, there might have been twenty-five, or between twenty-five and fifty some place.

Q. And a good many of them were foreigners, weren't they?

A. Well, there were some of them.

Q. Was he speaking in English?

A. What I heard him say; yes, sir.

Q. Well, in that speech, as I understood you in your examination in chief, he was arguing with them on the advantages 375 they would derive by joining the union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And stated in that connection that this scale that they were then working on would be reduced after awhile?

A. If they didn't join the union.

Q. And what else did he say, that you recollect, bearing on the matter of the men and the work at the mine?

A. Well, that was about the subject all the way through—that he was just trying to induce the men to join the union.

Q. Well, did you have any conversation with him personally after that, prior to October 24th, 1907, before the suing out of this injunction and after he made that speech there?

A. I do not remember whether I did or not; I do not believe I did; I do not remember.

Q. If you did you would likely recollect it, wouldn't you?

A. Well, I might and I might not; he was there for several days.

Q. I thought you said he was there off and on—or that you saw him off and on there—for about two weeks?

A. I think possibly it was about two weeks but it may have been longer.

Q. And you think it was in the month of October?

A. I think it was but I am not positive about that—about the month.

Q. Well, you said it was in the fall. It was either in September or October, then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there during the whole of the time that he was speaking to the men on the occasion you have just mentioned, or were you there only a part of the time?

A. I was not in hearing of him all the time, but most of the time.

Q. What time in the day was it that this meeting was held if you recollect?

A. Why, it was in the evening.

Q. On the side of the street or in the street or how?

A. The houses along the street sit up on a bank and coming up from the street there were steps—possibly four or five steps—and he was standing on the top step in front of a residence there.

Q. Do you know whose residence that was?

A. I do not remember who lived there now.

Q. It was not on the company's property, was it?

A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. It was on another person's property?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you do not recall the name, then, of the person who lived there at that time?

A. No, sir; I do not.

376 Q. Do you know whether it was a coal miner that lived there?

A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. Do you recall what the party did do that lived there? You say that he was not a coal miner.

A. No, sir; I do not."

End of cross examination.

Redirect examination:

Upon redirect examination the witness, Pickett, was asked the following questions and made the following answers:

"Q. In your direct examination, I understood you to say that Hughes had gotten a number of men to quit work at the Glendale mine?

Mr. Hogg: He didn't say that; he said they were discharged.

Mr. Gilchrist: No; he didn't say that.

The Court:

Q. How was that? Had Hughes gotten any number of men to quit at the Glendale and Hitchman mines?

A. Well, it was brought about by Mr. Hughes, I think. There was a meeting of the men the night before this near the B. & O. station at Glendale.

Q. Did any of them quit work?

A. Well, the// way it came about was this: The men were at the meeting the night before near the B. & O. station at Glendale, and Mr. Hughes was present talking to them down at the B. & O. station, and I got the names of five of the men who were at this meeting, and I instructed the mine foreman to have these men remain on the outside of the mine the next morning until we could have a talk—I mean with these five particular men—and when the mine foreman told these men to remain on the outside of the mine—that we wanted to see them and have a talk with them—why, there was fifteen others (there was twenty altogether)—there was fifteen others who said they would stay out and see what we wanted. I was not present just exactly at this time but I was immediately after, and when I came up to these men they were sitting there on a pile of mine props and I told them, I says, 'From your actions last night and also this morning it seems to me as though you want to become members of the United Mine Workers,' and, I says, 377 'You understand that you cannot become members of the United Mine Workers and work for the Glendale Coal Company, but,' I says, 'we haven't any objections or we are not trying to hinder you from becoming members of the United Mine Workers of America, but you understand that you cannot be members of the United Mine Workers and work for the Glendale Company;' and one of the number—I do not remember exactly which one—says, 'Well, I suppose that means for us to get our tools out?' And I told him that was exactly what it meant, and I also told them as soon as their tools were outside of the mine their money would be ready for them."

(End of Redirect examination.)

B. C. Rowand.

Direct examination:

My name is B. C. Rowand; age, thirty-two; residence, McMechen; occupation, miner; has worked for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company since 1903, with the exception of a few months; has worked in a good many capacities for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company during that time—as a miner, mule driver, machine man, and as mine foreman; his present position at the Hitchman mine is check weighman; has been acting as check weighman there for six months; witness recalls the occasion of the 1906 strike at the Hitchman mine.

Upon further direct examination the witness was asked and answered questions as follows:

"Q. Please tell me, as nearly as you now recall, the circumstances surrounding the men continuing to work from April 1st, 1903, to April 16th, 1906?

A. Well, we were working under the United Mine Workers at that time, and when the 1st of April came—well, along the first of the year we sent a representative to Indianapolis, or wherever their convention was, (I think that was the place they met) and when he came back—he stayed up close to the first of April—and when he came back as one of the committee, Mr. Koch asked us to have our representative meet him with the scale, saying that he would be ready to sign it on the first day of April.

Q. You were one of the committee of the men at the mine?

A. Yes, sir; then when this man came back we met him
378 and took him to Mr. Koch's office and Mr. Koch asked him—(Interrupted).

Mr. Hogg: I do not suppose that conversation ought to go into the record. What occurred there is not competent.

Mr. Gilchrist: I was leading the witness to detail the facts.

Mr. Hogg: All right; go along, except that it makes so much record.

Mr. Gilchrist: Well, I would prefer to let the witness continue.

Witness (continuing): And Mr. Koch asked him for the scale and he says 'I haven't any.' That was the start of his then calling up Mr. Green and asking for permission to work until they got the scale. This was over the 'phone and he granted us permission to work until the board members met. I think it was the board members but I am not positive about that.

Mr. Hogg: The executive board?

A. Yes, sir. And then on the 15th day—I believe it was the 15th but I am not positive; it was a day or two before we quit work—they issued a card and we got a card that all miners was to come out on a strike until they did get a scale. Well, two or three days after this Mr. Watkins brought a card over and he explained to us—a committee of us—and then we had a convention and I was one of the men at the convention in Wheeling. When they sent a man down and ordered us out we took the matter up with Mr. Green and also with Mr. Lewis. I went to Mr. Lewis's house with another committee and asked him personally if he could not let us work down there pending a settlement, and he said, well, he didn't know; he said he would see about it; he said there were lots of them wanting to do that same thing; and I told him we had different conditions down there from what they had at some other places and that if we did not load this coal ourselves that they would get the coal some place else and put it right up over our own tipple, and I thought we had as much right to load that coal pending a settlement as somebody else, as they would have to bring it in and then have it hauled up over our tipple.

Q. Well, what, if anything, further occurred?

A. He did not give us permission to work, so when we 379 had that convention in Wheeling they sent a man down. We were up there at the convention four days and they sent a man down with us, and he came down and talked to the men and they all came out.

Q. Who was that man?

A. That man was Zalenka.

Q. Vice-President of the Sub-District?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, was that subject of allowing you to continue work taken up in that convention?

A. No, sir; I do not believe it was—not to my recollection it was not. There was fifteen days that we worked. There was talk of us working fifteen days and we got permission from Green to do it, and I know the President of the Local, Andy Watkins, then appointed one of our members on the scale committee and there was objection made to him serving on the scale committee because we had worked those fifteen days.

Q. And what was the result of that?

A. Well, the result was that Andy Watkins got up and rapped for order and said we would take that matter up after awhile, and there was never anything more said about it. They fixed it up themselves but I do not know how.

Q. What, if anything, did you do or say at that time when they refused to put the man on the committee?

A. Well, sir, I got up in the hall and stated if one of our members was not appointed on the committee—if he was not fit to serve on the committee—that I had no business in the hall and that I for one would not stay.

Q. Well, after the men were called out on strike did you attend that meeting that Zalenka had when he came down with you and the balance of the committee? Did you attend the meeting that he had with the men?

Witness: That Zalenka had?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes, sir; the men came out the next day you said.

A. Oh, before they came out he came down and ordered us out—Mr. Zalenka did. Yes, sir; I attended most of those meetings but I do not know that I attended that particular one the next day.

Q. You quit work, did you, when the mine shut down by reason of the strike?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were you idle until the mine resumed work?

A. No, sir; I was not. I was not working for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, but I found employment some place else.

Q. Art you a married man?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what, if anything, do you know about the men resuming work non-union? Just state in your own way, as 380 nearly as you now recollect what took place and what was said about going to work?

A. Well, Mr. Hitchman called us in the office one day when Mr. Koch was away, and he told us—he talked with us about running non-union—about him not going to run union—and he said that he would fix up a scale—Well, he did not say he would fix it up but he said the company was ready to sign the 1903 scale and go to work, and he said Mr. Koch, when he came back would fix up that scale with the miners, and they fixed up everything satisfactorily and they went to work. There was lots of other little things that occurred there, but I do not know whether I can remember them or not.

—. Well, about the terms upon which you could go to work non-union in addition to the scale which would be agreed upon, what was said about it?

A. It was understood if we would go to work that he would pay us the scale price that the miners got in Ohio, and that we agreed not to be in the United Mine Workers of America; that we could go into a union of our own if we wanted to; that he had no objections if it was run right.

Q. Now, you say you have been a miner there and that you have served in other capacities also. What, if anything, have you observed during the course there of your labor as a miner, with respect to the practical result of mining coal on the modified run of mine basis as compared with the practical result to the miner of mining other kinds of coal under the union scale?

Witness: You mean the run of mine price?

Mr. Gilchrist: As modified by the agreement.

A. Well, our first scale that we had there, they had a price fixed on that, and then part of the miners became dissatisfied through this run of mine system and agreed to take an average of the weights. Well, the average weight did not give them as much as they got beforehand and therefore they went back, on the same principle, and took the run of mine system as it is now. If I am working in a coal mine I prefer all of my coal to be run of mine system.

Q. State approximately how much, when you were mining coal, you made, dependent upon your mining any one day, all run of mine coal or all screened coal or mixed? What would be the net result to you in dollars and cents, approximately?

A. Well, that would depend a right smart. You take 381 mixed coal and you have a certain part of your coal that is slack, and while you are running part of your coal to the screens and part of it run of mine—(interrupted).

The Court: It would depend on where the slack goes.

Witness (continuing): It would depend on where the slack went. If the slack went to the bins, why, you would be a gainer on screen coal.

The Court:

Q. You mean the bins holding the screen coal?

A. No, sir; the bin holds the run of mine; but if you take all of it to the screen and all of it to the run of mine, the run of mine coal will make you the most money. That is the way I always figure it out.

Q. And you say that is true under the modified run of mine basis—that that condition is true as the result of the application of the run of mine modified price?

A. Yes, sir."

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, B. C. Rowand said by modified price witness understood it was the difference between the price—that is, this five sevenths—and the price that they paid, if witness understood the meaning of that phrase right; if witness understands the scale, all scales are based upon the pick basis.

The witness was asked the following question: "Then you would have no basis for machine coal, would you?" and replied: "Well, I never seen no basis for machine coal any more than—Well, I never seen any place that they had this up until it came up here."

Upon further cross examination the witness Rowand, said that he was not working for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company when the company started to run its mine union in April, 1903; that when he started to work for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company the mine was running union, the company was running union when witness came there; witness went to the Hitchman mine in August, 1903; and with the exception stated witness has been there since then; witness worked an entry at that time, and ran a machine, together, and got seventy-five cents a ton; got a flat rate; got thirty-four cents, he thinks it was for run of mine, at the time witness was working there in August, 1903.

382 Witness was asked and answered questions as follows:

"Q. Now, did you continue upon those rates as long as you ran non-union, down to April 1st, 1906, or April 16th or 12th, or whenever you quit in 1906, running union, did you continue on these rates?—continue on the same basis?

A. No, sir; we did not continue on the same basis.

Q. What were you getting in April, 1906, for screen coal at the time you were still running union and up to the time you quit?

Witness: You mean for those two years?

Mr. Hogg: Your term expired March 31st under the union contract and you continued running after that for sixteen days union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what I want to know is this: What was your price per ton on the 31st of March, 1906?

A. In 1906 it was referred back and we got the same as we got in the 1905 scale.

Q. And what was that for screen coal?

A. I was working an entry at that time.

Q. What did you get a ton for screen coal in your mine in 1906? What were they paying there?

A. Do you want to know what the scale was and what we got in general or individually? You ask me what I was doing and I told you I was driving an entry.

Q. What I mean is, what was the price for mining screen coal per ton?

A. The price for mining screen coal in a room was 52½¢ as far as I remember. No; wait a moment; I am wrong there; It was 48¢, I believe it was; I am not positive but I think it was 48¢.

Q. Now, what was your flat rate for run of mine coal at that time?

A. We had no run of mine at that time.

Q. You had some, hadn't you?

A. We had an average.

Q. What was your flat rate?

A. We didn't have a flat rate.

Q. Well, what did you get a ton?

A. We had no tonnage at all for run of mine.

Q. How were you paid for run of mine coal?

Witness: At that time?

Mr. Hogg: Yes; in March, before you quit, while you were running union, you had one system which you adopted and kept it up. Now, how was that?

A. That system was adopted for two years; during 1904
383 and 1905, I believe it was. We worked two years there under what was called the average system. If you loaded whatever coal you had and it went to the screen, you got the same amount—whatever amount of cars you got going to the screen, and whatever those cars weighed, was averaged, making it so much per car. Every car then that went to the run of mine got the same as they did, whatever that average was. Do you understand that now?

Q. Well, then, there was no specific price per ton paid for run of mine?

A. No, sir; that was all dependent upon the loader. If he loaded small cars that day, why those cars weighed so much, and that was what his average was for that day. If he loaded big cars his average went the same, in proportion.

Q. Well, now, when you started to run non-union you pursued the same system, did you, in paying for the work to miners?

A. No, sir; we positively would not go to work that way any more.

Q. When you started up non-union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you adjust and pay for run of mine?

A. By referring back to the flat basis.

Q. The basis you had that was first adopted under the union system?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you have a flat rate now for run of mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you get for that per ton?

A. We get 32½¢.

Q. Has that price been paid ever since you have been running non-urion?

A. No, sir; they adopted the Pittsburg run of mine basis for run of mine coal.

Q. When was that adopted?

A. It was when we went to work after the strike.

Q. And you have been running that way ever since?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is 32½¢ you say?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is what you have been getting all the time for run of mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you get per ton for screen coal?

A. Fifty-four cents.

Q. That is the same rate all through from the time you started to run non-union?

A. No, sir; we got—this last settlement we had we got our raise in proportion to the miners in Ohio.

Q. Just keeping up with them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you are practically getting what the union gets?

A. We are getting what the union gets and in some cases 384 we get more. We get more per yard for entry driving.

Q. What do you get for entry driving per yard?

A. Seventy cents for loading and twenty-seven cents for cutting—for the machine cutter.

Q. Do you know what the union scale is?

A. Twenty-five cents for machine and sixty-eight cents, I think it is, for the loader.

Redirect examination.

Upon redirect examination the witness was asked and answered: "Q. Explain what you mean by yardage?

A. Yardage is narrow work and they get the same amount per ton that wide work does and seventy cents per yard, running measure, extra, over the wide work.

(End of redirect examination.)

JOHN OLIVER.

Direct examination:

My name is John Oliver; age, thirty-two; residence, McMechen, West Virginia; occupation, miner; has been a miner about fifteen years; in a general way witness has worked all over West Virginia and part of the state of Ohio—has been all over this state and part of the state of Ohio; with the exception of one month has been working since 1903 for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; did not work at the Hitchman mine at the time the 1903 strike was on, came into the service after that strike was settled; at that time the Hitchman mine was union and witness was a member of the United Mine Workers; witness does not remember what the scale for run of mine coal was which was in force in 1903 when he was working at that mine—the adjustment of that question was made before witness started to work there; after witness started to work at the Hitchman mine in 1903, he worked for the remainder of the year 1903, and worked there until the strike of 1904, which occurred on April 20th; the occasion of the strike of 1904—the difficulty—as near as witness can remember it, was through the run of mine coal; when that strike was settled the run of mine question was adjusted again and 385 on an average basis, witness thinks it was, as near as he can recollect; the mine ran on the average plan on run of mine until 1905 and then witness thinks they returned to the tonnage basis—that is, the basis that was in vogue in 1903 when witness started to work; from 1905, when the average plan was abandoned and the tonnage plan adopted as the method of arriving at the compensation to be paid for run of mine coal until March 31, 1906, the mine ran on a tonnage basis as to run of mine coal.

The witness was asked and answered the following questions:

"Q. Do you recollect the circumstance of the 1906 strike—the fact that there was a 1906 strike?

A. Yes, sir; I remember very well of there being a strike.

Q. Was there any discussion between the manager of the mine and the union officials, or between the employes of the mine and the union officials, that you know of, relative to the question of continuing work at the Hitchman mine pending the settling of a new scale between the Operators' Association in convention with the United Mine workers? If there were any conferences or communications on that subject between Mr. Koch and any of the union officials, or if there were any dealings between your men and the union officials on that subject, of which you have personal knowledge, please state what was done and what was said so far as you now recollect.

A. I was not present at any of them except the latter part of the meeting when we were called out on a strike; I was not present at all of that meeting; I was only present at a part of one meeting between the miners and one of the officials that called us out.

The Court:

Q. Well, what occurred there then?

A. About all I heard of was that they had a meeting and it was going on when I went to the hall. Mr. Zalenka was there and he was talking when I went in, and when he got through there was one of our men—I do not know who it was—asked him if we would not be permitted under certain conditions to work on, pending a settlement, and furnish this engine coal; and he says that we were not permitted to work under no conditions at all. That was about the only thing that I heard at that meeting.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. And the men at the mine struck the next day?

A. They did not go to work the next morning.

386 Q. And they remained on a strike until the mine resumed non-union, June 12th, 1906, did they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a married man, Mr. Oliver?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. During that time what did you do for a living?

A. I did not do anything; I was not married then.

Q. Did you go to work at the mine again on June 12th, 1906?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you worked at the mine ever since?

A. Except one month this last summer.

Q. You are working there now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your position just now?

A. Wireman is my present position.

Q. While you were working union at the Hitchman mine in 1903, and up until the disruption of the union in 1906, at that mine, was any of your money that you earned deducted and paid in to the union officials under the union rules and regulations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When a mine is running under union control and a strike occurs, what is the practice of the union with regard to paying what are termed 'benefits'?

A. They are supposed to pay three dollars a week, or were at that time.

Q. They are supposed to pay three dollars a week to each man?

A. To each and every one.

Q. While the strike is on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether you got any benefits during the time you were idle from April 16th to June 12th, 1906, when you resumed non-union?

A. I got three dollars for one week.

Q. Is that all you got?

A. That is all.

Q. Do you recall whether any of the union officials made any effort towards furnishing the men on strike with any other compensation or method of support?

A. Well, they came around and wanted to give them store orders.

Q. A store order?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Upon what store or stores, if you recollect?

A. I do not recollect what stores.

Q. And a store order for how much?

A. Well, it just depended upon whether he was a married man or a single man.

Q. And if he was a married man, how much was it, if you recollect?

A. I do not recollect now what they offered.

Q. And if the man was a single man what was it, if you recollect?

A. Well, they offered me an order for three dollars; I do not know what they offered others.

Q. I understand from you, then, that there was no fixed hard and fast rule with regard to the store order proposition?

A. As far as I know about it there was not.

387 Q. The intention was to adjust that according to the necessities of the men, as far as you knew?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect whether any official of the union came to the mine and met any of them either in general gathering of greater or less proportion or by meeting them individually on this subject of store orders instead of money?

A. I was not present at any of them; it was individual with me.

Q. Do you know or can you recall just now who it was that proposed to give you a store order for three dollars instead of three dollars in cash?

A. Lee Rankin and John Zalenka.

Q. John Zalenka was the man, I believe you said, who called the men out on that strike?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what position, if any, did Lee Rankin hold at the time in the union?

A. He was secretary.

Q. Your money was paid in cash to the union, was it?

A. Yes, sir; I sent an order through the post office—a money order.

Q. And they gave you the sum of three dollars in cash and offered you a store order for three dollars?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the extent of the assistance the union, as run by these defendants, furnished you during that strike which they called in April, 1906? Is that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe I understood you to say that you refused to take the store order when Mr. Rankin offered it to you?

A. I did.

Q. What did you tell him if you can recall?

A. A. Well, I told him to go to the devil with his store order—that I didn't send him store orders.

Q. When did you next see Lee Rankin or have any business dealings with him, if you can now recall?

A. Well, sir, the only time that I met him after that, he came to my boarding house.

Q. Where were you boarding at that time?

A. I was boarding on the pike, right opposite Fourth street, in McMechen, West Virginia.

Q. And you say that Lee Rankin came to your boarding house?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he by himself, or if any one was with him, who was it, if you now recall?

A. James Conoway was with him.

Q. What, if anything, was said to you by Lee Rankin on that occasion, if you now recollect?

A. He came there and asked me for the charter, seal and books of the Local. I told him the charter was in the hall and that he would have to go and get the keys from somebody else to get 388 that; and as far as the seal was concerned, he could have that —I would give it to him—but as far as the books and the money that was there were concerned, he could not have them.

Q. What position, if any, did you hold at the time of the strike and while the mine was idle, and you were a union man—what position, if any, did you hold in the Local?

A. I was recording secretary.

Q. Now, when Lee Rankin asked you to give him the charter, you told him that the charter was in the hall?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You meant by that that it was hung up in the hall—the place of the meeting of the Local?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you told him that he could get the key from somebody else and get the charter himself, if he wanted it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understood you to say that you told him that you would give him the seal?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What seal was meant?
A. The seal that stamped the papers of the United Mine Workers of America.
Q. That seal is one of the essential things used, is it, in the transactions of the United Mine Workers, to authenticate papers, and documents, and cards, and so forth?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And does every Local have to have a seal?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, did you give him the seal at that time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, when he asked you for the books and the money that belonged to the Local Union, which had been the Local Union of the United Mine Workers while the men were in the union, you say that you told him that you would not give him either the books or the money?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What, if anything, did he say to you when you said that?
A. Well, he told me if I would not give them up that there was a way to make me give them up.
Q. He said that there was a way to make you give them up and that they would make you do it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did they make you do it?
A. Not that I know of; I still have them.
Q. You still have the books?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the money—what was done with it?
A. It was used for writing an independent up.
Q. Just explain what you mean by that?
A. An independent order.
389 Q. The men employed at that mine then, as I understand you from that, kept the money that Mr. Lee Rankin demanded that you should turn over to the union, and the men used that in the formation of an independent order or association of their own, for that mine. Is that what I understand you to say?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is the independent organization still in existence?
A. No, sir.
Q. It is out of existence now?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What method have the men employed at that mine adopted as the result of the independent organization formed there pursuant to the 1906 resumption, with respect to any money being checked off for any purposes of the men? Is any deduction made or do the men pay anything into a common fund?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Just explain what that is, so far as you now recollect?

A. We have a check-off for our doctor; we pay him by the month. We also have a burial fund, as we call it, and the check weighman for the miners has a check-off for his salary.

Q. How does the check-off now in vogue compare in amount with the amount of the check-off that was taken from each man while the mine was running union?

A. It is about one-half less now.

Q. Did you visit T. L. Lewis at any time about the 1906 strike?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, this money that is now checked off goes, as I understand you, for the individual benefit of the men who are employed at the Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understand you also that the money checked by the United Mine Workers went into a general fund of the United Mine Workers, and as a practical illustration of the working of that system you received—after having been ordered to strike in April, 1906,—the sum of three dollars, or one week's compensation, and and you received a tender of a store order for three dollars?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that that was all the benefit offered you, or received by you, during a strike called by these same men, and under which you were idle and without means of support from April 16th, 1906, to June 12th, 1906?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am not sure that you stated the time when Lee Rankin came to get the charter, the seal, the books and the money that belonged to the men at the Hitchman mine?

A. I could not recall the date.

Q. Well, can you fix it approximately, having reference to the resumption of work at the mine, non-union, in June, 1906?

390 A. I think it was about two months after we had gone to work."

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Oliver, said that the amount per month deducted as dues to the organization from the wages of witness while the mine was running union varied; it was a percentage of what the men made; sometimes it was two per cent. and sometimes it ran as high as four and a half per cent.; it was not less than two per cent. nor in any case more than four per cent. that witness recollects of.

The witness was asked and answered the following questions:

"Q. What were the circumstances under which he was charged 2%—about what would he be making per month?

A. Well, it just depended on the kind of work we had as to what we would make.

Q. What do you mean by the kind of work you had?

A. Whether it was steady work—every day—or not.

Q. Well, suppose you were working steadily—what was the 2% deduction? What was the amount that it made?

A. I could not say for a month because we have a two weeks' pay.

Q. Well, in two weeks what would be the deduction?

A. Well, at that time I was making from forty to fifty dollars every two weeks.

Q. And what was your deduction off of that?

A. It was a deduction of 2% on the dollar—from 2% to 4½%.

Q. What was the amount earned every two weeks upon which the deduction would be 4½%? Would it be about half that sum or what would it be?

A. I don't just understand the question.

Q. What would be the amount earned when the deduction would amount to 4½% in two weeks?

A. Well, we would not make as much when it would be 4½% as we would when it would be 2%.

The Court: Let me see if I understand you: The union generally sought to obtain a certain sum from the men, was that it?—something like a fixed sum—and it was agreed upon with you miners according to the amount that you earned, and if you made full time it would be about 2% and if you made half time it would be about four or four and a half per cent., is that it?

A. Yes, sir.

391 Mr. Hogg:

Q. That is, per month: If you made fifty dollars in two weeks you would pay one dollar for the two weeks, and for the next two weeks you would pay a dollar. Is that the way you would pay it every two weeks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So it would make about two dollars per month if you were earning one hundred a month?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if you earned half that it would be about two dollars? They would increase the per cent.?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And endeavored in this way to make the amount paid by the various miners about the same. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you begin the system of making deductions for doctors' bills, funeral expenses and the salary of check weighman? When did that begin? Was it immediately after you started up non-union or had you been running non-union for some time?

A. The doctor—we hired him, I think, in 1903 or 1904; I am not sure which.

Q. Then you checked for the doctor while you were running union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you paid so much a month and the doctor's services were rendered, if you were sick, without any additional charge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You just continued that system?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the check off for funeral expenses, constituting a general fund,—when was that instituted?
A. It was instituted before I came there but in a different way from what they are working it now.
Q. Did that exist while you were running union, also?
(Witness hesitates.)
The Court: In other words, Mr. Oliver, did you pay that while you were running non-union?
Mr. Hogg: For funeral expenses.

The Court:

Q. Did you have a check-off for funeral expenses while you were running union?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you pay that in addition to the dues to the union or was it included in the dues to the union?
A. It was extra.

Mr. Hogg:

Q. Well, when you ran non-union did you also pay for the check weighman?
A. Yes, sir.
392 Q. When you were running union did you pay for the check weighman?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You made no change in that?
A. No, sir.
Q. About what time did you make this independent organization or union? How long had you been running non-union when you made that—it was in 1906? Was it before you started to run non-union or after you started to run non-union?
A. It was just before we started up the time of the strike.
Q. And that was the union that you used this book for, and the money for, that you had from the old union?
A. I did not use the book for that; no.
Q. You got a new book for that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, how long did that new organization or that new union continue?
A. I do not know exactly—a year or so.
Q. Well, what is the check-off now for doctor's bill, funeral charges and check-weighman, per month? Is that regulated by a percentage of your earnings or is it a flat sum?
A. The check-weighman is a percentage.
Q. Do you recollect what that is?
A. I do not now.
Q. Was the sum that you paid for the doctor's services and funeral charges a flat sum?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Every man paid a certain sum whether he earned much or little?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect how much that was per month, or every two weeks?

A. A married man pays one dollar per month for the doctor and a single man fifty cents.

Q. What was the charge for funeral purposes?

A. Well, we have a treasury that we hold five hundred dollars in for that purpose, and we take fifty cents off of each and every man when it gets below five hundred dollars.

Q. You keep a standing sum of five hundred dollars?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, coming down to the strike of 1906: Who paid you the first three dollars in cash that you got after the strike began? Did you say?

A. I cannot recall his name right at the present time.

Q. How long had you been on a strike, if you recollect, when you received that?

A. Mr. Schemp was the man who paid me.

Q. Do you know where he then lived?

A. I do not know where he lived.

Q. Who came and proposed to give you the store orders?

A. Lee Rankin and John Zalenka.

393 Q. How long after you received the cash was it until they came and proposed to give you store orders?

A. About two weeks, I think.

Q. Did he assign any reason or say why he didn't offer you the money, the second time, instead of the store orders, as you now recall?

A. All I know of him saying was—he said they didn't have it—didn't have the money.

Q. Did he say if they had the money he would just as leave give you that as to give you store orders?

A. He didn't say anything about that.

Q. Do you recollect whether he named the store on which he would give you the orders?

A. He didn't name it to me.

(End of Cross Examination.)

WESLEY CORNS.

Direct examination:

My name is Wes. Corns; residence, McMechen, West Virginia; occupation, miner; has been a miner about twenty years; is a married man; states that he has worked a good while in Ohio—the first mining he ever did was in Ohio—and then he has worked the rest of the time in West Virginia—has worked some here in Barbour county, is now working at the Hitchman coal mine; has worked at the Hitchman mine about nine years; was working there at the time of the 1903 strike; does not recall the reason for that strike, thinks there was a national strike at that time but does not remember it; does not remember about there being a controversy in 1903 at that mine respecting the payment for run of mine coal; slightly remembers the 1904 strike; does not recall the reason for that strike; believes it was a national strike in 1904, but couldn't say for sure; does not remember anything about what the basis of compensation was when the mine resumed work upon the settlement of the 1904 strike as to run of mine coal.

The witness was asked and answered the following questions:

"Q. Do you remember the occasion of the 1906 strike?

A. The national strike is all I remember. Everybody was called out—all miners—union miners.

Q. And that strike was to go into effect upon the expiration of the scale, was it?

A. Yes, sir.

394 Q. And the scale expired March 31, 1906?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether anything was said or done by Mr. Koch in dealing with any of the officials of the United Mine Workers, relative to securing the consent of the officials for the men employed at the Hitchman mine to continue at work until the new scale might be agreed upon, about which there was at that time some controversy between the Operators' Association and the United Mine Workers?

A. Well, I do not just remember. I remember that Mr. Koch and Mr. Pickett also wanted the men to go on and work and they would pay the scale price—what the men would ask for—but the officials would not let them go in. Of course I was not on the committee, or nothing like that.

Q. As a matter of fact, do you or do you not know whether the men continued to work after April 1st, 1906?

A. They continued until about the 18th or 20th of April, I forget now which.

Q. Now, during that time what disposition was made of the coal that was mined?

A. Well, I could not tell you that; I do not remember.

Q. Well, for what purpose was the coal mined?

A. For the B. & O. engines, principally.

Q. Do you remember whether the shutting down of the mines from April 16th, 1906? Do you remember — any official of the United Mine Workers visited the mine about that period of time?

A. Yes, sir; I was told that there was one there and that he held a meeting.

Mr. Hogg:

Q. Do you know it of your own knowledge?

A. Well, I was met by a miner the next morning and he told me about it.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Do you know whether or not there was any meeting of the miners on or about April 15th, 1906?

A. I know there was but I was not at the meeting.

Q. Did you live at McMechen at that time?

A. Yes, sir; I lived at the lower end of McMechen and a good piece away.

Q. What was your reason, if you now recall, for not attending that meeting?

A. Well, I was a good piece away and really did not know the meeting was going on until after it was over.

Q. Did you go to work the next morning—April 16th, 1906?

A. No, sir; I started to work and met some of the miners and they said there was no work—that we were called out and stopped—and I went back home.

395 Q. And you went back home. How long were you then idle?

A. About nine weeks, I think, as well as I can remember.

Q. While you were working at the Hitchman mine, while it was run union, was any money deducted from your earnings and paid in to the union as dues for demands from the union for money owing to your membership in it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you give in any sort of a brief way, approximately, about what that thing cost you per pay?

A. Well, as near as I can guess at it, it was $2.50 a pay.

Q. Under the system of the union, what did the union propose to do for a man who was a member of the union during a time when the men might be on strike?

A. They agreed to give three dollars a week benefit.

Q. During the nine weeks that you were on strike next ensuing April 16th, 1906, how much, if any, money was paid to you as strike benefits, by the union?

A. Nothing at all.

Q. Where were you during this strike?

A. Well, I was working a little outside—doing some outside work.

Q. And where did you live at that time?

A. I lived in McMechen.

Q. Did the union officials or any of them offer to pay you your benefits during that period of strike?

A. No, sir.

Q. No one offered to pay you one cent?

A. No, sir. I met one of the men and he told me that they were paying off one day up there in orders.

Q. In orders?

A. Orders on some store; I did not ask him what store. He told me I had better go up and get my order and I told him I didn't want an order on any store in McMechen, at all; so I did not go and did not get anything.

Q. Why didn't you want a store order?

A. Well, the main reason was that I had paid money into the union and I thought that I ought to be paid back with the same as I had paid them, and as I couldn't get money I didn't want any order.

Q. How much of a store order did you understand the union was going to give you?

A. Two dollars. That was the understanding I had of it.

Q. A store order for two dollars?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you refused to take that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have said that you have a family. Are you the owner of any real estate?

A. Yes, sir; I own a small place.

Q. When, with reference to the time the 1906 strike was declared, did you buy that place?

A. I bought it just before the strike.

396 Q. What was the fact with respect to the amount of money you had paid on the purchase price? Had you the property entirely paid for or simply partly paid for?

A. It was only partly paid for.

Q. You resumed work June 12th, 1906, when the mine started up again, did you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how have you been employed since that time?

A. As a machine man.

Q. In the Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, with respect to the property upon which you had made a partial payment at the time of the April strike, 1906: Do you own that property still?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember of meeting a man by the name of Thomas Hughes some time in the fall of 1907?

A. Yes, sir; I met him once.

Q. Where did you meet him?

A. In front of the Western Supply Company's store at Benwood.

Q. And the Western Supply Company's store is where?

A. Well, it is located close to the Hitchman coal mine.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Thomas Hughes at that time?

A. Well, I believe there was about four of us standing there, and when he came up to us he asked us what we thought about going back into the organization, and I told him that he was only wasting time to talk that around there now; that the men were very well satisfied the way they were working, for awhile any how. That is all I said to him and walked away.

Q. Did you see him after that?

A. I saw him but I did not speak to him.

Q. Where did you see him?

A. I saw him passing along the street there."

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination, the witness, Corns, said that he does not remember what the amount of advance on the price of coal mining was that the union demanded, as the occasion of the strike of 1906; there was some advance—but how much witness does not remember—thinks that was the occasion of the strike of 1906—the advance asked for—but does not just remember; witness says that Mr. Koch and Mr. Pickett wanted the men to go to work and that this advanced price would be paid and added "they told us that"; some of the committee told witness this; witness heard Mr. Koch and
Mr. Pickett also says this—that they were willing to pay the 397 advanced price if we would go ahead to work—they were talking to witness when they said that; witness does not remember a thing about whether this advanced price of 5.55% was to be simply on the basis that the Hitchman Company had theretofore mined run of mine coal for or whether it was to be based on the Hocking Valley scale; witness does not remember whether or not the union proposed in this advance the Hocking Valley scale as the scale for run of mine coal; the coal mined during the period elapsing between April 1 and April 16 was for the purpose of coaling engines; no commercial coal was mined that the witness knows of—not at that mine; witness did not earn anything during the time he was working during the strike, he was working on his own place—simply cleaning up the place—a piece of land the witness had bought.

Witness was asked and answered the following questions:

"Q. Now, you stated, if I understood you correctly, that the deductions made from your wages as due to the union amounted to $2.50 per day. Am I right in that?

A. That was the check-off—that was check off of mine for everything.

Q. Then this $2.50 per day included your dues to the union, doctor's bill, funeral expense fund and check-weighman?

A. We had no funeral expense fund at that time.

Q. Well, it included then everything except the funeral expense fund, did it?

A. Check-weighman.

Q. And doctor's bill?

A. And doctor's bill and dues to the union.

Q. That was what the $2.50 paid?

A. Sometimes it would be more than that if an extra assessment was made.

Q. You paid your dues on a percentage basis according to the amount that you earned a month, did you?

A. The dues?

Q. To the union.

Witness: To the national organization?

Mr. Hogg: To whoever you paid it to?

A. If I am not mistaken I think that was paid by the month—so much per month. Those dues were twenty-five cents per month.

Q. And that went to the national organization, did it?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. And then you paid the balance to the Local?
A. To the Local and the District.
Q. How much did you pay the Local?
A. I could not tell you that; I do not remember.
398 Q. Was that on a percentage basis of what you earned?
A. I think so; yes, sir.
Q. Not less than 2% nor more than 4½%, as stated by Mr. Oliver?
A. He could tell you more about that than I, for he was secretary.
Q. You think he was correct, then?
A. I do not know a thing about that.
Q. Well, you say you got nothing by way of benefits during the strike of 1906?
A. I got nothing; no, sir.
Q. Did you know of other men getting $3.00 in cash?
A. I did not know of any one.
Q. Who was the man that spoke to you about going and getting your order on the store?
A. I do not just remember who it was. It was some of the miners that worked there. I know that he worked at the mine.
Q. Some of the members of the Local Union?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. He had charge of that?
A. No.
Q. He was telling you that others were getting it?
A. Yes, sir; and that he had got an order himself.
Q. And he told you that you had better go and get your order?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you declined to take an order because you wanted money?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then the man that you met was not one of the defendants in this suit—either Lee Rankin or Hughes?
A. No, no.
Q. It was a member of the Local Union?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is that same man now working for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company?
A. I could not tell; I just told you I do not remember who the man was, but I remember that he was a miner at that time.
Q. I believe you said that you met Thomas Hughes in the fall of 1907, in front of the Western Supply Company's house or store?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, do you recollect about what time in the fall that was?
A. No, sir; I do not recollect; it was in September or October, I think.
Q. There were four of you together there?
A. Four and probably five.
Q. He asked you, as I understand from your examination in chief, what you thought about going back into the union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you told him it was no use to talk to you about that for the present as you were satisfied?

A. Yes, sir.

399 Q. You think that is the substance of the conversation you had with him?

A. Yes, sir; that is about the substance of it.

Q. And then you walked away?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the names of the other men who were there with you in front of the Western Supply Company's store?

A. No, sir; I do not remember any of them. of them.

Q. Do you remember whether or not—or do you remember well enough to say what those men were doing—what their business was—about that time?

Witness: The men that were with me, do you mean?

Mr. Hogg: Yes.

A. They were miners there at the Hitchman mine.

Q. Do you recollect about what time of day it was that you were there and saw him on that occasion?

A. Well, I think it was pretty late in the evening, if I ain't mistaken.

Q. Before dark, was it?

A. Oh, yes, it was before dark.

Q. Do you know who is the owner of the Western Supply Company?

A. No, sir; I do not.

(End of Cross Examination.)

R. J. COTTS recalled.

Direct examination:

The witness Cotts being recalled, testified on direct examination as follows:

Q. Mr. Cotts, are you still bookkeeper for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company and for the Glendale Coal Company?

A. I am, yes, sir.

Q. At the time you were on the stand prior to the last two adjournments you testified and an Exhibit No. 4 was filed, which purported to be a memorandum prepared by you from the books and related to the production or tonnage of coal mined during the period covered by Exhibit No. 4, by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, from its mine, which Exhibit No. 4 carried the subject down to and including the month of November, 1910. Have you since, at my request, prepared a supplemental statement along the same line?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

400 Q. And from the entries made by you in the books of the company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I hand you now a memorandum headed "Tonnage Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, year 1910," and I will ask you to look at it and state whether it supplements Exhibit No. 4 referred to, and give in your answer the footings?

A. This supplements the Exhibit No. 4 and the tonnage for December, 1910, on engines, was 13,085.60; commercial coal, 6,551.25 tons, making a total for the last quarter of 1910, engines 40,299.95 tons; commercial coal 31,440.70 tons. The total for the year 1910 was 152,362.35 tons of engine coal and 148,933.70 tons of commercial coal. For January, 1911, the engine coal was 12,007.05 tons; commercial coal 4,239 tons. For February, the engine coal was 10,887.70; commercial coal 4,469 tons, making a total for the two months of 1911, for engines, 22,894.75; commercial coal, 8,708.45.

This paper was offered and admitted in evidence marked "Cotts' Exhibit No. 7."

(Counsel for served defendants objects to the paper itself and to its contents.)

Upon further direct examination the witness said that the price per ton paid by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company to the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company for this engine coal covered by this Exhibit No. 7 was $1.05 per ton; and that the approximate amount received per ton for the commercial coal represented on this same Exhibit No. 7 would average about a dollar per ton.

Upon further examination the witness testified as follows:

Q. Upon your former examination there was filed as your Exhibit No. 6 a list of men employed during the years 1908, 1909, and 1910, down to December 9th, by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, and along with that exhibit, and as part thereof the employment cards signed by the men whose names appeared on the list. Have you, at my request, since the two last adjournments of this case, prepared another list to supplement the list filed by you and known as Exhibit No. 6?

A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. I hand you now a list and ask you whether that is the list prepared by you, and whether it is correct, and whether these are the employment cards which tally with and are referred to 401 in that list?

A. Yes, sir; this list is correct and these are the cards. Those are correct in so far as we could interpret the names—a majority of them.

This list and these cards to accompany it, are offered and admitted in evidence marked Cotts' Exhibit No. 8.

(Objected to by counsel for served defendants.)

The following questions were asked, answers given and proceedings had:

Q. On page 61 of the printed record in this cause as printed for use in the Circuit Court of Appeals, there appears in the affidavit of E. C. Pickett, the names of twenty-four men who quit on September 18th, 1907, and the time that each one entered the company's service is stated. I have here and will hand you a copy of this record and I have here and also will hand you at the same time the original of the affidavit of E. C. Pickett, which is filed in the Hitchman case, and will ask you whether you prepared the list of names from any record of the company, and, if so, what, and whether you prepared the list of dates showing when these respective persons named entered the service of the Glendale Coal Company?

(Question objected to by counsel for served defendants; objection overruled; exception.)

A. I prepared this list of names from the pay-roll of the Glendale Coal Company; the dates the men entered the service were all taken from our pay-rolls—the pay-rolls of the Glendale Coal Company.

Q. Have you compared the list of names and the dates as given in the original affidavit of E. C. Pickett, referred to, with the names as printed in the record on page sixty-one?

A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Are they the same?

A. Yes, sir.

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness Cotts further testified as follows:

Q. Mr. Cotts, all you know in regard to these men having quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company, is that which you obtained from the pay-roll. Is that correct?

A. No, sir; I paid practically all of them off. I think I paid every one of them off when they left the service.

402 Q. Then with the added fact that you paid these men off, and what you saw on the pay-roll, is what you know of their having quit the service?

A. That is all; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether they were discharged by the company or not?

A. Not directly so; no, sir.

Q. You do not know of your own knowledge?

A. No, sir.

Q. But you know that they were in the employ at the time of the Glendale Coal Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that the price per ton paid to the B. & O. Railroad Company for coal sold to it for fuel was $1.10?

A. No, sir; I said $1.05.

Q. Is there a written contract between the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company for the purchase of fuel coal for the engines of the B. & O. or not?

A. There isn't any—— (Interrupted.)

Q. The contract between the two companies is verbal or oral. Is that right?

A. I suppose so; yes, sir.

Q. By whom was the contract made, if you know?

A. I do not know.

Q. Well, do you know the time of the making of said contract or not?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Now, the price per ton for commercial coal was a dollar, you say?

A. I say it averaged about a dollar.

Q. It averaged about a dollar, and this price was that which was obtained by selling to various customers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you who put the date on card 400 appearing in Exhibit 8, which was marked as a date "12/14/10"?

A. Why, the young lady formerly employed in our office made that memorandum.

Q. Did you see the parties whose names purport to be signed to card No. 400, sign their names thereto?

A. I could not answer that question.

Q. You could not answer that you did not see them?

A. I could not say positively; I may have seen them and I may not; I do not remember the circumstance.

(End of cross examination.)

403 E. C. PICKETT (recalled).

Direct examination:

The witness Pickett, being further examined testified as follows on direct examination:

"Q. You are still superintendent of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You testified before, did you?

A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. I will ask you to look at two lists of names of men purporting to be employes of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, which is attached to the affidavit of W. H. Koch filed in the case and which is printed in the Circuit Court of Appeals record on page 47, and which has the heading: 'We, the undersigned, are miners or mine workers employed by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company. We are satisfied with our employment, with our wages and with our work, and would like to remain in the company's employ.' Please look at the original of each list and state what you know, if anything, about the signatures appearing on those lists?

A. I personally saw these men sign these papers.

Q. Were those men at that time in the employ of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, as the statement purports that they were?

A. Yes, sir; they were.

Q. I hand you now an affidavit made by you in the Hitchman case in which appears a list of men who are said to have quit work at the Glendale mine, September 18th, 1907, and opposite each name is given the time or date when the person entered the Glendale

Coal Company's service. I also hand you the printed record in the Hitchman case wherein the same matter appears on page 61. I wish you would look at this original affidavit and at the matter I have just referred to, and state whether those men are the men who quit work on the date mentioned?

A. Yes, sir; they are.

Q. Are those the men that you referred to in your former examination as having quit work when Thomas Hughes pursuaded them to join the union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the B. & O. ice house near the Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what became of it?

A. It burned down.

Q. Can you tell me about the date it burned?

A. May 22nd, 1906.

Q. Do you remember the date when the Lorain Coal & Dock Company resumed work in 1906, after the strike?

A. I could not say positively as to the date but I think it was sometime between the 16th and 20th of May, 1906.

404 Q. Do you recall having employed any men for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company at the time Thomas Hughes was about that mine?

A. Yes, sir; I employed men during that time.

Q. Do you recall whether any of the men you employed failed to report for work?

A. Yes, sir; there were some of them failed.

Q. Do you recall whether you saw Thomas Hughes in conversation with them at any time after your employment of the men and before the time they were to report for work?

A. Yes, sir; I remember one time, although I do not remember the date exactly, but I employed some men and they agreed to report for work later, and after leaving the mine they went out on the pike and I noticed them—or noticed Mr. Hughes talking to them—and these particular men never reported for work.

Q. What is the usual method, so far as you have observed it, of people in Wheeling reaching the Hitchman mine or reaching the Glendale mine?

A. By street cars.

Q. A street car line runs from Wheeling, and where does it pass with reference to the Hitchman mine?

A. Right in front of the mine, possibly 75 or 100 feet from the office.

Q. And does it continue on down the river?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To Glendale?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far does it pass from the Glendale mine?

A. Why, possibly 100 feet from the pit-mouth; not more than that.

Q. And to what point does that street car line run?

A. It runs to Moundsville.

Q. I hand you now a printed card which reads as follows: 'Notice to the miners of the Hitchman mine. There will be a mass meeting Friday evening at 6:30 P. M. at Nick Heil's Base Ball Grounds, for the purpose of discussing the principals of organization.

President Wm. Green will be present and all miners are cordially invited to attend.' Please look at this card and state what, if anything, you know about it?

A. I found this notice tacked on a telegraph or electric light pole, on the street, about 100 or 150 feet south of the Western Supply Company's store, just directly in front of the Hitchman mine, one morning, and I tore it down and kept it.

Q. I see on its face written in lead pencil the following 'E. C. Pickett Sept. 19th, 1907. Bridg.' Is that in your handwriting?

405 A. Yes, sir; and I put it there as a memorandum so I would remember which pole I took it off of. There was a pole right at the north end of the bridge that crosses McMechen's Run, and this notice was tacked on that pole.

Mr. Gilchrist: I offer this card in evidence to be marked Pickett's Exhibit No. 1.

Mr. Hogg: It is objected to in the usual way.

The Court: Let it be admitted.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. I hand you now another card which seems to be similar to your Exhibit No. 1, and I will read it: 'Notice to the miners of the Hitchman mine. There will be a mass meeting Friday evening at 6:30 P. M., at Nick Heil's Base Ball Grounds, for the purpose of discussing the principals of organization. President Wm. Green will be present. All miners are cordially invited to attend.' Look at that card and state what, if anything, you know about it.

A. This card was taken down by me on the same date that the other one was, only on a pole which stood 100 or 150 feet north of the Western Supply Company's store and on the same side of the street that the other one was.

Q. This card has on it in pencil, "Hickman Sept. 19, 1907." In whose handwriting is that?

A. It is mine. This pole stood directly in front of a house in which there was a family by the name of Hickman lived. I put that on there so I could remember which pole I took this notice off of.

Q. And the date, September 19th, 1907, is the date you took it down?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gilchrist: I now offer this card in evidence to be marked Pickett's Exhibit No. 2.

(Objected to by counsel for served defendants.)

The Court: Let it go in.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Whereabouts is Nick Heil's Base Ball Ground?

A. It is twelve to fifteen hundred feet north of the Hitchman mine and right along the pike.

Q. And along the street car line?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in sight of the miners' houses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do the miners' houses front with reference to the ball ground?

A. Well, the houses are in a row running east and west, 406 and they front to the north, and this ball ground is directly north of the houses.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

On cross examination, the witness, Pickett, was asked and answered the following questions:

"Q. You say that the list of names of men who quit working for the Glendale Coal Company, appearing at page 61 of the printed record in this case contains the names of the same men to whom you referred as having quit work when you testified here before?

A. That list that I examined here? Yes, sir.

Q. Yes, sir; that is the one I am examining you on now; and in that examination before you stated the circumstances under which they quit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You stated this: that they had either become members of the United Mine Workers of America, or promised to do so, and you told them they could not work for the company. That is what you said?

A. I guess most of them had, at any rate.

Q. Well, that is the reason you did not continue them in your employ, I believe?

A. Well, these men that quit work on that day, just refused to go to work, as I stated before, because I instructed the mine foreman to have two or three of the men to remain on the outside until I had a talk with them.

Q. Well, what you stated on your former examination in regard to these men quitting, is true, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have no desire to change it?

A. No, sir.

Q. When did you say you employed some men to engage in work at the Hitchman mine about the time Hughes was in the vicinity of the mine? Or did you say when?

A. I did not say when; I said during the time he was there.

Q. Well, now, what year was that in?

A. It was in 1907.

Q. How many of these men were there?

A. Why, I do not remember; there was three or four of them.
Q. Had they yet signed the contract?
A. No, sir.
Q. They had not done that?
A. No, sir.
Q. The signing of the contract was a condition precedent to their employment, was it not?

A. Well, now, what I mean by employing these men is this:
407 When a man comes and makes application for work, if I want to employ him I tell him I will give him a job. When he comes and brings his tools and is ready to go to work I give him an order for his checks and he signs one of these cards before going to work. These men said they were going after their tools, and in the meantime Mr. Hughes met them on the pike. I do not know what he said to them, or anything about it, but I saw them talking to him and they never came back any more.

Q. All you know is, that when they left you they created the impression on your mind that they were going after their tools?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. But they never returned?
A. No, sir.
Q. And they were never in your employment?
A. No, sir; not any more than they asked for a job and I told them they could have it.
Q. I believe you say that the public in coming to and going from the Hitchman mine usually travel on the street railway line?
A. Yes, sir; usually.
Q. Well, that is a public conveyance?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When you saw this notice on the telegraph or telephone pole, to use your language you "tore it down."
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you took that to the office of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company?
A. No, sir; I took it to my own residence.
Q. And preserved it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I suppose you informed some of the parties with whom you you were employed that you had torn them down? Didn't you inform any of the Hitchman people that you had torn it down?
A. I do not remember whether I did right at that time or not.
Q. You did afterwards, of course?
A. Yes, sir; I did afterwards.
Q. Well, you found the second notice on the pole in front of the supply company's store?
A. Not exactly in front; about 100 or 150 feet north, one of them was, and the other about the same distance south.
Q. And you tore that down?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you see them put on the poles?
A. No, sir.

Q. And you do not know who put them on?
A. No, sir, I do not.
Q. Now, on page 47 of the printed record setting forth a list of the names of employes of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, you say that you saw every one of these men sign this statement?
A. Yes, sir, I did.
Q. Were they signed singly or in groups?
A. Singly.
Q. How did you happen to see each man sign?
A. Why, I just went around while they were working.
Q. Oh, you took the list yourself and went to the men?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. At whose instance did you do that?
A. Well, I hardly remember who did request me to do it; I don't remember.
Q. Does this list appearing on page 47 of the printed record of the appeal in this case, represent all the men then in the employ of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, or not?
A. No, sir; it does not.
Q. Do you recollect when it was that you took this list and went from man to man to get his signature?
A. No, sir; I do not remember the dates.
Q. What year was it?
A. Well, I think it was in 1907.
Q. Was it in the spring of the year or the fall of the year?
A. I do not remember.
Q. How long did it take you to get this list prepared and get it signed?
A. I do not remember exactly how long it took, but it didn't take very long.
Q. They were at that time mining coal for the company?
A. Part of them were and part of them were working at other work.
Q. On outside work?
A. Yes, sir; a few of them, and day men inside.
Q. After you obtained this list—having visited each man for the purpose—what did you do with it?
A. I returned it to the office.
Q. To the office of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, for what purpose did you get this list up? What was your object in doing it?
A. Why, I wanted to see that the men were satisfied.
Q. Prior to the obtaining of this list had anybody expressed himself as being dissatisfied?
A. No, sir; not that I know of.
Q. Well, a number of these men are foreigners, judging from their names, are they not?
A. Yes, sir; some of them are.
Q. What is the predominant nationality among these men?

408

A. Well, I do not know as to these men what their nationalities are, exactly.

409 Q. Are they Slavs?

A. Some of them are Slavs and some Polanders.

Q. And some Hungarians?

A. There might possibly be a few of them.

Q. Could they all speak English?

A. Yes, sir; I think every one of them can speak English so he can be understood.

Q. Do you know whether they can read or write English or not?

A. I do not know whether they can or not.

Q. I want to ask you whether each man signed his own name in his own proper hand, or did some one sign for him?

A. My recollection is that every man signed it himself. That is my recollection but I will not be positive that that is true.

Q. Well, what is your best recollection about it?

A. I think that each man signed it himself.

Q. Well, now, this Nick Heil Base Ball Ground is a place to which the general public resort for games?

A. Yes, sir; it was at that time.

Q. And it was a place for general public meetings?

A. I never knew of any public meeting before this one.

Q. Well, people went there?

A. They went there to play ball and to see the ball games.

Q. And it is a matter which the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company had no control over?

A. No, sir.

Q. What time did the men usually quit their work over there at the Hitchman mine?

A. Four o'clock.

Q. Then from that time on during the evening their time was their own?

A. Yes, sir.

(End of Cross examination.)

Redirect examination:

Upon redirect examination the witness Pickett, was asked and answered the following questions:

Q. Do you recollect what connection, if any, the preparation or obtaining of this list of names of satisfied employees had with relation to the attempt of Thomas Hughes to unionize the Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir; my recollection is that it was to find out if the men were satisfied or dissatisfied.

Q. You have said that you do not now definitely recall whether each man signed his name personally or not, but that the name of the man was signed in your presence?

A. Yes, sir.

410 Q. If in any instance the name of the employe as written on that list, or those lists, was written by some one other than the person whose name appears, what have you to say as to the presence of the person, at the time, whose name was written there, and as to the presence of anybody else at the time of writing the name, and what, if anything, was said.

A. If there is a name on there signed by any other person, it was signed in the presence of the man whose name appears on that list, and by his request the other man signed it for him.

(End of redirect examination.)

WILLIAM M. DAUGHERTY.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness, Daugherty, said: My name is William M. Daugherty; age, thirty-five; occupation, coal miner; residence, McMechen, West Virginia; have been a coal miner about ten years; have in the main worked at Glendale, and at the Hitchman mine, with the exception of about a month that witness worked at Gipsey Grove; belonged to the United Mine Workers of America; does not belong to their organization now; is now working at the Hitchman—started to work there first the latter part of 1902; at that time the mine was run non-union—by non-union the witness means that the men were not organized at that time, and "organized" means organized by the United Mine Workers of America, and that means union; and unorganized means not organized by the United Mine Workers of America, and that means non-union.

Witness says that he has worked sometimes union and sometimes non-union; relatively speaking, witness has, taking it all together, worked a little bit more union than he has non-union, since he first started in the mines; the Hitchman mine was unionized in 1903.

The witness was then asked and answered the following questions:

Q. Do you recollect the circumstances surrounding that unionizing? I speak now with reference to the sending in by the United Mine Workers of America of anybody to agitate the ques-411 tion of unionizing amongst the men?

A. Yes, sir; I recollect it.

Q. Well, state just as nearly as you now recall, what took place in the spring of 1903 just prior to and at the time of the unionizing of the mine.

A. Well, it seemed as if—well, I cannot recall the gentleman's name, but he came there and worked among the men and it seemed as if there was a majority of them wanted to organize, and they called a meeting and the superintendent was present, and he made a statement that he was satisfied for them to organize, himself, but he wanted them to live up to the organization—to the rules.

Q. Who was that superintendent that was there at that time?

A. W. H. Koch.

Q. Then what happened?

A. Well, they organized.

Q. And then what happened with respect to the operation of the mine?

A. Well, it was only a short time after they organized—I do not remember just how long—until we were called out on a strike.

Q. By whom?

A. By the officials of the United Mine Workers.

Q. Who were the officials of the Mine Workers' organization at that time, that you now recall, who had anything to do with that?

A. John Stevenson was district president of the district we were in.

Q. Well, who else were connected with the union as officers?

A. Well, I believe Worker was secretary at that time.

Q. Was Mr. T. L. Lewis one of the union officials at that time?

A. I believe he was vice-president of the national organization.

Q. Was Mr. Sullivan one of the officials?

A. I believe he held a position as an official but I forget just what position he held.

Q. And Mr. William Green—was he a union official, too?

A. Well, I do not know that he was in 1903.

Q. How about Mr. Zalenka? Was he an official?

A. I do not think he was in 1903. He may have been but not to my knowledge.

Q. Now, after the union was organized in 1903, what became of the organizer?

A. Well, I do not know what became of him. He left.

Q. The men were organized by one of the officials—Haskins, was it, or Stevenson?

A. Stevenson.

Q. About the first of April, 1903?

A. Yes, sir; along sometime before the first of April; I forget the exact date.

412 Q. And a strike occurred April 2nd, 1903?

A. As near as I can recollect it was the 2nd.

Q. And that was called by these union officials?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether there was any difficulty between the company and the men employed by the company at that time, which caused the strike?

A. To the best of my recollection I think the strike was called —well, it was something in regard to run-of-mine coal.

Q. And that was the objection raised, was it, by the men who called the strike?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, what was that objection, so far as you understood it from the officials who called the strike? You say it related to run-of-mine compensation?

A. Well, it was the difference between the percentage that the coal would make—run-of-mine and screen coal.

Q. Well, how was that settled?

A. The best of my recollection is that it was settled on an average basis.

Q. Through whose efforts?

A. Through the officials.
Q. Now, that average basis continued for some little time, did it?
A. Yes, sir; I cannot just recollect how long but it continued quite a while.
Q. As much as a year?
A. Well, I could not say whether it was a year. It was something along that way—about a year, I suppose—to the best of my recollection.
Q. Do you recollect the occasion of the 1906 strike?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You were working for the Hitchman Company at that time, were you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you were working union at that time at that mine?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you recollect of the holding of a national convention in 1906?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where was that held?
A. At Indianapolis, I believe.
Q. This convention was of the United Mine Workers of America?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. These "locals" of the United Mine Workers of America send representatives, do they, to the conventions?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And that makes up the convention?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did your local have any delegates at that convention?
A. We had a delegate at the national convention; yes, sir.
Q. At Indianapolis in 1906?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, along toward the first of April, 1906, had the convention come to any settlement with the operators respecting a new scale?
413 A. Well, to the best of my recollection they adjourned without making a scale.
Q. And what became of your representative then?
A. He returned home.
Q. Without a scale?
A. Without a scale.
Q. Now, you were then, as union men, confronted with the situation of having the scale expire March 31st, 1906, and with having no new scale arranged, inasmuch as the convention had adjourned without formulating a new scale?
A. That was the position we were in.
Q. Now, do you recollect whether there was anything in the shape of negotiations between your "local," or the men employed at the mine, and the management of the mine respecting a continuance of work pending the adjustment of a new scale?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. State, as nearly as you can now recall, what occurred?

A. As near as I can recollect the manager called us at different times during the latter part of March and said he was ready to sign a scale, and wanted to sign any time it was presented, and did not want his mine closed.

Q. Well, what response did the men make to that overture of the manager of the mine?

A. The only response was that we had no scale to present.

Q. You mean by that that you were embarrassed by the situation and did not see your way clear to make any arrangement?

A. The convention adjourned without making a scale and of course we did not have any.

Q. Was any proposal made by the management of that mine to the men looking to their continuing work?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As nearly as you now recall what was that suggestion or proposition?

A. Well, the manager agreed if we would continue filling the engine coal that he would pay the advance that was asked, and that he would give a bond in any amount that was required that he would go back and settle, if it was more than that, from the 1st of April up until there was a settlement made.

Q. Did you accept the proposition of a bond?

A. No.

Q. Did you take up with any of the officials of the United Mine Workers the question of whether you could, as union men, continue the work at that mine and load engine coal pending the adjustment of a new scale between the United Mine Workers and the operators of the country?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell me, as nearly as you now recollect, what was done by the men on that subject and with whom they dealt as officials of 414 the United Mine Workers, and in what way?

A. Well, our representative and our officials of the "local" took it up with President Green.

Q. You mean William Green who is one of the defendants in this suit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was Green?

A. To the best of my recollection he was at Columbus when we were in consultation with him.

Q. By what means? By what method?

A. Why the method was to take care of the engine coal until there could be a settlement of some kind made.

Q. You misunderstood my question: If Green was in Columbus and the men were at the mine, then how was it done?

A. By telephone.

Q. Were you on this committee of the men that dealt with Mr. Koch and subsequently dealt with Mr. Green?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what did Green say, so far as you now recollect?

A. So far as I now recollect he said for us to take care of the engine coal until further notice from him.

Q. And then did the men do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they worked until April 16th?

A. Yes, sir; I think it was the 16th, to the best of my recollection.

Q. And during that time between April 1st and April 16th, 1906, was there was a convention held in Wheeling, of the United Mine Workers?

A. I think so, to the best of my recollection.

Q. Did your "local" have any representative at that convention?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there?

A. I was.

Q. Were you a delegate?

A. I was.

Q. Do you recall whether there was anything said or done by the convention, or by the presiding officer, relative to the representatives of the Hitchman "local"?

A. I do.

Q. Well, now, tell us what that was as nearly as you now recollect?

A. Well, the convention convened and started to do business. They elected their officers. We had a man on the scale committee from our mine. They made objections to our man and claimed he was working unfairly.

Q. That is, he was "scabbing"--is that what you mean by that?

A. That is what I mean. They put our man off of the scale committee and the delegates from the Hitchman mine wanted to withdraw from the convention but they would not agree to it, so we staid in the convention.

415 Q. And the convention adjourned then, did it?

A. The convention adjourned without an agreement.

Q. Did they have any sort of action at the convention relative to operators who might be desirous of fixing up with the United Mine Workers' officials and signing a scale and getting to work again?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell me, as nearly as you now recollect, what that was?

A. As near as I can recollect when they adjourned they adjourned with the understanding that any operator, or number of operators, that wished to meet with the United Mine Workers' officials and delegates—that they were to immediately call a convention to formulate a scale that would not be under the prices of 1903.

Q. Well, did any operator in Sub-District 5 of District 6 have a convention called, that you now recollect?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it based upon the action of that convention?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what operator, do you remember?

A. W. H. Koch.

Q. He called one or had one called?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, did he get it?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you recollect whether the Lorain Coal & Dock Company people had a convention called?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, did they have one called or not?
A. They did.
Q. Under this same action of this convention?
A. I suppose it was. There was no other business, to our knowing, between that time and the time of theirs.
Q. Was that along about the time of this convention?
A. Yes, sir; but this was before the time that Mr. Koch wanted a convention.
Q. But the Lorain Coal & Dock Company convention that was called was after this convention that you spoke of had adjourned?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, what was the result of that convention?
A. The result was that they fixed up a scale and the Lorain Coal & Dock Company went to work.
Q. That was sometime about the middle of May, 1906?
A. Along about that time, somewheres; I cannot just recall the date.
Q. Who was the presiding officer of that convention that you attended at which your delegates were looked upon as "scabs"?
A. Andy Watkins.
Q. Is this the same Andrew Watkins who is one of the defendants in this suit?
A. I suppose it is the same man.
416 Q. Do you know the man?
A. Yes, sir; when I see him.
Q. Is he here?
A. I have not seen him here.
Q. Now, after that convention adjourned and your delegates went home, what did you do next? I speak now with regard to any dealings you may have had with Mr. Koch or with any representative of the United Mine Workers, particularly Thomas L. Lewis.
A. Well, we made a trip to Mr. Lewis's house, at Bridgeport,—I along with the rest of the committee—and we explained the situation to him as best we could and asked him to let us take care of the engine coal until some kind of a settlement could be made. He said no; that we could not load a lump of coal.
Q. What was his position at that time in the United Mine Workers of America?
A. To the best of my knowledge he was Vice-President.
Q. Vice President of the national organization? And where did he live? You say at Bridgeport?
A. At Bridgeport; yes, sir.
Q. Is he a coal miner, that you know of?
A. Only from hearsay. He says he is a coal miner and I suppose he is.
Q. Did you ever know of his working in a coal mine?

A. No, sir.
Q. So far as you know he has always been an official of some kind?
A. In my time; yes, sir.
Q. Well, when the men at your mine were confronted with this situation, and were stalled, and perplexed to know whether to continue work or not, as you have stated, did you have any meeting of your men at the mine?
A. Yes, sir. Well, not at the mine but close to the mine.
Q. Did any of these officials attend?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. If you now recollect, who attended? Who was it?
A. To the best of my recollection it was John Zalenka.
Q. Otherwise known as Zalenka?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is the same person who is one of the defendants in this suit?
A. I believe so.
Q. Do you know that man?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is he here?
A. I haven't seen him.
Q. Look around in the court room and see if you see him?
A. I believe that is the man over there.

(Referring to a man sitting alone about midway of the court room.)

Q. You recognize that man, do you?
A. I think I do.
Q. Is that the man who attended that meeting?
A. I think that is the man back there in the court room.
417 Q. How did he come to attend that meeting?
A. Well, I do not know exactly how he came to attend it.
Q. What part did he take in the meeting?
A. Well, he spoke to the men.
Q. His name is a foreign name. Does he speak a foreign language?
A. Yes, sir; he did that day.
Q. Do you know what language he spoke?
A. No; I do not.
Q. Did he talk English as well as a foreign language?
A. Yes, sir; he talked some English.
Q. Did you hear what he said in English?
A. Well, I heard some things he said but I just forget what they were now.
Q. Well, substantial-y, what was it about?
A. The best of my recollection is that it was a call for the men to go out on a strike.
Q. What position, if any, did he hold in the United Mine Workers?
A. He was Vice-President of the Sub-District, I believe.
Q. Vice-President of Sub-District 5 of District 6?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you know what he said to the other men when he talked in this foreign tongue?

A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. At what time of day, relatively speaking, was that meeting held?

A. I do not just recollect what time of day it was; I could not say.

Q. Was it in the morning, afternoon or evening?

A. To the best of my knowledge it was sometime in the afternoon.

Q. Do you know how long the meeting continued?

A. I do not just recollect; I suppose half an hour or something like that.

Q. Were there many men there?

A. There was quite a crowd; yes, sir.

Q. Was there much discussion amongst the men about the proposition to strike?

A. Well, there was considerable talk among them; I do not recollect and could not tell for I had no way of knowing; they were talking mostly in a foreign tongue.

Q. Did you take part in any discussion in the English tongue?

A. I may have taken some part in it; I do not just recollect.

Q. What was your attitude with reference to working, or going on a strike, in accordance with Zalenka's proposition?

A. Well, my attitude was to take care of the engine coal; that is what I was trying to do.

418 Q. Well, then, the next day after that meeting adjourned what happened with respect to the mine? Was it in operation or not?

A. The next day we were out on a strike, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. Called by this man Zalenka?

A. I cannot say it was called by him, but he was at the meeting and the next day they didn't work.

Q. Well, he was the medium that you dealt with?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What position, if any, did you hold at that time in the "local"? I mean the "local" that the United Mine Workers had at the Hitchman mine?

A. I believe I was president of the organization at that time.

Q. Did you see or talk with Thomas L. Lewis after they shut down?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you a married man?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any property, or realty, I mean?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have then?

A. No, not at that time.

Q. Now, during the time that the mine was idle from April 16th, 1906, to June 12th, 1906, when it started up non-union, where were you?

A. I was in Benwood and McMechen.
Q. Were you working?
A. No, sir.
Q. During the time that the mine was run union and you were working for the Hitchman Company, did the union get the check-off from you?
A. Not from me; they got it from the secretary.
Q. But you did not understand me; I mean off of your wages?
A. Yes, sir; off of my wages.
Q. And that was paid out of your wages every pay, was it?
A. Yes, sir; it was checked off.
Q. The union purports to aid men who are involved in strike, does it not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How soon after a strike is called, or a strike is on, if sanctioned by these officials, does the money become due to the miner?
A. Well, to the best of my recollection after the second week we were out at that time, I believe we were to draw benefits.
Q. Can you draw benefits if you strike of your own accord, or do you have to first get the consent of the officials who have authority over you in the organization, before they will pay you anything?
A. Well, according to the rules as I understood them at that time, you had to get the consent of the officials before you called a strike.
419 Q. So that you might be thoroughly dissatisfied with your employer, and your conditions of labor, and might determine to strike as between yourselves and your employer, and yet unless the union officials—that is, these higher men in official position—consent to it or approve of it, you would get no benefit. Is that the situation?
A. I believe that is the situation.
Q. But if you are entirely satisfied with your employer and if your employer wants you to continue work and if you want to continue work, you may be required to strike by your officials, or else be branded as a "scab"?
A. Yes, sir; I believe that is right.
Q. Now, in this instance, in 1906, I gather from your testimony that the men wanted to work and the employer wanted to have them work?
A. Well, it appears as if the majority of them wanted to work; they wanted the consent of the officials to take care of the engine coal, but it seemed as if they could not get it, and when they could not, they came out as they were ordered.
Q. So the officials, then, acting through this man Zalenka, required you and your associates who were members of the local union at the Hitchman mine at that time, to quit work or else be branded as "scabs"?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you all quit?
A. We all quit.

Q. Well, what did the union do then after the lapse of a couple of weeks with reference to supporting the men they had ordered to go out on strike? You say benefits were due at the end of two weks.

A. At the end of the third week, if I understand the third week; I believe at the end of the third week, or something like that; I do not just recall just the exact time, but they came down and paid us a week's benefit.

Q. How much was that?

A. Three dollars.

Q. Did you get three dollars?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, at the end of the next week did you get three dollars?

A. No, sir.

Q. What did you get?

A. I didn't get anything.

Q. Why?

A. Well, I have never been able to understand why I didn't.

Q. You mean by that that these officials had control of the money and would not pay it over?

A. Why, if they had any money they would not, but I believe they claimed they didn't have the money to pay it with. They came down a time or two and gave some of them orders on a store.

420 Q. An order on a store for how much?

A. I believe it was a dollar a week.

Q. For a man of family it was a dollar a week?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To support him and his family?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much would that man ordinarily have made in that week, under the usual conditions in the mine, had he been at work?

Witness: You mean taking the average man?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes, sir; I mean generally.

A. Twelve to fifteen dollars a week.

Q. So that as a result of being ordered out by these officials against their will, and to save their face, as it were, as union men, these officials gave three dollars in one week and thereafter proposed to the men to give them one dollar a week in a store order, whereas these same men if working would have each made from twelve to fifteen dollars a week?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who paid you the first and only three dollars?

A. Well, to the best of my recollection it was Lane Schimpf.

Q. And who is he?

A. I believe he was a board member, if I recollect right.

Q. A "board member"? What is that?

A. I mean one of the board of the district.

Q. One of the high officials but under still higher ones?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when the men came to get their dollar store orders, who was it that came down to the mine, if anybody did?

A. Well, Lee Rankin came down for one.

Q. That is the same Lee Rankin that is one of the defendants in this case?

A. I believe he is.

Q. Did you see Mr. Zalenka there?

A. Well, there was some one with him, but I do not recollect who it was—whether it was Mr. Zelenka or some other person. Mr. Rankin I know was there.

Q. Did the men accept these orders as a general proposition, or did they decline them?

A. They took a vote on it and voted to a man not to accept them, but part of the men did accept them afterwards.

Q. They were in need, I suppose?

A. I suppose so.

Q. You did not take any, you say?

A. No, I did not.

Q. What became of the engine coal proposition at the Hitchman mine after the union leaders shut the mine down?

421 A. Well, they filled it from other places. They brought it there and dumped it out of the cars into the bank cars, and run it around on the tipple and filled the bin.

Q. Do you know where that coal came from in whole or in part?

A. Well, it came from different points. Some of it came from Fairmont and it was generally understood after the Lorain Coal & Dock Company went to work, that quite a lot of it came from there.

Q. From the Lorain Coal & Dock Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That company operates where?

A. Near Bridgeport.

Q. Well, that is where Lewis lives, isn't it?

A. I believe it is.

The Court: Pardon me a moment, I want to ask a question.

Q. Where did this organization get its money from? Did you contribute to it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under what arrangement and what amount did you miners contribute?

A. Well, there was a certain per cent. came off of our earnings.

Q. That is, you paid a certain per cent. of your earnings into the hands of the association?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what that per cent. was?

A. No; I do not know.

Q. You do not know what it would average a week or a month?

A. Well, it varied; there was different percentages.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. What would be an ordinary pay for you while you were working union at that mine?

A. Well, as an average, sixty or seventy-five dollars when they were working in full.

Q. You mean that sixty or seventy-five dollars would represent the net amount coming to you after the deduction or before the deduction for the United Mine Workers?

A. Well, before; I did not count the deduction; I gave you the full amount that was on the pay, and then that deduction was taken off.

Q. Then on a pay of sixty or seventy dollars—suppose it was sixty dollars instead of seventy dollars—on a pay of say, sixty dollars what would be the deduction ordinarily be as nearly as you can recall?

A. Well, they had different things there to deduct for; they had a death claim, and different things, and it would run from a dollar to two dollars and a half.

422 Q. You mean the amount they withdrew might vary according as they might call on each person to contribute more at one time than at another?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was a part of the operation of the union as run by these higher officials, was it?

A. A part of it was and part of it was used in an operation that was run by the officials of the "local."

Q. And as these officials higher up needed more money for any purpose, they called for more money and the men paid more money?

A. Yes, sir; there would be an assessment in a case like that.

Q. How were those assessments with respect to frequency while you were a member of the organization?

A. Well, there was not very many extra assessments while I was a member of the organization at the Hitchman mine.

Q. Not while you were at the Hitchman?

A. No.

Q. Now, the assessments that you would make as a "local"—what were those assessments made for?

A. For death benefit and sick benefit.

Q. Immediately for the benefit of the men of the "local"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the other assessments and other charges were for the benefit of the organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or the higher officials; it didn't come back to you at the "local"?

A. No.

Q. And that is the way the organization as a national body gets its money, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. First through the dues and then through the assessments and other charges that the higher bodies may call for and which the "local" submits to?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, out of this fund that is accumulated or is supposed to be accumulated by those officials in the management of the organization, through these dues and through these assessments—out of this fund it is supposed that the men at the "local" will be protected through the payment of benefits during a strike provided the union officials higher up recognize the strike. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the way, then, that the three dollars came to be paid you. Well, that would hardly always be the way; you were offered a store order and I do not exactly understand about that store order. Who paid the store order in the end?

A. The United Mine Workers' officials paid the store order, or that is my understanding of it.

Q. The union officials then did not just simply guarantee the payment of a dollar and ask the man to get a dollar's worth 423 of credit at the store?

A. Well, they gave him an order to the store for a dollar.

Q. And it is your understanding that the dollar would eventually be paid by the larger organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have said that part of this coal that was served to the engines of the B. & O. during the strike, came from the Lorain Coal & Dock Company's mines over at Bridgeport?

A. I said that that was the general understanding among the men.

Q. The men looked into that, did they?

A. I believe they did.

Q. Now, was the Lorain Coal & Dock Company working its mines on the same basis as the Hitchman men wanted to work on?

A. Well, from the understanding I had from a few of the men who worked there at that time, they were receiving the same scale of wages that we quit at.

(The understanding of the witness is objected to by counsel for served defendants.)

Q. So the net effect then, was, if this coal came from the Lorain Coal & Dock Company's union mine, that these officials were keeping the men at the Hitchman mine from working and were not paying them benefits by pleading poverty, and the coal was being mined by other union men in Ohio, at Mr. Lewis's home, and shipped over to the Hitchman mine and then fed to the engines by the Hitchman people while you men in the union remained idle, all under the jurisdiction of the same officials; is that the net effect of the thing?

A. Well, I could not say that it was; the only thing I can say is that it was generally understood among the men that that was where the coal was coming from.

The Court:

Q. How far was the Lorain Company's mine from the Hitchman mine?

A. I guess it is something like eight or ten miles.
Q. On the other side of the Ohio River?
A. Yes, sir; on the other side of the Ohio River.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. How many mines has the Lorain Coal & Dock Company opened near there?
A. I do not know.
Q. How many did it have in 1906, that you recall?
A. I do not remember.
Q. Was the Wheeling Creek mine one of them?
A. The Wheeling Creek mine was one.
424 Q. Was the Crescent mine one?
A. I do not know.
Q. You recollect, though, that the Wheeling Creek mine was one?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In 1907 you resided where?
A. At McMechen.
Q. Did you have any meeting there at any time or under any circumstances with a man by the name of Thomas Hughes?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, state as nearly as you now recollect, how you came to meet him and what he had to say for himself?
A. Well, I heard a knock on the door one evening and I went to the door and there was a gentleman on the porch who introduced himself as Mr. Hughes, an organizer of the United Mine Workers, and he wanted to talk organization to me. I told him that I didn't care to talk organization at all. In the position I was in I told him that I didn't care to take any hand in it whatever. Mr. Hughes asked me if I owned my property. I told him I had bought it and was trying to pay for it; and he said if I became a member of the organization that they would get me a job at another place but it might not suit me as well as the one I had. He also advised me before he went away that I was right in not taking any hand in it.
Q. Did you see Mr. Hughes after that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, under what circumstances?
A. He called a meeting one evening.
Q. Mr. Hughes called a meeting?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Of what?
A. Of the men at the Hitchman mine; and he made a speech.
Q. Were you there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, tell us as nearly as you now recollect, what he said?
A. He said quite a few things. He said that he had taken it up with the mayor of Benwood, and the mayor of Benwood had told him that there had been better men than "Bill Daugherty" hung.
Q. Hughes said that in his speech and you heard him?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, did you see Mr. Hughes after that speech?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under what circumstances?

A. Well, during that time the mayor had found it out and his brother came down and told me Hughes had come up to see the mayor—(interrupted).

(Objected to by counsel for served defendants.)

The Court: Don't tell what anybody told you about any conversation some one else had with him. You can state what 425 information you had and what action you took upon it. That is really the correct way.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Give the net results without stating what your brother said the mayor stated?

A. Well, the next time I saw Hughes I told him that the mayor and chief of police both told me that if he came over there and bothered me any more to let them know; that he had wilfully lied about the statement he had made; and to let them know and they would lock him up.

Q. And what did Hughes say to that?

A. He just laughed.

Q. Now, in the speech that he made in which he made this remark about you, what was the general character of his remarks relative to the men and the mine?

A. Well, what I heard of it, was, (I did not hear all of his speech) that the men had better organize; if they didn't the company would cut their wages and they would be compelled to take the reduction.

Q. Why would they be compelled to take it? Couldn't they work some place else?

A. He claimed not; that they did not belong to the United Mine Workers.

Q. Do I understand you to say, then, that he intimated to these men that unless they got into the union, that if they got out of work at the Hitchman they could not get any work at any union mine?

A. At any union mine; that was the understanding I had.

Q. What is the status of the organization of the United Mine Workers, geographically speaking, in the locality of the Hitchman mine? To be a little plainer, is Ohio union territory and that part of West Virginia non-union territory?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the effect of his talk would be that unless the men living there at that mine would join the union, then if they got out of a job they would have to go elsewhere in West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir; besides a union mine.

Q. How many mines are there about Wheeling?

A. Well, there are quite a number of them; I do not know just how many.

Q. Four or five?

A. Yes, sir; something like that, I suppose.

Q. The Hitchman and the Glendale and the Richland, and the Mound Coal Company, at Moundsville, and the Elm Grove, make five. Over in Ohio what is the situation with regard to the coal mines right across the river from Benwood?

426 Witness: You mean are they organized?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes; are they organized and are mines frequently found or not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean they are organized and there are a good many mines?

A. They are organized and there is quite a number of mines.

Q. Before Hughes came to your house did this man Zelenka have any talk with you relative to the men at the mine going into the union again?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us the circumstances of that conversation, where it took place, and substantially, as you now recollect, what it was?

A. I met Mr. Zelenka one evening. He had just got off of the car, I believe, and we had a talk. He told me he would like to get us back in the organization. I told him that we were not treated right when we were in the organization. He said he would admit there had been mistakes made but they would like to get us back in the organization.

Q. Where was that talk? You say he got off of a street car.

A. That occurred right above the Hitchman company's office in the street.

Q. How long was Zelenka there on that occasion?

A. I do not recollect just how long; he was there a short time when I saw him but he may have staid longer.

Q. Did you see him talk with any one else before or after the time he talked with you?

A. Well, there were three or four of us there when he was talking. He was addressing us all—one the same as the rest of us.

Q. And then two or three weeks afterwards Hughes appeared?

A. Yes, sir.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Daugherty, said that his experience as a miner extended over something like about eleven years; that all of that period has been expended in mining with the Glendale and Hitchman companies, with the exception of about one month; that he has followed the work as a miner longer as a member of the union than when he was not a member of the union—a little longer, if any difference; witness was connected with

427 the United Mine Workers in 1906—up to the time in that year that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company started up its mine non-union; witness was handed "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 1," purporting to be the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America, and upon being asked to examine it and state whether that is a copy of the constitution that he worked under, so far as the National organization was concerned, replied that he thinks that has been modified since he was a member of the organization; asked to state in what respect it has been modified, witness says it was modified in regard to the transfer card, for one thing; that modification relates to section 5, article 7; to the best of witness's recollection the transfer card in 1906 was not filled out like the transfer card in 1907; witness does not know in what other respect the constitution of the National organization has been modified —can not designate any other changes; so far as witness knows there have been no other changes in the constitution since 1906, as shown by Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 1 put in by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company—witness believes not—not that he knows of; witness is handed Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 2, purporting to be a copy of the constitution of district 6, United Mine Workers of America, and is asked if that is the district to which his local belonged, and replied that to the best of his recollection his local belonged to Sub-District 5 of district 6; witness is asked if Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 2, which purports to be a copy of the constitution containing all amendments up to the date of January 12th, 1907, was the constitution of that district during that year, 1906, and replied that so far as he knows it is, and that his local was working under that constitution; witness was handed Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 3, which purports to be a copy of the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America, Sub-District 5 of district 6, and is asked to state if that is a copy of the constitution of Sub-District 5 of district 6 at the time he was a member of the organization in 1906, and replied that "Well, as far as I know I guess it is"; the local situated in 1906 at the Hitchman mine had a constitution for its government; that constitution was printed; witness guesses that that constitution was furnished his local by the officers of Sub-District 5 of district 6, but does not know that it was furnished by the officers; thinks the secretary furnished it; witness was president of his local in 1906, he believes; witness's local could do such things in carrying out the purposes of the organization as were not in conflict with the constitution of Sub-District 5 of district 6, or the National constitution; among other things that the witness did as a member of the local, along with the other members of that local, was to pay dues; and being asked if those dues were payable at the time he received his pay for his wages, witness replied: "They were checked off of our pay"; and further said: "We were paid every two weeks but we paid our dues by the month;" witness does not recollect the percentage that he paid during the time that he was a member of that local—there were different things; the regular monthly dues were twenty-five cents a month.

428

The witness was then asked and answered the following questions:

"Q. Well, then, you paid an assessment for the purpose of supporting a relief fund, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, was not that one-half of one per cent., in your district?
A. Part of the time; yes, sir.
Q. What was it the balance of the time?
A. Well, I recollect when it was ten per cent.
Q. When was it ten per cent.?
A. I believe it was in 1902.
Q. Well, do you remember whether that assessment was more than once, or not, at ten per cent.?
A. It was only once that I paid it; I paid it at different times but it was only on for one period at a time.
Q. How many payments at ten per cent. did you make in 1902?
A. I do not just recollect. I was working at the Glendale mine at that time.
Q. Was that the year in which the anthracite strike was on in Pennsylvania, or not?
A. I believe that was before, to the best of my recollection.
Q. Do you recollect the year in which the anthracite strike obtained in Pennsylvania or not?
A. No; I do not recollect.
Q. Then you cannot say whether you paid ten per — once or twice or three times, can you?
A. I can say that I paid it as much as three times, if not four.
Q. But you do not know what that assessment of ten per cent. was for, do you?
A. It was for striking miners, was the understanding we had.
Q. Well, now, where were they on a strike?
A. I do not know whether it was anthracite or not.
Q. It may have been then while the anthracite strike was on for aught you know?
A. I could not say.

429 Q. Do you know what the extent of the strikes were at that time, within the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers?

A. No, sir.
Q. Then you paid dues to the United Mine Workers of twenty-five cents a month while you were working, as I understand?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When you were on a strike those dues were not payable, were they?
A. No, sir.
Q. And then you paid an assessment of a certain per cent. for the relief fund. Is that right?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And those were the things that you paid to the national organization?
A. And then there was a capitation tax.
Q. A capitation tax? What was that for?—membership, was it not?
A. I do not recollect what it was.
Q. Do you recollect the amount of it?

A. Ten cents, I believe.
Q. How often was that paid?
A. Every month.
Q. Was that paid to the national organization?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, was not that for the support of the "Mine Workers Journal"?
A. I could not say.
Q. Well, your "local" received a copy of the "Mine Workers Journal" didn't it?
A. I believe so.
Q. You did not pay any subscription price like taking a newspaper, did you, for taking the "Mine Workers Journal"?
A. No; I believe not.
Q. That was furnished by the secretary of the national organization?
A. I could not say.
Q Anyhow it was furnished to you by some officer?
A. It was furnished to the "local"; I did not get it.
Q. Now, then, in addition to these payments you had an accident fund and a death fund?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That you paid to your local officers, as I understand it, so that when a man was injured in an accident happening at the mines, this fund thus created was used to aid him in his support and in nursing him and caring for him. Is that right?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then, in the death fund this money that you contributed was for the purpose of defraying the funeral expenses of the deceased. Is that right?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And if there was any surplus left over you donated that to the widow and children, did you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That was a part of the system of your organization?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And it is largely a part of the work of the organization?
A. Yes, sir.
430 Q. And that is a matter entirely in the control of the local union, I suppose, is it?—the death fund and accident fund?
A. It was at that time.
Q. I mean at that time. You haven't been a member since 1906, have you?
A. No, sir.
Q. And you are not undertaking to say whether it has been changed since then?
A. No.
Q. You haven't heard of any change in that respect?
A. No.
Q. Now, then, coming down to the matter of what constitutes a union mine and what constitutes a non-union mine: A union mine is operated by members of the United Mine Workers of America, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The district or sub-district to which the local belongs makes an arrangement or an agreement with an operator to work at a certain scale for a certain period of time under a rate that is fixed by the United Mine Workers and agreed to by the operators. Is that the way of it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is understood that that agreement is to control, on the part of the miners, as to the price to be paid, and it is to continue in force during the time that the scale runs, and that the operator is to pay that to the miners during that period. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, if a member of the Mine Workers' organization that is working under the union has a grievance, that is investigated by a committee appointed by your own body, and that grievance is taken up with the operator and if it can be disposed of in that way, it is settled in that way. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, if you cannot agree in that respect, or either party is dissatisfied, then you have a right to appeal to some higher officer for a settlement, and that runs through your contracts from year to year. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir; I guess so.

Q. Now, then, if the operator has a grievance or cause of complaint against the men who are working for him, or any one of them, he can have his grievance settled in the same way that the grievance of the men is settled. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He has a right to appeal to the officers just the same as the men have. Now, when you worked under the union system, or in a unionized mine, that was the course to be pursued. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the mine workers under the unionized mine have 431 a right as a rule to be satisfied with their checkweighman. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the United Mine Workers, when they operate or work for a mine, have a voice or a right to say something about the size and method of the screens that the coal shall pass through and over, have they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is designed to be uniform throughout the district where the conditions are the same?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, it is the purpose of the United Mine Workers to equalize the opportunities among the miners so as to give them equal opportunities if it can be done, and not discriminate in favor of one man as against another where the conditions are the same. Is that correct?

A. That is according to their constitution.

Q. Well, is that the theory of the organization—the purpose of the organization?

A. Yes, sir; that is the purpose of it.

Q. Now, in some instances it may not work out practically the same. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that would be largely owing to the difference, possibly, in conditions that could hardly be met? Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, that is in part what is done when the mine is run union, as I understand? Am I right about that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, have I omitted anything that characterizes the operation of a mine when it is being run union, that you think of and that you could state there for me, because I do not know about these things likely as well as you do. If there is anything I have omitted I will ask you to state it, if you please?

A. Well, I do not know as I can; there are different conditions that prevail at pretty nearly all mines.

Q. Well, those conditions, of course, have to be met in order to work out equally?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When a mine is run non-union what does that mean? What do you understand by that, Mr. Daugherty?

A. Well, I have not worked at very many non-union mines. The one I am working at now is run on the same basis that it was when the United Mine Workers were in power there.

Q. Is it a non-union mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say that it was run pretty nearly on the same basis, did you say, as the others?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you mean by saying "It is run pretty nearly on the same basis as the others"?

A. I mean that we get the same price for our labor; we have the same conditions that are met in the same way; we have 432 a committee and if we have any grievance we take it up under the same style as we did when we were in the United Mine Workers.

Q. You are practically continuing the same operations that you had when you were a part of the United Mine Workers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, is there any complaint to you people from the company on account of continuing that system?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Now, if you are continuing just as you did before what difference can you find in the matter of running non-union and running union in the conditions and methods of doing business at the Hitchman mine?

A. Well, one method is, since we have been running non-union w ehave never had any trouble of any kind and the mine has never betn stopped.

Q. You mean when you have been running non-union you have run continuously?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you ran union you had some strikes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that practically the only difference between the two conditions—the one that prevailed when you had the union and the one that prevails when you have no union?

A. Well, there may be some other little difference.

Q. There may be some other little difference. Now, what would you say that consists in?

A. Well, it consists in this: That whenever we run out of an agreement we have the power to make our own agreement and go ahead and work. As it was before we had to wait for the officials to make it.

Q. You meet now and among yourselves you make an agreement. Haven't you been running at practically the same price all the time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you have had no agreement to make as to your scale of wages since you started to run non-union? Is that right?

A. Yes, sir; there have been agreements made since then.

Q. Was the scale lowered or raised?

A. Well, the scale was—whatever the United Mine Workers' scale paid that is what we got.

Q. Then it was consented to by the operator and he was just conforming to the scale of the United Mine Workers?

A. He was just to pay the scale, yes, sir; whatever it was.

Q. And then also as to the conditions prescribed by the United Mine Workers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. About the only difference now and when you ran union 433 is that you don't have the advice of the officers of the United Mine Workers, whereas before you did have it. Is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Is it not a fact that the officers of the United Mine Workers are experienced coal men and have had a good deal of experience in mines both as visitors to mines and as inspectors of mines and as workers in mines? For instance: Take Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Lewis and Mr. Mitchell and that class of men. Aren't they all experienced coal men?

A. Well, I can only answer that from what I have heard of them; I do not know it.

Q. My understanding is that you had a talk with Mr. Green and Mr. Hughes and Mr. Zelenka. Is that right?

A. I had a talk with Mr. Hughes and Mr. Zelenka; I did not have any talk with Mr. Green.

Q. You talked with Mr. Zelenka when there were no other officers or persons authorized to organize with him, did you?

A. I do not recollect but I believe there was a fellow with him.
Q. But you do not know whether he was a member of the organization or not—the other man?
A. No, I do not know that.
Q. When was that first conversation that you had with Mr. Zelenka?
A. I cannot just recollect.
Q. What year was it?
A. It was in the last of 1907, to the best of my recollection.
Q. Well, did you have one or two conversations with him?
A. One.
Q. And he wanted you to reconsider the matter and join the union again, did he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you told him that you did not want to talk union to him. Is that right?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you did not?
A. No, not very much.
Q. Nor he to you?
A. No, sir.
Q. And that was the end of the matter practically?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, then, you say you saw Hughes. How many times did you see him?
A. I saw him at different times.
Q. How many times did you talk with him?
A. I suppose five or six times.
Q. Was it when he was alone?
A. I have talked with him when he was alone and when he was in company with other men.
Q. Were those other men members of the United Mine Workers, or not?
A. No, sir.
434 Q. But so far as the members of the United Mine Workers were concerned, he was alone?
A. Yes, sir; I believe so.
Q. Well, now, when did you first talk with him?
A. As near as I can recollect it was in the last of 1907.
Q. That was the first you talked with him?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did he say to you in that conversation?
A. Well, he came to my house and introduced himself as a representative of the United Mine Workers.
Q. And wanted you to join the union there, did he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And then is when you told him you would not do it? Or practically, in effect, that is what you told him?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And he agreed with you it was all right?
A. He agreed with me that I was better off by not taking any hand in it at all.

Q. And he did not insist on it any further?
A. Not there; no.
Q. When was the next occasion that you saw him?
A. He was around there every day until we had the meeting.
Q. Did he ever talk with you again about your becoming a member of the union?
A. Well, I do not know that he talked to me any more than he did to the rest; he talked to all of them that he would meet; he talked in my presence.
Q. Well, did they all answer about like you did?
A. I cannot say.
Q. Well, so far as you recollect?
A. So far as I recollect a few of them did, I know, but I cannot say as to all.
Q. You do not know of anybody that he succeeded in inducing to join the union, so far as your knowledge is concerned?
A. Not at that mine, I do not; no, sir.
Q. At the Hitchman, you mean?
A. At the Hitchman; that is what I mean.
Q. You cannot say that any one else outside of Hughes and Zelenka solicited you to join, can you?
A. No, I believe not.
Q. Mr. Daugherty, what did you get a ton for run-of mine coal when you started up in 1906?
A. I cannot tell you.
Q. Do you know what you get now?
A. No, I do not; I know what a machine man gets but I do not know what a loader gets.
Q. What do you get for screened coal?
A. We get 11.6 for cutting.
Q. Do you put out more run-of-mine coal than you do 435 screened coal?
A. Well, when the mine is not working in full they do.
Q. What do you mean by when it is not running in full?
A. Well, when they are running slack with orders.
Q. Do you find that the case right frequently—running slack with orders?
A. Well, it has been for awhile; yes, sir.
Q. What is the loading and cutting price for run-of-mine coal there now—machine work?
A. I cannot tell you the loading price but I can tell you the cutting price.
Q. And what is that?
A. It is 7½.
Q. And the loading price you do not know?
A. No, I do not.
Q. Do you know the size of the screen you use for commercial coal?
A. I did know and I believe it is an inch and—well, I do not know, but it is the same form as we had it before.
Q. Is the screen at the Hitchman the same that it is at the Glendale and Richland, or not ?
A. I cannot say."

Redirect examination:

On re-direct examination the witness was asked and answered the following questions:

"Q. Mr. Daugherty, counsel for the defense handed you on cross-examination the constitution of the International Union United Mine Workers of America, marked 'Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 1,' revision 1907, and asked you to look at it and say whether it was the same in its printed form here as it was when you belonged to the United Mine Workers' organization in 1906. I find in looking at the book that it contains forty-two pages. Your reply to Mr. Hogg was based upon what sort of an examination of this book?

A. I just merely looked at it and saw that it was the same in form.

Q. Do you know as a matter of fact whether this is like what you operated under or not?

A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. He also handed you the Constitution of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, marked 'Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 2,' and also marked 'Containing all amendments to date. January 12, 1907,' and he asked you a similar question as to whether that was the same constitution that you were operating under in 1906. Upon looking at the book I find that it contains twenty closely printed pages. Your answer was briefly made and I will ask you upon what examination you answered?

436 A. I Just merely looked at it.

Q. As a matter of fact, you do not know the difference, if there is any?

A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. And you did not take time to examine it?

A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Would you know if you were to take time to compare it with the constitution of 1906?

A. No; I do not believe I would.

Q. And that same remark applies to the International Constitution—the 42-page book?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were also handed a pamphlet marked, 'Preamble and Manual Constitution United Mine Workers of America, Sub-District 5 of District 6. Revision 1907,' marked 'Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 3,' and you were asked if that book contains the same matter as was in the constitution of the United Mine Workers of Sub-District 5 of District 6 of 1906, when you belonged to the United Mine Workers. Upon looking at that book I find it is made up of sixteen pages of closely printed matter. What sort of an examination did you make of that book before making your reply?

A. I just looked at it and noticed the form of it was all; I saw it was the same form.

Q. You mean the physical form of it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean, then, the physical form of these other two also?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You mean it just looked like those?
A. It looked like them.
Q. As a matter of fact you would not know whether that was the constitution of 1906 unless you had the 1906 constitution to compare it with?
A. No, sir; I would not.
Q. You were asked something about a union card or a transfer card. What is that? What is a union card or transfer card? What is meant by that?
A. It means that when you go from one place to another, if you are a united mine worker, you have to take a card with you. Your local makes you out a card to take wherever you go, and you present it to the officer of the other local when you get employment.
Q. Do you mean that the organization keeps a sort of tab on every man that belongs to it, and if he works in one mine he has got to get a card and take it and surrender it to another mine if he goes to work in another place?
A. Yes, sir; a union mine.
Q. Is that the system all over the country?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, if you should happen to lose your card you could 437 not get a job, then, could you?
A. Well, you could get a card if you were known; you could get another card, I suppose.
Q. There is a way of getting another card, isn't there, by paying something for it?
A. I do not know if you would have to pay anything for it if you were to lose your card.
Q. If you do not present the old card then what happens?
A. They make you pay for a new one.
Q. Well, in that way, it is possible by careful bookkeeping to keep tab on every man throughout the United States, isn't it?
A. If they are members of the United Mine Workers; yes, sir.
Q. You were asked a number of general questions about the methods of the United Mine Workers and what their purposes were, so far as you understood them, when you were a member of that organization. While you were a member of the organization did you find any difference between the theory and the practice of the union?—that is, between its professions and what it did?
A. No; I cannot say that I did.
Q. Now, you were asked something about the screens and I understood you to say that the screens were the same as they were before, but counsel did not permit you to complete your answer. I would like to have you finish it. What do you mean by 'before'?
A. When we were in the United Mine Workers."

Recross-examination:

Upon re-cross examination the witness was asked and answered the following questions:

"Q. Mr. Daugherty, you stated that you just looked at the physical form of these pamphlets containing the constitution of the national organization and of Sub-District 6 and of District 5, and based your answer on that examination?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to ask you if you did not take the pamphlet when you were answering my questions in regard to it, and turn the leaves over and look at them, and look at the contents inside of the pamphlet, before you answered my question?

A. I turned it over and saw it was in the same form and I said that was it, with probably some modifications.

Q. Then I asked you to specify the modifications and didn't you again look at the contents of the pamphlet?

A. At one; yes, sir.

Q. Well, when you were president of the local didn't you read these constitutions yourself?

A. Yes, sir.

438 Q. And you were an active officer there in the 'local' were you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were tolerably familiar with the constitutions of these organizations, were you not?

A. I was at that time.

Q. Well, now, will you take those, with the consent of the court, and examine them to-night, and report any differences that you find in these constitutions in 1907, as compared with what they were in 1906, when you were president of your 'local'?

A. I could not do that without I had one of the 1906 to compare it with."

(End of re-cross examination.)

J. W. Hart.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness Hart says that he is tipple foreman at the Glendale Coal Works and has been employed there since July 1st, 1910, and prior to that he was employed at the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; worked at the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company's mine since 1901; was practically carpentering all the time he was working at the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company's mine; is not a member of the United Mine Workers of America; was a member at one time—that was when he was working at the Hitchman works; is not a miner; joined the United Mine Workers at the Hitchman mine; was not working at carpentering then but was digging coal or loading rather at that time; witness was loading coal at that time and joined the union when the mine was unionized in 1903—when it was first unionized; witness remained in the union until the men went out on a strike and he then gathered up his tools and left; that was in 1903 witness reckons if he is not mistaken; witness joined the union in 1903 but does not just remember when the strike was; the men came on strike and witness never went back until everything was all over with. Well, it was practically two years; witness cannot tell when he went back—it was the last of January or the first day—five years ago; then witness worked there until July 1st, 1910,—witness recollects a man by the name of Thomas Hughes; talked to him in the carpenter shop at the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; witness cannot fix that date—it was the same time that he was trying to organize the place;

439 witness was in the shop when Hughes came in; witness had never met him before and did not know who he was; Hughes broached the subject of organizing the mine; he wanted to know why witness did not join the organization and witness remarked to him in this way "Why would I give up my position where I am getting more money than you would afford me in the organization"; that the scale would not afford witness as much money as he was getting; witness was working as a carpenter then at that time; witness was asked if carpenters belong to the United Mine Workers of America and replied that Hughes showed him the scale to that effect; that is, Hughes told him—Hughes didn't show him, but Hughes told him there was a scale to that effect for carpenters and carpenters' helpers; at that time if a carpenter worked at a coal mine he had to belong to the union if it was a union mine; after witness told Hughes that, Hughes did not stay around there in the shop very long; witness had no use for Hughes; witness was asked what he said that caused Hughes to go out and replied "I simply told him that I did not want to have anything to do with it"; witness says that Hughes then went out in front—out on the pike—witness saw him twice after that that witness knows of; witness heard Hughes make a speech on the Nick Heil ball ground, the meeting was on Friday witness believes, in the evening time; witness does not know William Green; well this Friday evening Hughes held a meeting in the ball park and witness went there, he saw a good many people there, they were miners mostly from Benwood and McMechen and when witness says from Benwood he means the Hitchman mine; witness does not know whether he could put in words the things that he recalls that Hughes said; witness says that Hughes said some very slandering things about some people in that neighborhood; he brought out some names that were connected with the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; witness recalls that Hughes mentioned Daugherty's name, Jim Jarrett's name and Mr. Pickett's; Mr. Pickett was superintendent of the Hitchman mine; in the course of his speech Hughes tried to make it appear that it was the right thing to join the union in Hughes' belief; he could not say whether Hughes made any comment upon the nerve of the men that were working at the Hitchman mine; Hughes did not comment upon the nerve of witness.

At this point in his direct examination the following questions were asked and answers given:

Q. Did he say anything about the men at the mine be-440 ing afraid to join the union for fear of losing their jobs?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now what was it he did say, as nearly as you can recollect, on that particular point?

A. Well, he made mention that they were afraid to join the union for fear of losing their jobs; that was just the proposition that was talked.

Q. How long after this did Hughes leave?

A. Well, I do not mind of ever seeing him any more after that evening."

Upon further direct examination the witness was asked why it is, if he knows, that a carpenter working at a union mine is required to join the United Mine Workers of America, and said that he could not tell as for that at all because he never was connected with it in that part of the business; that when he belonged he was a miner.

Cross-examination:

Q. Now, you say that you saw Hughes up there about the time he was trying to organize the place, using your language. Now, Mr. Hart, when you say he was trying to organize the place, do you mean that he was there inviting the men to become members of the United Mine Workers?

A. He was.

Q. That is what you mean by your expression that he was trying to organize the place?

A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. That is what I understood you to say, but what I want to get at is this: In your examination in chief in answer to questions put to you by Mr. Gilchrist you stated you saw Hughes up there when he (Hughes) was trying to organize the place. I am using your language—"trying to organize the place." Now, what do you mean when you say he was there "trying to organize the place?" Do you mean by that simply that he was there talking to the men and trying to induce them to become members of the union?

A. What else would it be.

Q. I am asking you if that is it?

A. Well, ain't that proper?

Q. That is not the question: I am trying to find out if that is what you meant? You certainly can answer if that is what you mean or not.

A. Well, you heard me answer his questions.

Q. Certainly, I did; and now I am trying to get at what you mean by saying that he was "trying to organize the place"?

A. Well, he was trying to organize the place.

441 Q. But I am trying to find out what you mean by that—"trying to organize the place"?

A. He tried to organize the place and did not succeed in doing it.

The Court:

Q. What do you mean by organizing?

A. It is a body of men gathered together for the purpose—(interrupted)——

Q. You mean he was trying to organize them in a United Mine Workers Union?
A. That was his object.

Mr. Hogg:

Q. By that you mean that he was inviting the men there to become members of the union—trying to get them to come into the union?
A. Myself personally.
Q. Is that all your answer referred to—just yourself personally?
A. Yes, sir; I know that definitely.
Q. Then do you not know about his trying to organize anybody else?
A. His course of talk on the ball ground was to that effect, you know.
Q. He was there alone except the people who were there to hear him?
A. I do not know as to that, sir.
Q. Did you see anybody with him?
A. There was lots of people there but I could not tell whether they were directly with him or not.
Q. Was he doing the talking and these people there listening to him?
A. They were.
Q. And he was advising those who went there. Did you go there for one?
A. I did.
Q. How did you happen to go there?
A. I went there of my own accord.
Q. What for?
A. To hear him.
Q. To hear what he had to say? Do you know what the others went for?
A. I suppose for the same object.
Q. Now, you all listened to his talk there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did you listen for?
A. Well, I wanted to hear what he had to say.
Q. You had a curiosity to hear him?
A. I had a curiosity to hear him the same as I would have to go and hear a preacher.
Q. When you went there you had no intention of joining the union, had you?
A. Not in the least.
Q. You went out of curiosity and just to hear him?
A. I went to hear what he had to say.
Q. How long did he talk there?
A. I would be safe in saying that he talked twenty minutes.
Q. Did he make a right nice talk there?
A. He is a pretty shrewd talker.
442 Q. Smooth and persuasive?

A. Well, part of it was.

Q. He spoke kindly of everybody, I suppose, except those few people you mentioned? He talked kindly to the men?

A. I do not know whether you would call it kindly or not; I would not.

Q. Did you get mad at what he said?

A. I did not have any occasion to get mad.

Q. Well, do you know of anybody that did?

A. I could not say as to that, sir.

Q. Did he manifest a high temper and bad blood?

A. I could not say as for that.

Q. You say he made some scandalous remarks?

A. He did.

Q. What do you mean by the term "scandalous"? What am I to understand you mean by that?

A. Well, putting it short, if I myself would make somebody out as a dog, that would be scandalous, wouldn't it?

Q. Yes. Well, now, what did he say that would make a man out a dog that you recollect of, and of whom was he speaking?

A. He was speaking of those parties that I mentioned.

Q. Well, that was Daugherty—Was that the same meeting that Mr. Daugherty spoke of in his testimony?

A. I could not say.

Q. What was it that he said about Mr. Daugherty?

A. Well, he said so many things that I cannot just recall them all.

Q. You do not recollect, then, just exactly what he did say. Now, another one, was Mr. Jarrett. Was it Jim Jarrett?

A. Yes, sir; Jim Jarrett.

Q. What business was he engaged in at that time?

A. I ain't right sure whether he was a machine man or inside day man; I could not say as to that.

Q. What was the trouble about Jim Jarret, so far as he was concerned?

A. Jim seemed to be one of the committee.

Q. What committee do you refer to?

A. This miners' committee that they had been dealing with.

Q. Well, do you recollect what he said about Jim?

A. Not exactly; no.

Q. Do you recollect what he said about the other man? What was his name?

A. Pickett.

Q. Pickett, yes. Do you recollect what he said about Pickett?

A. Nothing only that he made Mr. Pickett out as a bad man.

443 Q. Well now those are the only ones that you recollect?

A. Those are the only ones.

Q. What time in the day was this?

A. It was in the evening.

Q. Well, as I understand, nobody after that joined the union—after that meeting, I mean?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Well, if there was anybody working around the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company that joined after that meeting, you would have likely known it—that quit their work?

A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. If they did you do not know it?

A. If they did I do not know it.

Q. Well, if anybody had quit work by reason of anything said in that speech, you would have likely heard it or known something about it, wouldn't you?

A. I do not know as I would.

Q. Well, now, he tried to make out to you when he came to you that it would be a good thing to join the union, as I understand? He tried to make that appear to you?

A. Why, sure he did.

Q. And you told him it would be no good to you because you were getting more at that time than the union scale provided or gave?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that was a fact, was it?

A. It was a fact.

Q. What were you getting at that time?

A. That is between me and the company.

Q. Don't you recollect what you were getting?

A. Yes, sir; I know exactly what I got.

Q. Well, don't you want to tell the court what you got?

A. That is between me and the company.

Q. Do you know what the miners were paying—what the United Mine Workers were paying?

A. I know what he said they were paid; I do not know what they were paid.

The Court: Do you want him to answer that question? If it is material you can have it.

Mr. Hogg: Yes, I would like to have him answer it.

The Court: Mr. Witness, you will have to answer what they were paying you at that time.

A. Thirty cents an hour.

Mr. Hogg:

Q. What did he say the others were paying?

A. He said they were paying $2.36 for eight hours.

444 Q. And how many hours did you work?

A. Nine hours.

Q. Now, Mr. Gilchrist asked if the speech made by Mr. Hughes impressed your nerves, or affected your nerves, or something to that amount?

Mr. Gilchrist: I did not ask him that at all.

Mr. Hogg:

Q. I believe you said that that speech made no impression on your nerves, in answer to a question Mr. Gilchrist asked you. Is that right?

A. I said that it didn't make any impression on my *en*rves.

Q. And he asked you if it made any impression on anybody else's?

A. I did not see anybody getting boisterous about it.

Q. Nor affected about it?

A. Nor affected in any way.

ALBERT JARRETT.

Direct examination:

My name is Albert Jarrett; age 38; residence, McMechen, West Virginia; occupation, coal miner; now employed at the Hitchman coal mine; has been employed there about eight years, witness believes; is a machine man now; has worked at the Glendale mine and at the Mound Coal Company's mine near Moundsville; recalls the occasion of the 1906 strike of the United Mine Workers of America, that is, the national strike—remembers the strike; recalls that there was a strike at the Hitchman mine at or about that time; upon being asked whether he recalls anything was said or done either by the men or the management of the mine dealing together or any of those parties dealing with the United Mine Workers of America with reference to continuing work at the Hitchman mine pending a final adjustment of the national scale between the United Mine Workers of America as an organization and the operators who were in convention with them, witness replied that he does not remember much about that; that he did not attend very many of those meetings; that he remembered that they had a good deal of talk around among themselves, but he does not remember much about it; witness says that he thinks the Hitchman mine continued to run after the first of April, 1906, for a while, and then the men were called out on a strike; during the time they were mining coal after April 1st, 1906, and before they were called out on strike in April, 1906, witness thinks just engine coal was mined; and 445 after having worked in that modified way in mining engine coal they were called out eventually about April 16th—somewhere along about then; the men were not permitted to load even engine coal; witness worked at the Hitchman mine for about eight or nine years, something like that as near as he can recollect; witness was a member of the United Mine Workers at one time; is not a member of the United Mine Workers now; during the time that he was a member of the United Mine Workers some of his money was checked off and paid to the national organization; does not think he could give some general idea of about what proportion of his earnings was paid over to the United Mine Workers—that would depend somewhat on the assessments that might be made during the time and it would depend on how much witness made—so that it would be a variable amount; witness regarded what he had to pay as a right smart little bit in proportion to his wages for the benefits that he received; witness is a single man; during the time witness was on strike in 1906 he was entitled to some benefits—did not receive any—does not know why he did not get any—was not offered any money—and witness added: "I was offered—I believe they called it a store check"; witness did not read the store order; he looked at it in the gentleman's hand and told him he did not want it; witness does not know how it read but the man who offered it to him said it was a store order, witness believes; the man who offered witness the store order did not state what it would accomplish for witness; witness understood that if he took that order he would be charged up with the receipt of that order as the receipt of so much money; that that order was to take the place of money; does not know what store it was on; was offered a store order just once; this store order was for three dollars; upon being asked why he did not want the store order witness said: "Well, I told him I could not pay my board with it and I did not want it"; witness was boarding and could not use a store order; as the result of that strike which was called or enforced by the union officials on or about April 16th, 1906, witness was idle at that time as nearly as he can recollect eight or nine weeks —to June 12th, 1906, witness thinks; at that time the mine resumed operation—not under the control of the United Mine Workers; witness helped to organize an independent union at the Hitchman mine; it was called The Independent Mine Workers of West Virginia, and had a charter from the state of West Virginia.

446 At this point the following questions were asked and answers given and proceedings had:

Q. I will show you and ask you to look at and identify if you can the charter of the Independent Mine Workers of West Virginia, as it is printed in the published report of the Secretary of State of the State of West Virginia March 4th, 1905, to March 1st, 1907, printed at Charleston in 1907, and after you read it I will ask you whether that is the organization that you have referred to?

(Witness here handed book and reads from the report referred to.)

A. Yes, sir; this is the same charter.

Mr. Gilchrist: This report of the Secretary of State, page 567, showing the organization of the Independent Mine Workers of West Virginia, I now offer in evidence to be marked Albert Jarrett's Exhibit No. 1, and I will read from the report of the Secretary of State as it is printed, as follows:

Independent Mine Workers of West Virginia.

(Resident.)

Charter issued June 25, 1906; charter continues perpetually. Principal office, Moundsville, West Virginia.

pendent Mine Workers of West Virginia," to be composed of representatives and members of the several local unions.

447 Third. To promote the interests of the members of the district association and the local unions, render aid and assistance to the members entitled to the same, and to procure employment for worthy and capable workmen.

Sixth. The said district association shall have authority to establish from time to time, a scale of wages for labor and mining coal for the said local unions organized hereunder.

Capital stock authorized $50.00; par value shares $1.00; subscribed $50.00; paid in $5.00.

Stockholders.

The names, post office addresses, and the number of shares of stock subscribed for by each are as follows:

J. W. Guthrie	Moundsville, W. Va.	10 shares.
James Hickman	McMechen, W. Va.	10 shares.
Albert Jarrett	McMechen, W. Va.	10 shares.
Pete Bartoni	McMechen, W. Va.	10 shares.
B. C. Rowand	McMechen, W. Va.	10 shares.
Total number of shares		50

Q. Now, after the Hitchman mine resumed operation, June 12th, 1906, you continued working there under this independent organization, as I understand you?

A. Yes, sir.

Upon further direct examination the witness, Albert Jarrett, said that he remembers having seen a man by the name of Thomas

448 Hughes about the Hitchman mine, and that he saw Mr. Zelenka about the Hitchman mine before he saw Thomas Hughes about there; witness says Mr. Zelenka sits in the court room here—he is the gentleman back there—"Yes, sir; that is him"; when Zelenka came to the mine at that time there was some gentleman with him, but witness does not know who it was; witness did not observe what, if anything, Zelenka did while he was there—saw him talk with some of the miners there but does not remember who they were or how many there were; these were miners of the Hitchman Company; witness does not remember just how long it was in the measure of days after Zelenka went away until he saw Hughes about the mine; witness never heard Zelenka talk, does not know whether he is a foreigner, thinks he never talked to him; when Hughes came around the Hitchman mine witness saw him talk to some of the miners there—was all ever witness saw him do; witness does not know that Hughes made any speeches or held any meetings—witness did not attend any meetings; during the first sixteen days, or from April 1st to April 16th, 1906, the only kind of coal that was mined at the Hitchman mine was what was termed engine coal, witness thinks that is right; engine coal is coal that is put into the bin, and from the bin it is loaded into engines which run under or near the bin; in a sense engine coal is emergency fuel—it has to be supplied regularly—that is right; that is the way the concession came about in allowing the engine coal to be mined but restricted to cut out entirely the commercial coal during the first sixteen days of April, 1906; after the union officials shut down the mine and refused to allow even engine coal to be loaded April 16th, 1906, the engines were supplied there, but witness does not know where they got the coal—he does know that the coal was supplied—it was brought in railroad cars and loaded into the bank cars and run up over the tipple; witness did not learn positively where that coal was from or any portion of it; witness did not make any investigation; no committee of miners made any investigation; witness was not a member of the committee; from the appearance of that coal witness thinks it was number eight vein, what he saw was number eight vein, it was not Fairmont coal that witness saw; around Wheeling number eight vein is mined over at Bridgeport on Wheeling Creek, at Elm Grove, and witness thinks across the river from McMechen; the character of the coal is distinct and can easily be determined by a person who is familiar with coal, witness thinks; witness does 449 not know where the mines of the Lorain Coal & Dock Company are, believes he does not know where any one of them is; does not know to whom the Wheeling Creek mine belongs; has heard of the Wheeling Creek mine; has heard of the Crescent mine across there too; if these are mines of the Lorain Coal & Dock Company witness does not know that to be a fact.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Albert Jarrett, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Mr. Jarrett, at the time that these orders were given to you you understood that they were to secure groceries, provisions, or whatever you wanted out of the store?

A. No, sir; I did not understand it that way.
Q. What did you understand the order to be for?
A. I did not know what it was for.
Q. Suppose it had been for money? Why did you refuse it if you did not know what it was for?
A. Well, it did not look like money to me.
Q. Well, did you know it was not an order for money?
A. No; I did not.
Q. Didn't you say a moment ago that store orders would not pay your board bill?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then you must have understood that it was an order to the store for goods and not for money?
A. Well, that is what I thought it was; yes, sir.
Q. Well, you satisfied yourself that it was not for anything else before you refused it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. The reason you refused it then was because you wanted money to pay your board with?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you could not use a store order which called for goods at a store with which to pay your board?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you ask your landlady where you were boarding, or your landlord, or whoever you were boarding with, whether or not they would take that order?
A. No, sir; I did not.
Q. You did not stop to inquire?
A. No, sir; I did not.

(End of Cross Examination.)

450 JAMES JARRETT.

Direct examination:

My name is James Jarrett; age, thirty-six; residence, McMechen, West Virginia; occupation, miner; has been a miner about ten years; mainly worked at the Hitchman mine; has worked at the Hitchman mine about nine years, as near as witness remembers; is not a member of the United Mine Workers of America; was once a member of that organization, and while a member of that order witness worked at the Hitchman mine; witness recalls the occasion when the Hitchman mine was unionized in 1903; the immediate occasion for the agitation of the subject of organization in that mine amongst the men was due to the fact that there was an organizer there in the mine; the organizer was there as one of the miners; after the mine was organized that man did not continue working there; witness does not know what became of that man, supposes he left; witness recalls the 1906 strike and the circumstances surrounding the continuing of mining at the Hitchman mine between April 1st and April 16th, 1906.

The following questions were asked and answers given:

Q. Was that the result of any dealings between the management of the mine and the men, or of the men and the management of the mine and the union, or the men at the mine and the union officials? State as nearly as you can, in a general way, what you now recollect about it?

A. Well, as near as I recollect, the management of the mine asked the men to work until there was a scale made. He asked the miners to work and supply coal for the engine trade until there was a new scale made, and he agreed to pay—to go back to the first of April and pay whatever the new scale called for. That is, unless it was a reduction; and in case it was a reduction he would pay the men the present price he was paying then; and if there was an advance he would go back to the first of April and pay them the back money that the new scale called for.

Q. Well, was there any communication had with Mr. Green?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean Mr. Green, one of the United Mine Workers' officials of Columbus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what he said to the men?

A. Well, we got a communication by telephone from Mr. Green, giving us permission to go ahead and load enough coal to supply the engines; or that was my understanding.

Q. And you worked, then, that way?

A. Yes, sir.

451 Q. Well, how did you come to strike?

A. We came to strike by the orders of Mr. Zelenka.

Q. Mr. Zelenka, the gentleman who sits here in the audience?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him at the mine when the strike was ordered?

A. I did not see him at the mine but I saw him near there.

Q. What was he doing there?

A. Holding a meeting.

Q. Did you attend the meeting?

A. Well, when I went to the hall where the meeting was in session it was almost over with. I just got there in time to learn that he had ordered the men to quit work, and they quit.

Q. And you quit along with the balance of the men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did Mr. Zelenka then do?

A. I don't know.

Q. Was he there the next day that you recall?

A. I do not recall that he was.

Upon further direct examination the witness, James Jarrett, said that during the time he worked at the Hitchman mine as a member of the United Mine Workers, and during the time that the mine was under the jurisdiction and control of that organization, some of his earnings at the mine were turned over to the national organization, or these officials; that in the general plan of the United Mine Workers, as witness understood it when he was a member, the purpose of collecting money from the men by check-off and turning it into the organization, aside from the payment of the salaries of the officials was put into a general fund to pay miners' benefits when they were on a strike, and that those benefits are payable only when a strike is ordered by the officials, or where a strike has not been ordered, then where a strike having been brought about is approved by the officials; in a case where benefits are payable under that method witness would have been entitled to receive benefits, witness supposes, after two weeks; the Hitchman mine was idle from April 16th, 1906, to June 12th, 1906, when it started up without having anything to do with the United Mine Workers; witness got from the United Mine Workers during that period of time three dollars benefits; was not offered any more money than three dollars; was told there wasn't any more money to pay benefits with; witness at that time was a married man; witness always thought that the United Mine Workers organization was a right big body; it has locals throughout the United States in various localities; could not say as to the number; whether two or three hundred thousand men 452 belong to it, but there is a large number of members, up in the thousands. The witness was then asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. So they told you, then, that the money was all gone?

A. The man that paid me the three dollars' benefit told me that he could not pay any more benefits until there was some money collected in. As near as I recollect that is the statement he made to me.

Q. So the thing had gone dry?

A. It was a dry one.

Q. Did the defendant Rankin come down there during that time, that you recall?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What, if anything, did he do when he was there, that you saw or know?

A. Well, he came down there and demanded the local's charter and also the money that was in the hands of the treasurer of the local.

Q. Did you hold any official position with the United Mine Workers' local at the Hitchman mine at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean during the time immediately following the strike of April 16th, 1906?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did Mr. Rankin come to see you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What position did you hold?

A. Financial secretary.

Q. You were the financial secretary of the local union of the United Mine Workers of America at the Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Rankin came to see you at what time and under what circumstances, as nearly as you now recall?

Witness: Do you mean what time in the day?
Mr. Gilchrist: Yes.
A. Well, it was in the evening when I saw Mr. Rankin.
Q. Where did you see him?
A. I saw him just opposite the Hitchman mine there, on the pike.
Q. Did you approach him or did he approach you?
A. He approached me.
Q. Do you recall what he said?
A. Well, he stated his business down there and what he came after—the charter and the money that the local had there.
Q. What, if anything did you say to him?
A. I told him he could have the charter but he could not have the money.
Q. What did he say to that?
A. He said that the United Mine Workers had a perfect 453 right to take the money that the local had in their treasury at that time.
Q. Well, now, did the conversation stop just there?
A. He explained to me that if the money was turned over to the United Mine Workers that they would hold it, and if we decided to go back in the United Mine Workers at some future time that the money would be given back to that local; and I told him I thought we were capable of keeping our own money and that I did not think they were entitled to it,—that they did not pay it in there and, furthermore, that they were not entitled to it and I was not going to let him have it, and I didn't.
Q. Did he make any threats about what he would do if you did not turn over the money?
A. Well, no; not about the money; he didn't make any threats about it.
Q. Well, did he make any threats about anything else that you recall?
A. We had an argument and he got mad, but I do not know that he threatened anybody.
Q. In the summer of 1907 what was your business at the Hitchman mine? What were you employed at?
A. I was checkweighman.
Q. Do you remember of seeing William Green and Andrew Watkins and John Zelenka about the Hitchman mine in 1907?
A. I do not believe I remember seeing him there.
Q. Did you see a man by the name of Thomas Hughes about there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was that in the fall of 1907?
A. Yes, sir; as nearly as I recollect that was about the time.
Q. Did you have any talk with him?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know what he was there for?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was it?
A. To get the Hitchman miners back into the organization o the United Mine Workers.

Q. To organize the mine?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know whether he made any addresses to the miners?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you attend any of them?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you see him address any of the men?
A. Yes, sir; I saw him start to address a crowd of them.
Q. Was that at one of his called meetings?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What day of the week was it, as you remember now?
A. It was on a Sunday.
Q. Was it in the morning, in the afternoon or in the evening?
A. Well, it was in the evening or late in the afternoon.
Q. Did you stay to hear what he had to say?
A. No, sir.

454 Q. Did you see any notices of any kind posted up about the place during the time Thomas Hughes was about the Hitchman mine trying to organize it?

A. I do not remember that I did.
Q. If there were any you have forgotten it?
A. Yes, sir.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, James Jarrett, said that the Hitchman mine was first organized on a union basis in 1903—as nearly as witness recollects that was the time; there was a representative there from the United Mine Workers to install a local; he was not the one that witness spoke of in his direct examination as having gone away after the local was installed; the one that had gone away had been working in the mine; witness recalls who it was that represented the United Mine Workers' organization and came there to install the local, witness remembers him, it was John Stevenson; there was a joint convention or an annual convention of the miners at Indianapolis in January, 1906, every local in the country was supposed to be represented; witness's local was represented; witness was not one of the delegates; witness says that if he remembers correctly, his local's delegate in that convention on 1906 was James Conoway, there was just one of them; witness thinks that a majority of the miners in that convention declared for the scale of 1903—thinks that is what they demanded; as near as witness remembers the scale of 1903 was better for the miners than the scale that was adopted in 1904; there had been a reduction in 1904.

Witness was then asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. And that was called and named the equivalent scale, in 1904, and ran up to 1906? One was called the scale of 1903 and the other the equivalent scale, a name given to it by the miners?
A. I do not remember that.
Q. You do not recollect that?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, anyhow, in 1906 the operators refused to accept the scale of 1903 in Ohio, or in District 6, of which your local was a part?—the scale of 1903?

A. Yes, sir; I believe so.

Q. And that was the reason of the strike?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And pending the adoption of a scale the strike went on for some months in District 6, throughout Ohio, or do you know about that?

A. Well, I do not want to answer anything I am not positive about.

455 Q. What is your recollection on that subject, Mr. Jarrett?

A. As nearly as I recall, that was the contention.

Q. And if the operator signed the scale that the miners wanted restored, of 1903, he could operate; otherwise he could not. That is what I want to know.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, the men were willing—that is, the operators—to go on with the equivalent scale, as I understand it, and if the scale of 1903 was restored they would make up for the difference. Is that right?

A. I believe that it is.

Q. Now, when the question of your going on with the scale known as the equivalent scale came up, you got permission from Mr. Green, one of the officers, to get out enough coal to supply the engines?

A. Yes sir.

Q. And you continued on that scale until about the 16th of April?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, you say that about the 16th Mr. Zelenka came down?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk to Zelenka or not?

A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did he talk any in your presence, that you recall?

A. Well, I do not remember that he did.

Q. There was a meeting held at which the miners attended after he came down?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got there about the time the meeting closed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of course you cannot say what occurred in the meeting?

A. I cannot.

Q. Now, coming down to the matter of collecting money: You paid dues of twenty-five cents a month while a member of the United Mine Workers to the national organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then your assessments under the regular rule were one-half of one per cent. of your earnings?

A. That is correct as near as I recollect.

Q. The twenty-five cents was to be devoted to the keeping up of the organization and the one-half of one per cent. was for the benefit fund, was it not, under the national organization?

A. Yes, sir; that is my understanding.

Q. And you consented, of course, to the company taking this money from you out of your wages after you became a member of the organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were paid your money regularly by the company after the assessment and dues were deducted?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you had a fund that you provided yourselves
456 which belonged to the local, known as an accident fund, didn't you?

A. It was known as a funeral fund, is what I knew it by.

Q. Then didn't you have one known as an accident fund, also, so that if a person got hurt he would get something—a sick benefit?

A. I do not think there was a fund for that purpose.

Q. You do not think there was anything outside of the funeral fund?

A. That was what this check-off was made for—for the funeral fund.

Q. That was a matter that the local instituted on its own account?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that, of course, was not against the rules and regulations of the national organization, was it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nor against the constitution of District 6, or Sub-District 5?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you spoke about Rankin coming down there—Lee Rankin. Did you see him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was this conversation that you had with Lee Rankin, which you have detailed in your examination in chief, after you had quit the United Mine Workers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was probably when—in 1907?

A. Yes, sir. Well, no; I believe that was in 1906.

Q. If it was in 1906, about what time in 1906 would you say it was?

A. Well, I cannot give you the exact date of it but I can give you something near.

Q. Well, that will be sufficient.

A. It was sometime in the month of July.

Q. When he came there in July, 1906, you agreed to surrender the charter?

A. Yes, sir; so far as I was personally concerned myself.

Q. You were not averse to it?

A. No, sir.

Q. And the reason of that was that you had ceased to be a member of the United Mine Workers?

A. That was the reason.

Q. Now, he went away without the charter, did he, or did he get it?

A. I could not say.

Q. Had you or not yet organized the Independent organization when Lee Rankin came down?

A. We had not.

Q. How soon after he came did you organize it?

A. I do not know.

Q. According to the record which I have here, filed as "Albert Jarrett's Exhibit No. 1," you obtained your charter on June 25th, 1906. Is that right?

A. I do not know whether it is right or wrong.

457 Q. Please take the paper again and examine it.

(Witness is here handed the Secretary of State's report containing the charter as heretofore copied into this record.)

Witness: Take the paper again? I have never had the paper before.

Q. Well, just read that charter in that book. Is that the same charter that was obtained by J. W. Guthrie, James Hickman, Albert Jarrett and others, for the local at the Hitchman mine of which you are a member? Is that the same charter?

A. As near as I recollect it is.

Q. When did you see Thomas Hughes at the Hitchman mine? Was it after June 6th, 1906?

A. I cannot give you a definite answer as to that.

Q. What year was it in?

A. I am not certain as to that.

Q. Well, what do you think about it? What is your best recollection?

A. It was 1906 or 1907.

Q. I believe you stated that you did not talk with him?

A. That is what I stated.

Q. Did he talk any in your presence, or hearing, or not?

A. He never talked in my hearing.

Q. Then you did not hear him when he addressed the miners?

A. I did not.

Q. Of your own personal knowledge you do not know, then, what he came to the Hitchman mine for?

Witness: Of my own personal knowledge?

Mr. Hogg: Yes, if you neither talked with him nor heard him talk.

A. Well, of my personal knowledge I do not know; no.

Q. Now, was this the first time—the time of seeing Thomas Hughes—after you started to run non-union at the Hitchman—I mean that is the time that he addressed the miners and that you did not talk to him or hear him personally?

A. I do not know whether it was the first time I saw him or not; I saw him at different times; I do not remember whether that was the first time or the second.

Q. The first time where did you see him? Where was he with reference to the mine? Was it on this Sunday that you saw him?

A. No, sir; I saw him before that.

Q. Did you or did you not say there was any one with him when you saw him?

458 Witness: Any one with him?

Mr. Hogg: Yes; any person with him when you saw him?

A. Yes, sir; there were generally persons with him each time that I saw him, and I saw him on different occasions talking to the miners around there.

Q. Well, I mean any persons from a distance—strangers to the operators?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then he was really by himself when he came to the mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you are employed now at the Hitchman mine, are you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What work are you engaged at there now?

A. Checkweighman.

Q. How long have you been checkweighman there?

A. About one month.

Q. Are you still operating and holding meetings under the charter obtained from the Secretary of State of this State?

A. No, sir.

Q. How many times did your local meet under that charter?

A. I do not remember.

Q. When did you discontinue your meetings under that charter?

A. I could not say.

Q. As much as a year or so ago?

A. I do not remember.

Q. You have no recollection as to the time, then, when you quit?

A. I have not.

Q. Do you recollect who was the last president of your local there under the charter?

A. I do not believe that I do.

Q. Were you acquainted with J. W. Guthrie in 1906?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him with Hughes or not?

A. I did not.

Q. Were you acquainted with James Hickman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is Albert Jarrett a relative of yours?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What relation is he to you?

A. He is a brother.

Q. Are you acquainted with Pete Bartoni?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or B. C. Rowand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, did you notice these men that I have mentioned assisting Hughes in any way, or going around with him?

A. I did not.

Q. Nor you did not?

A. No, sir; I did not.

(End of cross examination.)

459 J. C. McKINLEY (recalled).

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness, J. C. McKinley, recalled, said that he has a copy of the present scale, has it here among some papers and can get it—witness produces paper; witness testified on a former day in this case; witness is handed a small book which has on the title page, "Official Mining Scale of Association of Pittsburg Vein Operators, for their mines in Belmont, Harrison and Jefferson counties, Ohio, and the United Mine Workers of America. Adopted May 19, 1910. In effect April 1, 1910, and ending March 31, 1912," and is asked to state what it is, if he knows, and where he got it, and replied that it is the official mining scale made by the Association of Pittsburg Vein Operators, of eastern Ohio, and the United Mine Workers, to govern the mining of coal in eastern Ohio, for the period of time from April 1, 1910, to March 31, 1912; witness got that book from the secretary of the Pittsburg Vein Operators' Association; that scale is now in use in mines in Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers; the coal at the present time for run of mine under this scale is five-sevenths; five-sevenths is the correct proportion, not seven-ninths; the scale price for run of mine under this scale is five-sevenths of ninety-five cents, or 67.85; with relation to past time the same has been in operation since April 1, 1910; witness says the five-sevenths has been the proportion for a great many years; witness would say that it was in effect in 1903, and that that proportion of five-sevenths has been in effect continuously from 1903 down to the present time—it has been in effect continuously during that time in eastern Ohio—by that witness means in Sub-District 5 of District 6, and that includes under the United Mine Workers' organization the northern Panhandle of West Virginia; witness says that five-sevenths has been the fraction in application by the United Mine Workers since 1903, and before; since 1902.

At this point the following took place:

Mr. Gilchrist: I now offer in evidence this official mining scale for the two years indicated on its face—April 1, 1910, to March 31, 1912,—to be marked "McKinley's Exhibit No. 9."

Mr. Hogg: We object to it for reasons to be given upon the final hearing.

460 Upon further direct examination the witness, McKinley, recalled, said that his business is that of a coal operator; has been engaged in the business since 1899; has resided mostly during that time from 1899 to the present time in Wheeling, West Virginia.

At this point witness was asked the following question: "Where, mostly, have you been interested in mining operations?" and replied: "Our first mining operations were on the West Virginia side, in the northern Panhandle, but our main operations were in eastern Ohio, in Belmont county."

Upon further direct examination the witness, McKinley, recalled, said that he was interested in three mines in the northern Panhandle of West Virginia, one of them the Wheeling Steam Coal Company was located in East Wheeling and was a small mine practically in the city limits—this mine was worked out and abandoned in about 1905 or 1907, witness thinks; another of the three mines was the Mound Coal Company located at Moundsville, West Virginia, on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad on a switch from the B. & O. main line —which mine witness is still operating—it is not being run under the jurisdiction and control of the United Mine Workers of America; it has not been run under their jurisdiction and control since about 1908, witness believes; the third of the three mines in the Panhandle district that witness was connected with is the Richland mine which is located just north of Wheeling about three miles—witness is still operating that mine; it is not operated under the jurisdiction and control of the United Mine Workers of America; it has not been operated under that organization since 1906; in Belmont county, Ohio, witness was interested in the Franklin, of the Raven Coal Company; the Delora mine and the Eleanor mine, of the Highland Coal Company; and the Kelley mine of the Shannon Coal Company; the Franklin mine is seven miles west of Bellaire, Ohio, on the main line division of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad; the Delora mine is nine miles west of Bellaire on the main line division of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad; the Eleanor mine is ten miles west of Bellaire on the same road, and the Kelley mine is about twelve miles north of Martins Ferry on the Pennsylvania line; the first three named mines in Ohio are on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad west of Bellaire and within a distance of ten or twelve miles, and the Kelley mine is north of Martins Ferry in Jefferson county, Ohio; so witness was interested in one mine in Jefferson county, Ohio, and in three mines in Belmont county, Ohio; witness cannot say when the Franklin mine was 461 opened; he and those interested with him purchased it the latter part of the year 1905; the Delora mine was opened about 1903, and witness and those associated with him purchased it about the middle of 1905; the Eleanor mine was started in 1903 or 1904, and we continued operation in 1907, witness believes; witness does not know when the Kelley mine was opened; he and those associated with him purchased it in 1907; so between the years 1905 and 1907—both years, inclusive—witness acquired these four mines or interests in these four mines, which were already developed mines either in whole or in part; no one of these four was a mine which witness opened up from its inception.

At this point the following questions were asked, answers given and proceeding had:

Q. As to the Franklin mine; how did you operate that mine? Was it done under the jurisdiction and control of the United Mine Workers?

A. It was; decidedly so.

Mr. Hogg: We object to the operation of outside mines by the Mine Workers. It has nothing to do with this case. If you go into that, they can show that thousands are doing it.

The Court: I cannot yet quite understand the connection with the theory of the plaintiff, but I will allow the evidence to go in subject to being ruled out if proper connection is not shown. I will admit the evidence subject to being ruled out hereafter.

(Exception by counsel for served defendants.)

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Now, going to the Delora mine: Was that run under the jurisdiction and control of that same organization?

A. It was run under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers.

Q. Now, the Kelley mine: How was that run?

A. The same.

Q. Are you interested now in the Franklin mine?

A. We own the property.

Q. Do you now operate it?

A. No, sir; we have leased it.

Q. Are you now interested in the Delora mine?

A. No, sir; we have sold that property.

Q. Are you now interested in the Eleanor mine?

A. No, sir; we have sold that also.

462 Q. Are you now interested in the Kelley mine?

A. We own the property but it is being operated under lease.

Q. With the interests such as you have described you had in these different mines, did you have much occasion to become acquainted with these men who were the officers in active charge of the United Mine Workers of America?

Mr. Hogg: What do you mean by "these officers?"—these defendants?

Mr. Gilchrist: I will make it the defendants.

Mr. Hogg: Well, I object to that question.

The Court: It will depend upon whether or not the question leads up to further disclosure that these men were defendants, or any of them. I will overrule the objection and the witness can answer the question.

(Exception by counsel for served defendants.)

A. I did.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Who were the men in charge at the time you were speaking of, that you became acquainted with?

A. From Mr. John Mitchell, national president, clear down to the local secretaries at the mine.

Q. During the course of your dealings with the officers of the United Mine Workers, you dealt with some who are not now in office as officers of the United Mine Workers, I suppose, didn't you?

A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. Can you name some of those?

A. Mr. John Mitchell, of course; Mr. T. L. Lewis is still in office and will be until the first of April; and I think all of the others are still connected with the organization, that I can think of at the present time at least.

Q. Did you ever have any dealings with T. L. Lewis, the defendant?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. With William Green?
A. Yes, sir; frequently.
Q. With Andrew Watkins?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. With John Zelenka?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You know him, do you?
A. Very well.
Q. Is he here?
A. He is, indeed.
Q. With Mr. Rankin, the defendant?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. With Mr. Sullivan?
A. Yes, sir.

463 Q. You know him, do you?
A. He was the first United Mine Worker officer that we ever dealt with.
Q. He is here, is he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know George W. Savage?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long, approximately, do you think you have known and dealt with the defendants, Lewis, Green, Sullivan, Watkins, Rankin, Savage and Zelenka?
A. I have known Mr. Sullivan about ten or eleven years; Mr. Lewis and Mitchell and Green and Watkins and some of the others mentioned I have known from five to eight years.
Q. And as an operator of coal mines in the eastern Ohio district, and in the Panhandle District of West Virginia—all known as being within Sub-District 5 of District 6—have you had off and on with what frequency, business dealings with these men I have last asked you about?
A. Beginning with 1901 we have had, you might say, continuous dealings with these defendants, as we were operating union mines, and coming in contact with them from time to time.
Q. The United Mine Workers of America is a body national in character, is it not?
A. It is.
Q. Can you briefly tell me the system of its organization, subdivisions, &c.?
A. It has a national organization which covers all of the United States and a part of Canada. I believe they have at times used the term "International Organization." This organization is then subdivided into a large number of districts. A district sometimes comprises a state and sometimes it comprises a part of a state. The national organization has its president, vice-president, secretary and executive board, and the district organization has very much the same organization, and the district organization is further sub-divided into sub-district organizations, each with their various corps of officers, and the sub-district organization is divided into "locals"— one mine to a local, or sometimes, in case of small mines, two will join together and form one local. The locals have their president, their secretary and their executive committee, or mine committee, as they term it. Each one of these bodies, from the international down to the local, has the power to levy assessments.

Q. And the up-keep of the national organization is managed how?

A. That is by assessments on the members.

Q. And by dues?

A. Dues and assessments. By assessments I meant dues and assessments.

Q. Now, in the method of operation of the organizations, do they have conventions?

A. They do.

464 Q. National conventions?

A. National conventions; yes, sir.

Q. District conventions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sub-District conventions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at these national conventions the question of a scale of wages is discussed, is it?

A. It is.

Q. And so far as the United Mine Workers are concerned, as a national body, at such national conventions the scale is fixed?

A. Yes, sir. A little explanation, possibly, is due here; a scale is fixed for three or four states, which is used as the base for the entire national organization.

Q. Now, the coal mining industry is an extensive one in the United States, is it?

A. One or the largest.

Q. Are you acquainted with the general distribution of the bituminous coal fields throughout the United States?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Generally speaking where are those veins of coal located?

A. In central Pennsylvania, western Pennsylvania, almost all over West Virginia, in the eastern half of Ohio, in Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Arkansas, Kansas, and some in Texas and Colorado and some in Utah.

Q. Now, in these parts of the United States where the bituminous coal is found, is it mined as a general proposition?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To a greater or less extent?

A. To a greater or less extent; yes, sir.

Q. And all these districts which you have spoken of, of the United Mine Workers, are districts that coincide, to a certain extent, either with the state lines or with some geographical or geological boundary?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the sub-districts are then within the boundary of the district?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know about the magnitude of the United Mine Workers as a body, throughout the United States?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what is its membership?

A. About 300,000.

Q. Do you know in a general way where the bulk of the membership is?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state where it is, as you now recall?

A. The majority of their membership is in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and Iowa has quite a large membership.

Q. How about the southern states, in the United States, such as West Virginia and Alabama?

A. Well, I forgot Alabama in mentioning the states which 465 have large coal production. West Virginia and Alabama are the only two states with any very large production of coal which are working non-union.

Q. By "non-union" what do you mean?

A. I mean that they are not under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America, or an affiliated organization.

Q. The term "union" has been used a great deal and is a matter of common knowledge to every body connected with the coal business. That term is intended to convey what idea, so far as you understand it?

A. The term "union" when applied to mining, means the United Mine Workers, and a union mine is a mine that is under their jurisdiction and so recognized.

Q. And the contrary is to be understood as to the meaning of non-union, is it?

A. Non-union or open shop; it is termed both ways.

Q. So that the term "union" is in a sense an arrogation by the United Mine Workers as descriptive of their organization, and the word "non-union" is a term in a sense descriptive of contempt on their part as applied to a man who is not connected with their organization. Is that the accepted term and meaning of these two words?

A. Yes, sir; they term a union mine as one over which they have absolute control, and a non-union mine as one which is worked open shop, or in which the United Mine Workers are not recognized.

Q. The United Mine Workers, as a body, is a part of the American Federation of Labor, is it not?

A. I believe so; yes, sir.

Q. And the largest single labor organization connected with the American Federation of Labor, in voting power?

A. I cannot say as to that.

Q. It may be so?

A. It may be so.

Q. In the sections of country throughout the United States where coal is mined there are operators who operate union and other operators who operate non-union. Is that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the general situation in regard to the mines that are operated in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and the major portion of the coal producing area of Pennsylvania, as to being run under the jurisdiction and control of the United Mine Workers of America?

A. It is the boast of the United Mine Workers—and I almost believe it to be a fact—that the entire coal industry in the states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, is operated closed shop, and unless a man belongs to the United Mine Workers he will not hold a job in 466 or about those mines. The situation in Pennsylvania is somewhat different, as only a part of Pennsylvania is under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers.

Q. Are you in position to answer as to Iowa?

A. The greater part of Iowa, if not all, is under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers.

Q. And Kansas?

A. The same is true in Kansas.

Q. And Arkansas.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Texas?

A. I cannot say as to Texas.

Q. How about Kentucky?

A. Kentucky is divided.

Q. And Tennessee?

A. Tennessee is divided.

Q. And West Virginia?

A. West Virginia is almost entirely non-union with the exception of one small district.

Q. Where?

A. The Kanawha field.

Q. Alabama?

A. Alabama is, I believe, entirely non-union.

Q. Has it at any time been union?

A. A great part of it was union at one time.

Q. About how long ago?

A. About three or four years ago.

Q. Now, in these sections of the United States where operations are conducted union, what is the method of dealing between the operators and the United Mine Workers? You have stated that the United Mine Workers in a state or in a part of a state are designated as a district of the United Mine Workers, and then sub-divided into sub-districts; they therefore are in position to deal as a body; is there any parallel condition or corresponding condition in those states, where the United Mine Workers control operations, between or amongst the operators themselves?

A. There is no national organization of operators. There are some more or less effective organizations in some states, and in some sub-districts there are effective working organizations of operators.

Q. On this subject what is the condition in Ohio?

A. There is a kind of state organization of operators which does not amount to much. The Hocking Valley operators, I believe, have more or less of an organization, but the eastern Ohio operators—operating in the Pittsburg seam of eastern Ohio—have a very fine organization.

Q. What is the organization called?

A. The Pittsburg Vein Operators Association of Eastern Ohio, I believe is the full title.

Q. You have mentioned the Pittsburg vein or No. 8. What, in a general way, do you mean by that?

A. That is that part of the great Pittsburg vein of coal that 467 extends into and overlies three or four counties, comprising the southeastern part of Ohio. In Ohio it is known in geological circles as the No. 8 vein.

Q. Does that vein of coal extend into any part of the northern Panhandle of West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the vein of coal that is generally mined in the northern Panhandle of West Virginia?

A. It is.

Q. Is there any other vein of coal mined there extensively, to your knowledge?

A. Not extensively. There are one or two small mines. There is one at New Cumberland, West Virginia, in No. 7 vein, and there is one mine that is being operated in the No. 6 vein in the northern Panhandle of West Virginia.

Q. And where is that?

A. That is opposite Steubenville.

Q. The vein of coal, then, that is operated at the Richland mine, at the Mound mine, at the Glendale mine and at the Hitchman mine is the same vein of coal that is operated in eastern Ohio?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you to say with respect to the operating conditions of those mines on the two sides of the river in the same vein?

A. They are practically the same. Both have practically the same physical conditions to contend with on both sides of the river.

Q. Do you know whether it is due to the existence of that identity of vein, and conditions in the coal vein, that the northern Panhandle of West Virginia figures under the United Mine Workers of America as a part of Sub-District 5 of District 6, which is geographically otherwise confined to the state of Ohio?

A. Sub-District 5 covers the northern Panhandle of West Virginia because the mining conditions, they say, are identical with those of eastern Ohio.

Q. During the time that you were operating mines in eastern Ohio did you or did you not have any connection with the Pittsburg Vein Operators Association?

A. I was a member of that association for many years.

Q. Were you ever an officer of that association?

A. Yes, sir; I was vice-president of that association.

Q. For how long?

A. Oh, four or five years; I do not remember exactly but it was quite a number of years.

Q. Did that organization have an office in Wheeling?
A. It did.
Q. Where?
A. In the Schmulbach building—in the same building in which my office is located.
468 Q. And on the same floor?
A. On the same floor, part of the time.
Q. And near by it, or not?
A. Right around the corner.
Q. You mean around the hallway?
A. Yes, sir; right around the hallway.
Q. The Schmulbach building is an office building is it?
A. It is an office building in Wheeling, West Virginia.
Q. Is it a large building?
A. Twelve stories.

Q. You have stated that these national conventions of the United Mine Workers, so far as they could do so, determined upon a scale of wages to be paid in mining, throughout the United States, based upon a scale which they would fix as binding in a certain locality, and which would serve as a basis, or gauge, to govern the others. Now, you have also stated that there were in different sections of the country where coal is mined under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers, operators' associations. Did these operators' associations, or did they and the individual operators have conventions or not?

A. The method of procedure was this: The United Mine Workers would call a national convention, usually to meet at Indianapolis. They would remain in session sometimes two or three weeks; but usually about two weeks after their call, a call was issued for the operators of western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to meet at the same place that the miners were meeting and at a date usually about between ten and fifteen days after the date which the miners had set for their convention, and the operators—each individual operator in this section—was invited to attend this conference. They usually went there—probably five or six hundred operators; sometimes that many and sometimes only three or four hundred—and each state would form—if they didn't have a state organization—they would form a temporary organization and they would meet separately and they would meet together and then they would meet jointly with the United Mine Workers in negotiating what they termed a scale of wages.

Q. Did you ever attend any of these conventions?
A. A great many of them, sir.

Q. Conventions of the operators alone and then conventions where the operators in convention were meeting with the United Mine Workers nationally in convention?

A. Yes, sir, both; and also on one or two occasions I have attended the miners' national convention as a visitor. As their conventions are open, I have gone in and listened to their conventions held by themselves.

469 Q. Do you now recall what national conventions of the United Mine Workers' organization you attended where you were in attendance as a coal operator?

A. I have attended each convention as an operator, with possibly one exception, since 1902.

Mr. Hogg:

Q. Do you mean each one of the United Mine Workers' conventions?

A. No, sir; each one of the joint conventions and the conventions of operators.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. What has been your experience with respect to the conventions held in districts or sub-districts between the operators—either in convention as an association or as individuals—and the United Mine Workers in convention as districts or in convention as sub-districts?

A. For several years I have attended all of the sub-district conventions which formulated the scale of wages to govern in the Pittsburg vein of eastern Ohio.

Q. As a result of your observation and experience as an operator, in attendance upon these joint conventions—national, district, or sub-district—have or have you not acquired a knowledge of the principles of the Uninted Mine Workers and their methods and practices?

A. Through attending these conventions and my acquaintance with the officials I have a pretty thorough knowledge of this organization and its methods.

Q. It is a matter of common knowledge, with which I suppose you are thoroughly familiar, that there are what are termed "unions" or "labor organizations" in the various craft?

A. Yes, sir; I know that to be the case.

Q. I believe you said that you had been in the coal operating business since 1898 or 1899?

A. Since 1899, I believe.

Q. About a mine there are a good many different kinds of men employed. I mean men who belong, technically, to different crafts, —at least to more than one?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For instance, there are carpenters, are there, about a mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They would belong to the carpenters' union would they, naturally?

A. Ordinarily yes.

Q. And there would be electricians, possibly?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And machinists?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And engineers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And firemen?

A. Yes, sir.

470 Q. Do you know of any others?

A. Blacksmiths.

Q. Now, those men belonging to those trades, are they or are they not required to sever their connection with the particular trades' union they belong to, indicative of their employment, and if they are employed about a mine where the United Mine Workers control it, are they permitted to remain in their own organization or are they required to join the United Mine Workers?

A. I do not think they are allowed to stay in their own organization; but the carpenters and blacksmiths, at least, are compelled to join the United Mine Workers' association. The United Mine Workers have claimed the right of jurisdiction over the firemen and engineers and electricians; but I believe the operators have—in fact, I know that the operators have retained control of the firemen and engineers, but I do not know as to the electricians, and could not say as to them.

Q. What is the condition on that subject in Sub-District 5 of District 6?

A. Up until September 1st, 1903, the United Mine Workers, although they had claimed it, were never given any jurisdiction over the firemen and engineers; but during the fall of 1903 the question was raised vigorously by the United Mine Workers. The late Senator Hanna was in politics at that time, and quite influential in this coal district, and he got the operators to concede the control of the firemen and engineers, to a certain extent, to the United Mine Workers. After Senator Hanna's death the operators refused to allow the Mine Workers control of the firemen and engineers and put the status of those two classes of labor back where it was before September 1st, 1903.

Q. As a result of your observations and experience in these conventions, and hearing the discussions pro and con between the persons attending them as delegates and participating in the conventions, do you know why the United Mine Workers aim to make a man leave his own union, indicative of his employment, and join the United Mine Workers, which is a body that otherwise is not indicative of his employment?

A. Their contention is that they must control all men employed in and about the mines.

Q. In the "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 3" on page 10, section 3, of article 1, I find this language: "All men are eligible and must be members of the U. M. W. of A. who work in and around the mines." Is that your understanding of the purpose of that organization as arrived at from your experience in these conventions, supported by your observations and the constitutional provi-

471 sions I have just shown you?

A. Yes, sir; that is their aim and they strive for that continually.

Q. Are they a conciliatory or an aggressive body in the carrying out of their purposes as indicated by that constitutional provision?

A. They are certainly very aggressive and perhaps, at times, conciliatory, if by conciliatory you mean persuasive.

Q. If they are an aggressive body how are their doctrines propagated, in the main, and how are their operations extended over territory otherwise not subject to their jurisdiction and control?

A. They have several methods of extending their jurisdiction.

Q. What are they?

A. I think probably their first method is to ask the operator to compel his men to join the union. If the employer refuses, they go about organizing his mine in several ways. One way is to go openly to the men and ask them to join the union. If this is not practicable, or if the operator refuses to allow persons to go upon the ground, they will send what they term "organizers" to work secretly with the men. These men may go singly or they may go in numbers; and these organizers may go there and even work for the operator as employes. Some of their officials have told me—(Interrupted).

Mr. Hogg: Stop a moment: If it was one of the defendants, we would like to know it so we can see whether this is subject to exception or not. Don't give declarations unless it was from one of the defendants.

The Court: I do not know about that. They are speaking now, generally, of the operations of this association as an association, to show its methods and plans. This evidence may apply to another theory of the case that will be admissible generally to show these methods, and that knowledge might come from any of their officials or heads. Mr. McKinley may state to whom he refers.

Mr. Hogg: How does he know or we know that they are members of the association unless we have the names of these men to show? We are certainly not trying this case in the dark? They may not be members. He may think they are members and may testify in the utmost good faith, but they may not be. They may be actually enemies of the organization and pretending that they are 472 friendly, and he ought not to be allowed to speak of them unless he remembers them.

The Court: If he remembers them he can name them.

Witness (continuing): I had a very close acquaintanceship with Mr. Patrick McBryde, who was at one time their national secretary-treasurer, or something of that kind, I believe; and I think he was in charge of the organization of West Virginia at one time, or at least he did a great deal of work down here. He explained their methods to me—of course, as an individual; it was just between us. I afterwards tested this out by asking other United Mine Workers about it—just incidentally made use of my knowledge—and I found the information he had given me was true and correct. He told me of these methods of organizing; and of course the question of their sending in organizers is a matter of common knowledge with every operator, and we know that they spend thousands of dollars each year for that purpose; but the method of organizing that they tried in West Virginia and which they claimed was the only method that would ever succeed, was the blocks of four system.

That is, they have an organizer to go in and get four men to join the organization. He would be the only one who would know those four, and those four would only know four others—each one of the four. They work the endless chain system on it. And he said that was the only way West Virginia ever could be organized, because then one man can never give away to the company more than four others, and thereby have them discharged. That and the sending in of organizers to work in a mine, I think are their principal methods—that is, to send organizers into a mine to get employment there and gradually work up dissension amongst the rest of the employes.

Q. You have spoken of the method of going to the operator first; then, in case of declination, of sending an organizer to work openly, and then, on a failure of that, of sending in an organizer, or more than one, to work in the mine unknown to the operator. If men were sent into the mine to work under this last method is it your understanding that they would be, at the same time, in the pay of the organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So they would be in effect paid spies upon the operator?

A. They would; and not only spies but active agents of the organization.

Q. Now, supposing all of these methods should have been tried, or supposing none of them have been tried, did they have a 473 method of sending in any number of men to work who were members of their oganization and enough to leaven the whole lot?

A. They did; and not only that, but they would send these men in the mine to work and neither the other employes or the employer would know that they were direct agents of the United Mine Workers. And also there is another method that they use at times, and that is, getting a great many men together, and getting a band, and going to a mine and compelling them to join the organization.

Q. They get what?

A. A band of music and march and countermarch.

Q. Of course, that last method you have spoken of would be one that the operator would soon be apprised of?

A. Yes, sir; that is rather open warfare.

Q. The method of sending in a number of men to work secretly is more of an under-hand or under-ground method, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as a general proposition, supposing the organization to have adopted the method you described just prior to speaking of the band, what is usually the operator's first intimation of the situation?

A. When there is enough of these men to close down a mine, or cripple it so that the operation is practically suspended, is his first intimation, as a general thing, that this work has been going on.

Q. That is, he is told he must unionize or if he don't he will be shut down?

A. Either that or sometimes he is shut down before he is told; but usually he is told first that he must unionize, and then if he does not, they shut him down.

Q. This other method would be very unfair warfare, would it not—to shut a man down without telling him?

A. Well, some of us don't think it is fair to shut him down after telling him.

Q. It would be unfair in a fair organization, would it not?

A. Yes, sir; I think it would.

Q. And a man who don't work under the jurisdiction and control of the United Mine Workers is unfair, is he not?

A. Yes, sir; from their standpoint.

Q. That is, that is their claim?

A. That is their claim; yes, sir.

Q. So that a union man is a fair man and non-union man is an unfair man?

A. Either non-union or open shop is looked upon as unfair by the United Mine Workers.

The Court:

Q. What do you mean by that, Mr. McKinley? Unfair how?

A. Well, "unfair" is just putting in a polite word that 474 they call a "scab" or "black sheep."

Q. Do they deny a man's right to labor?

A. They deny his right to labor independently of the United Mine Workers for they cannot control him.

Q. Is it any mark of disgrace in their eye, not to belong to the organization?

A. Yes, sir; any man that is connected with the mining industry they feel that he is rather disgraced if he don't belong to the United Mine Workers.

Q. Do they deny him the right to work at a mine where they have a union?

A. They do; and not only that, but further, I believe that their constitution, or at least their by-laws, provide that if a man comes into West Virginia, say from Ohio and works, and ever goes back into Ohio, he is to be fined twenty-five or fifty dollars.

Q. For what?

A. For working in West Virginia. Before he can go back to work in Ohio, or work in Ohio, he is fined; and not only that, but they expect the operator to take that fine off the man before they let him work.

Q. Take it out of his wages?

A. Take it out of his wages; yes, sir.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Along this line of thought, do the United Mine Workers, of your knowledge, have a card system?

A. They have.

Q. I wish you would explain that.

A. When a man joins the United Mine Workers he is given a card—a membership card—that has on it a number and his name and address, where he joined and some other details. That card is not transferable and revokable. If a man is known to disobey the rules of the organization they revoke that card. In many instances I have seen—or in some instances, rather, I have seen in their official journal an advertisement stating that so and so, holding card — and so, and I think in one or two instances—I will not be certain how many—that he worked in Alabama or he has worked in West Virginia; is not a good union man; look out for him. That is published broadcast over the states and the journal is supposed to be taken by all the United Mine Workers in the organization. That is one system of their cards. Another thing is that if their cards are issued, and in good standing, and a mine goes on a strike, I have known them to endorse on those cards, "Please accept this man as this mine is out on a strike," and some such notation as this: "Send him to another mine where the United Mine Workers' secretary will assist in getting him a job." If you want further information about these cards, I will say that we had an occa-475 sion come up one time where the charter was taken away from the men because they violated the national, state and district officials' orders, and before that charter was taken away, the secretary called in a lot of the fellows and says: "Here, let me endorse your cards before the charter goes away as they are going to make you non-union because you disobeyed their orders. Now, I will fix your card up so you can get a position any place." I saw some of these cards fixed up that way.

The Court:

Q. Right in that connection Mr. Gilchrist read from the constitution that all men were eligible?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do they reserve the right to expel their membership and then boycott them in the way you speak of?

A. Yes, sir; they do, indeed; and they have a system of requiring initiation which acts as a fine, as well as levying direct fines themselves.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. As a result of this system of the cards is it the aim, as you understand it, of the organization to have absolute track of every man who joins the organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether, in actual practice, the organization purports to be able to supply labor if an operator contracts with the union officials to run his mine union?

A. No, sir; they do not.

Q. Do they purport to control the men that the operator may employ?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that if an operator were not running under the United Mine Workers of America, the practical result of unionizing his mine would be that his men would become subject to the control and direction of the United — Workers upon signing the scale with the union, and he would, through the check-off, be obliged to put up money in the hands of these same officials to keep the national organization going?

A. The effect would be that after the mine was organized no man could go to work for him unless he produced a card issued by the United Mine Workers, or paid or agreed to pay their initiation fee of ten dollars, or whatever it might be. That works an extra hardship. At times the local union will make a rule arbitrarily stating that no man can go into a mine unless he has a card or pays ten dollars initiation in advance. I have seen three hundred men stop work because twenty new men did not have two hundred 476 dollars to put up before they could enter the mine.

The Court:

Q. You say they are a secret organization. Do they charge an initiation fee?

A. Yes, sir; and the company must take it upon themselves to guarantee this ten dollars or the mine cannot resume work, and they will send these men away.

Q. Suppose a man does not work out the ten dollars?

A. Then the company loses it. I have known that to be the case in our own practical experience.

Q. On signing the scale with the United Mine Workers' officials, I understand you, then, that the net result is not that the officials guarantee the employer labor, but he has still to gather his labor from the labor market, restricted, however, to those who have union cards.

A. Union cards or willing to pay the initiation fee to join the United Mine Workers.

Q. That is, that they must either have union cards or they must be willing to deposit ten dollars and join the union?

A. Ten dollars; and I believe in some cases they have made that as high as fifty dollars.

Q. Is that arbitrarily done, or how?

A. It is done by the conventions and governing bodies of the organization.

Q. Do the United Mine Workers as an organization exercise any sort of control over the operators of a mine where the mine is run what is called "union"?

A. They do, indeed.

Q. How?

A. If a man is discharged and he has the friendship which amounts to the backing of his "local," I might say, practically without any fear of contradiction, that it is an impossibility to discharge that man for practically any offense that he may commit.

Q. Suppose he be worthless and not half a man, do they insist on retaining him?

A. Certainly, sir, certainly. He is a man and they insist on it. I will give you an instance of this, if the court please, from our own personal experience, and I give it because it was backed up by the entire state officials of the United Mine Workers. Two men were discharged for a flagrant violation of the mine law, endangering their own lives and the lives of the men in the mine. There was absolutely no question about it. The next day or the day following the officials of the organization came to the mine and said that those men must be re-instated; that they should not be discharged. They were told that the men had been warned time after time that they must obey the law and they paid absolutely no attention to it 477 whatever. The organization shut the mine down, throwing between two and three hundred men idle.

The Court:

Q. On account of the discharge of those men?

A. On account of the discharge of those two men—discharged for violating the law. The company then, in order to put themselves right, went before a justice of the peace and had the men arrested for violating the law. The justice bound them over to the common pleas court, I believe it is called, in Ohio. The local organization, on the instruction of the state president, went on their bond for three hundred dollars apiece, and the mine remained idle because those two men were not allowed to resume work.

Q. You say the mine was allowed to remain idle. Do you mean they called all their union men out of the mine?

A. They did; indeed.

Q. And would not let them work?

A. And would not let them work.

Q. Because of the discharge of those two men who were breaking the law?

A. Yes, sir. The operators' association then took it up and appointed a committee and the miners appointed a committee to investigate it. The case was submitted to those six men and without a shadow of doubt the men were found guilty. The operator's representatives signed the report but the miners' representatives said, "No; we won't sign it, because it will be used against them at the trial." The mine continued idle and finally, after three weeks of idleness, or such a matter—in a very busy season when we needed the coal—a compromise was effected whereby the men—we were to use our influence and have the jail sentence remitted and the men were to go back to work. In other words, we surrendered to the organization and asked the court to remit the jail sentence, and they pleaded guilty and the miners' organization paid all the costs in the case before the court, and we had to take the men back.

Mr. Gilchirst:

Q. At what mine was that?

A. That was at the Delora mine of the Highland Coal Company.

Q. And that mine is situated in Belmont county, Ohio, in a section where you say the United Mine Workers are supreme in their authority?

A. Yes, sir; they are.

Q. And they proved supreme in that instance, did they?

A. They did.

Q. You mentioned that they regulated the question of working overtime. What regulation have they on that subject?

78 A. They will not allow a man to work overtime, they state, except in case of emergency, but they are the judge and the ury. If a man works overtime, whereby he may save the company oney or make the company money—(interrupted).

The Court:

Q. What do you mean by "overtime?" Doesn't a man have the ght to work as long as he wants to?

A. No, sir; only eight hours per day.

Q. That is fixed by the statute in Ohio?

A. No, sir; by the United Mine Workers.

Q. What right have they to fix it?

A. The right of might; and if a man works more than forty-eight ours a week he must lay off, although he may be a man in a responsible position, such as handling coal, handling out coal with a otor and a great many other men depending upon his labor; yet f he has worked forty-eight hours two hours before quitting time on aturday, he must stop; he cannot continue those other two hours. f he does he is fined from two and a half dollars to five dollars, and hey turn that fine into the office to be charged against his wages and urned over to the secretary of the organization.

Mr. Gilchirst:

Q. In the "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 3," which ontains the constitution of the United Mine Workers of Amerca, Sub-District 5 of District 6, I find on page 15, article 9, ection 2, this language: "That a fine of ten dollars in each case, here it can be proven that a member of our union leaves his district or West Virginia, or any other unfair mine, and remains one month r more without depositing a transfer card, and returns without givng a satisfactory account of why he has not deposited his transfer ard; and a fine to be collected by the local union where he is workng." You spoke awhile ago of their fining men for working at an nfair mine, or in West Virginia. Is that done under a provision of he constitution similar to this?

A. Yes, sir; I think that is the provision of the constitution under vhich they fine them, or a similar one.

Q. I notice that this says: "without giving satisfactory account of vhy he has not deposited his transfer card." That means satisfactory to the officials, does it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are the judge and the arbiters?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in the same pamphlet—"Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 3,"—on page 15, article 9, section 3, I find this language:

479 "Any member of our organization working in or around a mine, working on idle days, or extra time, in violation of our constitution or agreements, shall be fined $2.50 for each offense." You spoke a moment ago about the men being restricted and not allowed to work overtime although the management of the mines might very greatly need their services outside of the hours fixed by the United Mine Workers. In instances of that kind was such action taken pursuant to some such provision of the constitution as this?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I notice it says "working on idle days." What do you understand by that?

A. That means on a day when there are no railroad cars that an operator cannot have any of his men go in and load coal, or prepare coal, no matter how badly he may need it the next day; or to load railroad cars; no one is allowed to work on what they term "idle days."

Q. To illustrate: Suppose I were engaged in operating a coal mine and had an order for coal to be shipped and delivered by a stipulated time. Suppose, also, the time was close and there was a shortage of cars on a given day; but suppose, further, that I had ample men employed and had ample mine cars, sufficient for filling and speedily loading the order that I might want to fill the next day in order to get the coal to its destination at the time fixed for delivery—time being the essence of the contract in the sale of the coal; and then suppose, further, that on the day upon which I expected to have that shipment made, and a train to haul the loaded cars left in the evening, no railroad cars were furnished to me, and as a consequence, if the mine had no other business—and assuming that it hadn't—the mine would be shut down that day, do you mean to say that the application of this proposition contained in this section 3 of article 10 would result in my inability to have my men work and load all of those cars which I could put into the mine and thus be ready to load rapidly the next morning, and ship my coal, provided the railroad furnished transportation?

A. No, sir; you could not load those cars—not unless there were railroad cars there.

Q. You mean I could not have my men—whom I might be perfectly willing to pay—continue to work for me and mine that coal in order that I might comply with my contract with the purchaser of my coal?

A. No, sir; not unless you have in many cases, a stipulated number of railroad cars above the tipple, they won't work at all—they are not allowed to work.

The Court:

Q. Suppose the railroad gets cars but does not deliver you cars in the morning in time for the working day, they will let 480 them go to work then, won't they?

A. No, sir; absolutely not.

Q. You have a stand-off the whole day?

A. We have a stand-off the whole day. If the cars are in the yard and are not placed above the tipple, they will not go to work, even if they know the engine will be there in thirty minutes or an hour.

Q. Won't they work half a day?

A. No, sir; they won't go in unless the cars are above the tipple, in many instances thirty minutes before starting time.

Q. Is that the rule of this organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a requirement of it?

A. Yes, sir; right in their own constitution; if there are no cars there before starting time—at least it is a requirement of the "locals"—if there are no cars there before starting time they won't go in until they are ready. In that connection here is a comparison we can make which we know to be true: The men working under the United Mine Workers in dull seasons work half time or say three days a week or something like that. When a man works three days a week he usually works alternate days—say Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. A mine working in Ohio, under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers, will only load about two and a half days' production. In other words, for half the time you only get efficiency out of your men of about forty per cent. A mine working on the other side of the river, in West Virginia, which works three days a week, will get sixty per cent. efficiency instead of forty per cent., simply because on an idle day a man will go in and clean up his stone and be ready to load coal the next morning. Under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers he cannot go in and prepare to load coal the next day. There is a good deal of preparation necessary in the Pittsburg coal, such as loading stone, cleaning up and so on.

Q. Can you work the men in getting out slate and "gob"?

A. You can work day men on the track.

Q. And on the outside?

A. Yes, sir; they will allow that, but they will not allow men whose duty it is to clean up stone and get it away for the following day—they won't allow them to work.

Mr. Gilchirst:

Q. In "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 2," which purports to be the constitution of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, on page 16, article 8, section 2, I find this language: "When it becomes necessary for the district president to close a mine, or when a mine or mines from some other legiti-481 mate cause has been forced to close down, said officers may if they deem it wise, close every other mine in the District, or may distribute those idle men into any other mine or mines in the district in which said mine or mines so closed may be situated." Construing this in the light of the English language, it would seem that this organization contemplates the closing of a mine by the district president whenever it becomes necessary. In applying this section who is the judge of when it becomes necessary so far as you have observed the application of this rule in practice?

A. The District President of the United Mine Workers of America.

Q. You mean, then, that he arbitrarily may say, "This mine must be closed"?

A. I think that their custom is to consult each other, but his word, of course, is what goes with the United Mine Workers.

Q. His dictum is final?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, it passes on and says: "Or when a mine or mines from some other legitimate cause has been forced to close down." That means, does it, the act of the operator, or does it mean the act of the men employed, or the act of some other official, or what does it mean in practice?

A. It means, in practice, that if there is a difference of opinion between an operator and the organization, that if the operator does not surrender they will take it upon themselves to close other mines belonging to that operator, or attempt to close other mines which are probably not owned by that operator but where possibly he is in charge of the operation.

Q. Passing to another provision it says—granting a condition where the mine has been closed down either by the president of the district or from some other legitimate cause—the section contains language indicating that the district president may distribute the idle men into any other mine or mines in the district in which the closed mine may be situated. Upon what principle of non-interference with the employer is that provision of that section to be defended, if you know?

At this point counsel for the served defendants interposed an objection, which, upon being argued by counsel for the served defendants and by counsel for plaintiff, was by the court overruled, and the record shows the following entry:

"(Exception by counsel for served defendants.)"

At this point the court took a recess until March 16th, 1911, at 10 o'clock a. m. and the record shows the following entry:

482 "Pending the transcribing by the stenographer of the testimony of J. C. McKinley up to the taking of the foregoing recess, the witness was excused from the stand until the afternoon session of March 17th, when he was recalled by Mr. Gilchrist for further direct examination, and testified as follows:"

Direct examination of J. C. McKINLEY, Continued:

Q. The last question asked you when you were formerly on the stand was this: "Passing to another provision it says—granting a condition where the mine has been closed down either by the president of the district or from some other legitimate cause—the section contains language indicating that the district president may distribute the idle men into any other mine or mines in the district in which the closed mine may be situated. Upon what principle of non-interference with the employer is that provision of that section to be defended, if you know?

A. I do not believe that I can state upon what principle of non-interference it is to be defended.

Q. The members of the United Mine Workers in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, constituting the bulk of the membership of the United Mine Workers in the United States, together with the members of the organization in other states where they have "locals," meet in national convention, I believe you said?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they design to contract with the operators who form associations in what states?

A. In the states of Ohio, Indiana, western Pennsylvania and Illinois, when Illinois will join.

Q. When Illinois will join? Illinois did join for awhile, did it?

A. Yes, sir; for a number of years.

Q. At the present time is Illinois in or out of the joint convention arrangement?

A. Illinois is out of the joint convention arrangement.

Q. So that the scales are now fixed up between the United Mine Workers of America, as a national body, meeting in convention, with the operators, who form a convention,—and then deal with the United Mine Workers, in convention with operators, being those in the states of western Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have said that in the states of western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, operations were conducted union, exclusively, with the exception of some part of western Pennsylvania?

A. Yes, sir.

483 Q. When a scale is agreed upon by the United Mine Workers, in convention, and the operators, in convention, from these states—they being the only ones that deal with the conventions as a body—how are arrangements made for mining in those states of western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, where the particular operator does not belong to the operators' association, if there is such a condition in any of those states?

A. The operators, in national convention, have uniformly refused to discuss or consider what they term "local conditions," but agree upon a base rate of wages and hours. Then the matter is referred back to the sub-district and district conventions for a settlement of what they term "internal differences"—that is, minor differences that occur between one district and one locality and another.

Q. Is the result of that arrangement between the United Mine Workers and the Operators' Association of these states, that the mine owner, who is a member of the association, signs the scale agreed upon, and the mine owner who is not a member of the association—if there be such an one in that section—signs the same scale or else does not operate union?

A. He is compelled to adopt the same scale.

Q. Passing to a state where there are non-union mines, what is the result of the unionizing of a non-union mine with respect to the scale that the unionized mine then has to pay?

A. The operator must pay the union scale at a union mine or his mine will be closed down.

Q. Then he is obliged to pay the scale of wages the fixing of which in amount, he has not had any hand in. Is that the situation?

A. That is true.

Q. When a scale is made by the national organization and this association of coal operators of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, which they assume to make for the governing of coal men throughout the entire United States, how long is that scale to run?

A. It is usually for two years.

Q. When was the last scale made, that you know of?

A. In 1910.

Q. Were you at the last joint convention?

A. I was there a day or two. I did not spend much time at that convention.

Q. And where and when was that held?

A. That was held at Cincinnati in April, I believe. Anyhow, it was held at Cincinnati in the spring of 1910.

Q. March 8-29, 1910. Is that it?

A. That is about the time but I would not say definitely that those are the dates.

Q. As a result of your observation and experience in at-484 tending these joint conferences of the United Mine Workers and the Operators' Association, for many years past, do you know whether there is any demand on the part of the Operators' Association that the non-union fields should be unionized?

(Question objected to by counsel for the served defendants.)

The Court: He may answer it and I will hold the objection.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What, if anything, do you know on that subject?

A. At every joint meeting for the last few years the miners have asked for an increase in wages. The operators have uniformly resisted this increase and have cited the fact that the competition from West Virginia is so keen that they are not able to pay more wages, and that the Mine Workers are not treating them fairly by not organizing West Virginia, and allowing this West Virginia coal to come into competition with them, and yet come back, year after year, and ask for an increase in wages. The organization officials usually reply by stating that they have spent thousands of dollars in West Virginia and are using every effort to carry out this plan of organization.

Q. If you understood why the operators who enter these joint conventions with these United Mine Workers, desire to have the non-union fields unionized, I wish you would state why that is the desire, if you know?

A. The United Mine Workers have raised the wages in the central *com*field—(interrupted).

Q. What is that?

A. Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois—until they have placed the operators at a decided disadvantage, and yet from year to year they are able to force increases in wages, and the operators claim their only relief is for the miners to organize the State of West Virginia, which is the principal competitor, or else secure a reduction in freight rates.

Q. A reduction in freight rates from where?

A. From the union operated mines or from mines operated under the control of the United Mine Workers of America.

Q. And that would apply principally in the State of Ohio—(interrupted).

A. Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and western Pennsylvania.

Q. How do wages paid in West Virginia—excluding the northern Panhandle district of West Virginia—at non-union mines, 485 compare with the wages called for by the scale of the United Mine Workers of America?

A. The per day rate of wages is less; also the tonnage rate is less.

Q. So the unionizing of the West Virginia non-union fields would result in the raising of wages if the union scale were applied?

A. It would; yes, sir.

Q. That would increase the cost of the coal to the West Virginia operator, would it?

A. Very much.

Q. And that would lessen his chance of successful competition in the markets of the west and the northwest?

A. It would, very much.

Q. Do you know whether it is the purpose of the United Mine Workers' officials, as an organization nationally, and the operators who meet with them in convention—these operators being from the states where the union is paramount,—to so place the West Virginia non-union operator that his coal cannot come in competition in these same markets where they now compete in the west and northwest?

A. They certainly would like to bring this condition about?

Q. Is that their object, so far as you understand it?

A. It is.

The Court:

Q. Right there I want to inquire. Mr. McKinley: I have heard, or understood, that the mining conditions in West Virginia are much more favorable to the getting out of coal. That is, that a miner in West Virginia can mine and load a ton of coal in a shorter period of time, and with less labor, than a man can in Ohio or Illinois or Indiana. In fixing the scale in West Virginia would that be taken into account if the mines were unionized, or would the miner in West Virginia get exactly the same sum he would get in Ohio for mining a ton of coal?

A. Their practice is to have a base rate of wages. For instance: This central competitive field fixes a base rate for all the rest of the territory. If they agree that the rate shall be ninety cents per ton it is tacitly understood, if not openly agreed to, that no other district shall be allowed to sign up at a less rate of wages, and they enforce that same base rate all over the territory. The comparative minor conditions are settled between the districts; but the same rate of eighty cents or ninety cents or ninety-five cents, as it is now, prevails in western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio, the Hocking Valley, Indiana and that part of Illinois that runs the screen coal basis, and the run-of-mine is based on that.

Q. Take, for example, the miners in the Fairmont region, who, as it has been testified, are not unionized, and those over in 486 this district in Ohio where they are: What is the general status of the mining conditions as between the two classes of miners? Which, on a general average, live to the best advantage and make the best wages, and have the most continuous labor, in your observation?

A. The annual result in the two places is approximately the same. The West Virginia miners work more regularly and their per day wage is less, and I believe they will produce more tons of coal for a dollar than the miner in eastern Ohio; but the miner in eastern Ohio does not work as regularly, and therefore the miner in northern West Virginia really makes more money than the miner does in eastern Ohio.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. You said a moment ago that the operators demanded that there should be a unionizing of the non-union fields or else a lowering of freight rates. Do you know whether the operators in the No. 8 vein in eastern Ohio have made any effort for the lowering of freight rates?

A. Yes, sir; they made a very strong effort to have the rates lowered.

Q. Where, do you know? Before what tribunal?

A. Before the State Railway Commission of Ohio.

Q. I find on page 24 of Upstill's Exhibit No. 1, purporting to be the language of Mr. T. L. Lewis—speaking of the organizing of West Virginia on account of the competition, &c., that we have just been talking about, between the non-union fields and the union fields, that deal with the United Mine Workers' national organization—these words: "If I have a proper conception of this movement it does not mean that either operators or miners can publicly say, 'We will organize West Virginia in order that the miners of Ohio or Indiana can get more work.' That has done more to prevent the organization of West Virginia than anything I know of." Does that statement compare with the attitude of the United Mine Workers' organization, in convention, that you have heretofore referred to?

A. Yes, sir; I have heard practically the same language used, myself.

Q. On page 112 of Upstill's Exhibit No. 1, I find this language attributed to Mr. Savage, of Ohio: "I was surprised a moment ago to hear that some of the operators were not in sympathy with the men in trying to get a readjustment of their freight rates in Ohio. I know as one miner we did all we possibly could in giving testimony before the commission in Columbus, and from what I heard then I believed, and I believe now, that the operators were 487 absolutely right in asking for this readjustment. I believe I can assure you that we will help you in every manner that we can to get that readjustment. But we would ask you, on the other hand, if we are willing to help you—and by helping you we agree we are helping ourselves—if you operators from Ohio and Pennsylvania will lend us the same assistance in West Virginia in getting the mining price up so that competition will not prevail. When we ask that what do we find? Operators have told me in years past that they were willing to have the miners organized in Ohio, but they were not willing that their miners should be organized in West Virginia. We find as great opposition on the part of the operators from this State who have mines in West Virginia as we find from the operators resident there. If we are going to work along the line of mutual benefit, let us make West Virginia a union State. Go down there and practice what you preach in Ohio. Help us get the protection of the law in that State and I think we can organize the miners. Instead of helping us, what have you done? You have done nothing but retard the progress of our organization in that State. The reason they have assigned to me for their attitude was that the calibre of the men employed in the mines of West Virginia was such that if they were organized it would be impossible to control them. I believe that a large percentage of those men are as intelligent as we are, and once they understand the benefits of the organization and the benefits of the contract we enter into, they will observe those contracts as religiously as the miners in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, or any other state."

Q. (Continued.) How does that compare with what you have observed in your experience at these conventions?

A. It is the same line of reasoning throughout.

Q. The Mr. Savage who made this speech in this convention is George W. Savage, the defendant, who is now in court, is it?

A. I suppose; I think so.

Q. He is what, now?

A. Secretary-Treasurer of District 6, which comprises the State of Ohio.

Q. Now, with regard to the general purpose of this union, I believe you said that as a result of your observations and experience in these joint conventions you had found that it was the idea of the United Mine Workers' organization as a national body to become supreme throughout the land in the coal mining industry. Is that what I understood you to say?

A. There is no question about it. That is their desire and ambition.

488 Q. On page 187 of this same "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1." I find the following, which is the language of Mr. T. L. Lewis:

"I think the time is coming in the development of the coal industry of this country when we will be able to agree upon a minimum basis for mining and make it a perpetual contract. That is the kind of plan I have in mind. I do not know how soon it will come. There is only one thing in the way, and that is the lack of such an organization among the operators and the miners as we ought to have to govern the industry. I think if our friends on the other side could have a national organization and we could have a complete national organization on our side the time will come when we will establish the relative mining prices in the different districts, and we can afford to fix a minimum basis as a wage scale and make it a perpetual contract. We could go from that up, but not below it. If anybody tried to get below it we would attempt to find out who was trying to injure the trade."

Q. (Continued.) Does that compare with what you understood the proposition was?

A. Yes, sir; Mr. Lewis has told me that a number of times—that that is his ambition.

Q. Mr. McKinley do you recall the occasion of the holding of Sub-District 5 convention in March, 1907?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any recollection of having any conversation with Mr. Rankin, one of the defendants, upon the subject of unionizing the mines in the northern Panhandle District?

A. I have.

Q. State what that conversation was, as nearly as you now recall?

A. My recollection is that just after the Sub-District convention adjourned I met Mr. Rankin on the street and knowing him very well I entered into conversation with him. During that conversation I said to him, "Well, what did you all do?" "Well," he said, "there is one thing we did, and that was to arrange to organize the Panhandle district of West Virginia." "Well," I said, "Why don't you let us alone?" and he replied, "That was brought up in the convention and a resolution was passed directing us to organize the Panhandle;" and he said further, "We will be over to see you right away," or something to that effect.

Q. In "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 5" which purports to be the proceedings of the Ninth Annual Convention Sub-District 5, District 6, held at Wheeling March, 14, 15, 16, 18 and 489 19, 1907," I find on page 28 this resolution:

Resolution No. 8.

Whereas, there are miners in the Panhandle District and Ohio that are not organized, and believing every mine should be organized; be it

Resolved, by this ninth annual convention that the sub-district officers together with the district officers, be authorized to take up the work of organizing every mine in the sub-district as quickly as it can be done."

Q. (Continued.) Was that the resolution referred to in your talk with Mr. Rankin?

A. I suppose so. He did not tell me the number of the resolution but that is the gist of it.

Q. Now, what happened after that talk with Rankin with reference to the attempted unionizing of the northern Panhandle District of West Virginia, as nearly as you now recollect?

A. My recollection is that we did not hear anything about it for two or three months, and I thought they had given up the attempt until along about the middle of the summer they commenced to come in to see me, and mentioned the fact at different times when I saw them that they were going to organize us, and then afterwards I found that they were sending organizers about our mines, as well as other mines in the Panhandle District, and they told me what they were doing at other mines. They neglected to say, however, just what progress they were making at our own mine, except that they were going to get us sooner or later.

Q. And if they got the men and didn't get you, what would happen with your mine, did they say?

A. Oh, they said they would shut us down and compel us to recognize the union.

Q. Did they say anything on that line with reference to the other mines in the northern Panhandle District that were running non-union?

A. Yes, sir; they stated specific mines that they were going to organize.

Q. What mines were they?

A. The Glendale, Hitchman, Richland—which was ours—and the Beech Bottom mine.

Q. Do you know from them what progress they made at the Glendale mine?

A. Yes, sir; they told me that they had twenty some men (I think it was twenty-four) who had joined the organization, 490 and that they had sixty men who had signed up or had agreed to join the organization at Hitchman, and that they were going to shut the mine down as soon as they got a few more men.

Q. The Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir; and all of the mines in the Panhandle District would have to recognize the union or remain closed.

Q. You say they did not tell you what progress they were making at the Richland mine?

A. They did not.

Q. What was your experience that disclosed what progress they were making at that mine?

A. Our first experience that showed us the progress they had made was when they succeeded in shutting us down, which was about the middle of October, 1907.

Q. And after the mine was shut down did it resume union, or did it stay shut down, or did it resume non-union again?

A. It staid shut down until a restraining order was allowed by the court, immediately after which it resumed non-union and has been so operated since.

Q. You have had no labor troubles since?

A. No; we have not.

Q. Mr. McKinley, you said, I believe, that you had been interested in four or five different mines in Ohio?

A. Four.

Q. Two of them, I believe, you said you were not now interested in—that they had been sold?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the other two, I think you said, had been leased?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what period of time, if you can recall?

A. Both for twelve years.

Q. And from about what date, if you now recall?

A. One from January 1st, 1910, and the other one from June 1st, 1910.

Q. From that it would seem that you are not now engaged in coal mining in Ohio?

A. No, sir; we are not.

Q. What occasioned you to quit operating in Ohio?

Mr. Hogg: Well, we object to that as it has nothing to do with this issue—why he quit over there.

The Court: I will let him answer it.

(Exception by counsel for served defendants.)

A. The methods and practices of the United Mine Workers.

491 Q. Did they cause you trouble?

A. Continually.

(Objected to by counsel for the served defendants.)

The Court:

Q. Do you mean by that, that the conditions were such that a mine could not profitably and advantageously be carried on by you as an operator?

A. It could not. They were calling strikes continually.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. I have before me and will hand you for identification a letter on the letter head of the United Mine Workers of America, District 6, Columbus, Ohio, August 25th, 1908, which reads as follows:

Mr. J. C. McKinley, Wheeling, W. Va.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 20th inst., and have noted carefully your detailed and comprehensive explanation of the trouble at Stewartsville.

It is hardly necessary to state that I deplore very much, these stoppages of work, either at your company's mines, or any other mines, where contracts exist, between our organization and them.

You will observe, however, that the present contract in Eastern Ohio recognizes the right of the men to strike, providing said strike is ordered by two-thirds vote of the Local Union.

These periodical stoppages and stampede strikes, I am pleased to note are occurring less frequent than they formerly did, as there is a large number of mines in Eastern Ohio where no stoppage of work occurred during the entire contract term.

Inasmuch as you have sent Sub-district President Watkins a copy of this letter, and I will see him this week, personally, he will no doubt give this matter his attention. It is impossible for me to do so, owing to the number of pressing engagements demanding my attention.

I hope that when the matter is taken up by him, that such action will be taken as will prevent a recurrence of this, of which you complain.

Some time ago, I requested that you settle with the representatives of our Organization, the trouble at Moundsville, where a 492 strike exists, and where it is costing our Organization thousands of dollars quite unnecessarily, as I believe.

I beg leave to again state inasmuch as that trouble is not settled, that I request a settlement of that by you and the representatives of our Organization, otherwise, I shall immediately take such steps at the Mines which you manage and represent at Glencoe, Stewartsville, and the other mine near Glencoe, as will require a settlement of this difficulty, or discontinue operation at these mines.

I hope to receive from you a favorable reply, for which, I will wait before taking the above action.

Yours truly,

(Signed) WM. GREEN.

A copy teste:

(Signed) JOHN T. HARRIS,
Official Stenographer.

Q. (continued). Is that the William Green who is one of the defendants?

A. It is.

Q. At that time what position did he hold?

A. President of District 6, United Mine Workers of America.

Q. Did you do what he ordered you to do?

A. We did not.

Q. Have you any objection to the filing of this original letter, or do you care to preserve it?

A. If a copy would do as well I would prefer to have it copied.

Mr. Gilchrist: I would ask, then, that the stenographer make a copy of the letter and that the copy be marked as verified.

The Court: Mr. Stenographer, you can just insert it in the testimony.

Mr. Hogg: It can go in subject to our objection, of course.

The Court: Certainly.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Now, here is another letter from the same man on the letter head of the United Mine Workers of America, which is dated 493 Columbus, Ohio, September 4th, 1908, and is as follows:

Mr. J. C. McKinley, Pres., "Raven Coal Co.," Wheeling, W. Va.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your favor of August 31st, and beg leave to say that the question in dispute at Moundsville, is one that I am not personally familiar with, but do not believe that it is a question of organizing those men, for the reason that they have already been organized.

I have been informed that there was a Local Union at this Mine, when you assumed charge of this property.

The question, as I understand it, is some question, either as to rules, conditions, or the right of the men, who have been working there to continue work.

I do know that it is costing us thousands of dollars, without cause or reason

You promised to settle this, with Mr. Watkins, and Mr. Sullivan, a short time ago. You have not done so, and for that reason, I feel fully justified in informing you, as to our position.

In view of your unsatisfactory reply, I shall, in accordance with my judgment, take such steps as we deem necessary to protect our interests in dealing with you at your Mines in Ohio, where you profess to carry out the contract.

I have also notified Mr. McBryde, to this effect, and also, suggested that their Association require its members (as I understand you are a member) to comply with the spirit and letter of the contract in dealing with us, just as they would require our members to carry out the spirit and letter of the contract in dealing with them.

Yours truly,
(Signed) WM. GREEN.

A copy teste:
(Signed) JOHN T. HARRIS,
Official Stenographer.

494 Q. (continued). That is the same William Green?
A. The same William Green, President of District 6, United Mine Workers of America.

Mr. Gilchrist: That may go in in the same way.

Q. I show you another letter on the letter head of the United Mine Workers of America, District 6, dated Columbus, Ohio, September 14th, 1908, which reads as follows:

Mr. J. C. McKinley, Pres., "Raven Coal Co.," Wheeling, W. Va.

MY DEAR SIR: I herewith acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 11th inst. I am very much disappointed at your attitude toward our Organization and in your attempt to justify your action and position.

It is clearly evident from your action, that you deal with the Organization at your Mines in Ohio, because you find it more profitable than to do otherwise, thus it is merely a question of dealing with us when it is profitable to do so and antagonizing our Organization, when circumstances and conditions warrant.

It is hard to justify a position of this kind and I would suggest that you either deal with our Organization altogether, or antagonize it altogether.

I do not wish, however, to continue longer, this controversy, for your unreasonable attitude indicates that it would be a waste of valuable time.

I merely desire to point out that our Organization had dealt fairly and squarely with you and has spent time and money at your Mine at Glencoe and other places when trade conditions were good, in compelling our men to comply with the contract in every particular, notwithstanding the fact that they were fully aware of your unreasonable attitude toward our Organization, an incident, with which, you are thoroughly familiar.

Your replies to my request to settle the trouble at Moundsville and thus relieve us of the drain upon our financial resources, of thousands of dollars, verbally, as well as many times I have wrote you, and also, as requested by Sub-district President Watkins and Mr. Sullivan, is so highly unsatisfactory that I wish to again
495 repeat that I shall, when circumstances and conditions warrant, take such steps at your mines, where you have contracts with our Organization, as will fully protect our interest and if possible, prevent a continuance of this drain upon our financial resources.

Yours respectfully,
(Signed) WM. GREEN.

A copy teste:
(Signed) JOHN T. HARRIS,
Official Stenographer.

Q. (continued). Is that the same William Green, one of the defendants?

A. The same William Green.

Q. Was he then president of the district?

A. Yes, sir; of District No. 6.

Mr. Gilchrist: This letter may go in in the same way.

Q. To what did you understand he referred by the language: "an incident with which you are thoroughly familiar?"

A. It was the question of a strike at Moundsville. Well, not exactly a strike, either. In 1906 I think it was—no; 1908, I believe—we operated the Moundsville mine, and the miners went out on a strike on April 1st, or quit work, rather; they didn't call it a strike; the scale expired. Inasmuch as we needed coal we suggested to them to keep on at work, and the union forbade it. We had sufficient men who wanted to keep on at work to go ahead, and we did so, and the organized men, or the men belonging to the local union, remained idle. After a certain period of time the United Mine Workers paid them, I think, three dollars a week. They continued to do that for some time, and that is the subject to which he refers when he speaks of Moundsville.

Q. Do you recall any demand on his part that you should shut down your mine so that the mine being shut down could resume without being in the union, and the union men thus not be entitled to receive benefits from the union?

A. That suggestion did not come from Mr. Green; it came from Mr. Watkins. He and Mr. Rankin were in my office one day and asked me if I would not, as a favor, shut down the mine and put up a notice that "This mine is closed indefinitely." He said, "You 496 need not keep it shut down but one or two days; then you can resume as soon as you want to, but that will relieve us from paying benefits to these men."

Q. Did you do that?

A. After some time we did that. We posted the notice that "this mine is closed down indefinitely"—that was one Friday—and we resumed the following Monday. That was done so as to relieve them from paying benefits there.

Q. And these men—these officials—were these defendants, were they,—Watkins and Rankin?

A. Yes, sir; Watkins and Rankin.

Q. Did they do that sort of an act?

A. They seemed to; and requested us to do it, and Mr. Green asked us to carry it out.

Q. Why, that was a betrayal of the very men whose money they were taking, was it not?

A. Yes, sir; these men had been paying money into the organization.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination, the witness, J. C. McKinley, recalled, said that the property of the Richland coal mine is owned by the Richland Coal Company, of which witness is president and a majority stockholder; the Richland Coal Company has a suit in which it is plaintiff against the same persons who are defendants in this suit.

At this point the witness was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. You stated that an operator when running his mine union had nothing to say or had no right to say when or when not one of its employes should be discharged—that that was entirely in the control of the United Mine Workers, did you not?

A. I do not think so.

Q. You did not say that?

A. I do not think that I said that and I should like to hear the testimony read where I said it, if I did say it.

Q. Well, you recollect what you said and I shall not refer to the testimony. If you have not stated it, why, of course, you know.

A. No, sir; I do not think I stated that.

Q. You also gave by way of illustration an instance occurring at the Delora mine, in Ohio, then run union and at which time you were connected with that mine, in which two men had been discharged by the management of that company for an open vio-
497 lation of the law of Ohio; and that when they were discharged they were taken before a justice and ultimately brought to the court of common pleas, indicted, convicted and fined, as well as being sentenced to jail; and that the representatives of the Mine Workers' Union succeeded in having the jail sentence remitted; that they then paid the fine and, further succeeded in having those men reinstated at the Dolora mine; or in substance that is what you stated, is it not?

A. No, sir.

Q. What did you state?

A. I said that these men were arrested by the justice, held for the court and pleaded guilty, and their sentence was suspended both as to the imprisonment and the fine, and the costs were paid by the United Mine Workers of America, and the men were put back to work by the management, first at the Stewartsville mine, as I recollect it, and afterwards with the understanding that they were to go to work at the Delora mine.

Q. Do you recall the year in which that occurred?

A. It was either in 1907 or 1908.

Q. Do you recall what the offense was for which they were arrested?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state it.

A. It was for not posting and taking care of their working place.

Q. And when you say "not posting," you mean not placing timbers where they should be placed?

A. That is it; yes, sir.

Q. For the purpose of supporting the top?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you give the names of those two men?

A. I could by referring to the papers.

Q. Do you remember who was present at that time of Sub-District No. 5?

A. I think Mr. Andy Watkins was.

Q. You were asked on your examination in chief the following question: "Now, with regard to the general purpose of this union; I believe you said that as a result of your observations and experience in these joint conventions, you had found that it was the idea of the United Mine Workers' organization as a national body to become supreme throughout the land in the coal mining industry. Is that what I understand you to say?" To this question you answered as follows: "There is no question about it; that is their desire and ambition." What are we to understand by the expression used there that it is the idea of the United Mine Workers' organization, as a national body, to become supreme throughout the land in the coal mining industry, and especially the word "supreme" as used in that connection?

498 A. Their desire, as I understand it, is to have every employe in and about the bituminous coal mines of the United States and Canada, as well as the anthracite mines, a member of the United Mine Workers of America, and that they will be in position to absolutely dictate a minimum wage for which their members will work.

Q. That is your understanding?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say in answer to another question: "Does that compare with what you understood the purpose was?" And you answered: "Yes, Mr. Lewis has told me that a number of times—that that is his ambition." When and where did you have any conversation with Mr. T. L. Lewis, one of the defendants in this case, in which he stated to you that it was his ambition to have the United Mine Workers of America become supreme in the mining industry, so that this organization could dictate a minimum scale in the coal mining district?

A. That has been the tenor of Mr. Lewis's conversation with me many times, and not only that they may establish a minimum price for mining, but that by co-operation with the operators they shall establish a minimum price for coal throughout the country.

Q. I am asking you to state when and where any of these conversations occurred?

A. The conversations were so numerous, and have been throughout the last several years, that I will not undertake to state just when and where these conversations have taken place, because there have been a great many of them.

Q. Mr. McKinley, do you know from your observation and experience what difference there is between unionizing the employes at a mine and unionizing the mine?

A. Of course, I suppose there is a difference—theoretically, at least.

Q. What is it?

A. The men might be unionized at a mine and the mine owners not recognize the union. That would in effect be an open shop. When I said "unionize the employes," I meant practically all of the employes; but a union mine, as I understand it, is one wherein the closed shop is practically enforced.

Q. That is the case when the operator is in contract relation with the organization, is it?

A. Practically so.

Q. Then, as I understand, the United Mine Workers may unionize the men, but cannot unionize the mine so as to have it operated union, without the consent of the operator?

A. No; I should say they could not; but the practice in the United Mine Workers is that they will not work—if they have a majority of the men they will not work with any non-union man.

499 Q. Well, the Hitchman will not work with any union men, will it?

A. I am not in the management of the Hitchman mine, and I cannot say.

Q. The Richland does not, does it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you know that as a fact—as well as you know these other things—that the Hitchman mine does not allow union men to work there, so far as you can know a thing without seeing it?

A. I do not think they will allow their men to owe their allegiance to the Mine Workers, and work for them.

Q. Well, he cannot be a union man, can he?

A. Not if he follows out the rules of the United Mine Workers, because in that event he will not work with non-union men, I believe.

Q. Suppose he should just simply join for the first time, wouldn't he have to quit down there at the Hitchman?

A. Yes, sir; I believe so.

Q. Now, there is a difference between unionizing the men and unionizing the mine, in the very nature of the thing?

A. Yes, sir; I suppose there is.

Q. Did you say in your examination in chief that you had run union from 1903 to 1906, or what period did you run union?

Witness: Where do you mean? At what mine?

Mr. Hogg: At the Richland.

A. We ran for sometime union; I could not just say; it was from 1903 until 1904, '05 or '06, or sometime along there; it was a year or two or such a matter.

Q. I believe you stated in your examination in chief that you were interested in or operated the Mound Coal Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, were you operating that company in 1906?

A. I do not believe so.

Q. Do you know that in 1906—possibly about the first of May or sometime in the early part of that month—that it signed the scale of 1903 as proposed by the national convention at Indianapolis in January, 1906?

A. My recollection now is that we leased that mine January 1st, 1906, and we had nothing whatever to do with the management of it.

Q. Are you aware that it did sign the 1903 scale in that year as proposed by the Indianapolis convention of January, 1906?

A. I could not say, but my recollection is that they did, although I am not positive.

Q. Do you recollect about the time they signed it?

500 A. No, I do not; it was in the spring, however, or the early summer, but I had nothing to do with the management of that mine at that time.

Q. I believe you said in your examination in chief that when a mine is unionized it is under contract to run union, and that that contract provides a definite period when the scale shall begin and when it shall end? Is that right?

A. That is usually the case.

Q. And usually the period is two years?

A. It has been for the last several years in the central competitive field.

Q. I am going to ask you a question from memory and if I misstate it you can correct me. I believe that you stated that you had quit the eastern Ohio field by selling two of your mines and leasing the other two. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You leased those mines upon a royalty?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are those two mines that are now under lease operated union?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know anything about the comparative production of those mines with reference to their capacity to produce, as taken from year to year?
A. Yes, sir; somewhat.
Q. Well, do they find a market for their products pretty readily over there?
A. Yes, sir; fairly readily.
Q. Well, I believe you said the reason why you left that field was because of the continuous strikes over there while they were run union?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you have more strikes than the other people there around in that union district?
A. No; I do not know as we did; we had a good many, though, and we thought we had more than our share of trouble.
Q. Well, you had more local strikes over there than the balance of the operators, didn't you?
A. More than some of the balance.
Q. Did you have anything to do with the management of that mine over there?
A. Oh, yes.
Q. Don't you think that might be attributed in part to your temperament as a manager?
A. No; I think it was largely on account of our operating non-union in West Virginia, or part of it was that.
Q. Where were you operating non-union in West Virginia?
A. At the Richland mine; and I was told by the president of the sub-district that they felt kind of sore because we were operating non-union over there.
Q. What president was that?
A. William Green.
Q. He is the only man that you recollect about having 501 that conversation with?
A. I think he was the only one that came out and stated that they were feeling sore about it.
Q. Is that the same Green who had the spirited correspondence with you in regard to it?
A. Yes, sir; he is the same William Green.
Q. Now, is it not a fact, Mr. McKinley, that you refused over there at the Delora mine, or your other mines, to adjust the grievances that were often submitted to you?
A. We not only never refused to adjust the grievances, but we never refused to meet a committee; and in all the time we were there we were never found guilty of breaking a contract with the United Mine Workers.
Q. Didn't the officials of the United Mine Workers attempt to see that the contract was carried out with you?
A. Ostensibly they did; and in some instances I think they sincerely tried to find that the contract was carried out.
Q. Wouldn't it be to their interest that the men should go on and the mines operated so that the dues and assessments might have been paid?

A. I would have thought so.

Q. Isn't that the natural view and reasonable view to take of it?

A. It is pretty hard to fathom the motives of people at times.

Q. What motive could be greater than self interest?

A. They claim it is to their self interest to organize the Panhandle of West Virginia.

Q. Wouldn't they have been required to pay these people benefits while they were on a strike?

A. No, sir; as I understand it the rules require that they must be out on a strike four weeks before getting benefits, and they can have these temporary shuts-down, as they term them, and local strikes, three or four weeks without costing them anything.

Q. The rule is, then, that there must be a suspension of four weeks before they are lawfully entitled to benefits?

A. Yes, sir; I believe that is the rule.

Q. Therefore, if the mine is idle say six weeks they would be entitled to only two benefits?

A. To a two weeks' benefit, as I understand it.

Q. Well, now, what official do you think, while he was ostensibly acting in your interest for the purpose of seeing the provisions of the contract carried out, was insincere?

A. Several of them; and principally the president of the sub-district.

Q. Of the sub-district?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was that?

A. Mr. Andy Watkins.

Q. Well, can you specify any instance wherein you think 502 Mr. A. R. Watkins was pretending to act in your interest, keeping up the contract, when he was really not trying to do it?

A. In 1907 or 1908—I could not state which year it was without refreshing my memory—we had a strike. I think it was about the discharge of one or possibly two drivers. The entire mine was called on a strike because we would not reinstate these men, (since thinking it over I believe it was only one man), and he was discharged for cause. My recollection now is that he was insubordinate and abusive. The mine was, as I say, called out on a strike and that condition lasted for two or three weeks. President Green, of the State organization, ordered the men back to work and they refused to go. Some of the other officers claimed that they ordered them back to work and they refused to go. Mr. Green instructed Mr. Watkins to go out there and put the men to work. He went out there and instead of ordering the men to work he says, "Men, we have got McKinley up a tree and we will win out." He was confronted with that statement in Cleveland and while he did not exactly admit it he did not altogether deny it. And further evidence which I had, and from their own people was, that Mr. Watkins not only did not carry out the agreement but he did not carry out the instructions from the state officials, and the mine did not resume work until Mr.

Green, himself, had the charter taken away, thus declaring the mine non-union, and then the miners surrendered and went back to work.

Q. This you say occurred sometime in 1907?

A. It was about that time.

Q. Do you recollect about what time it was?

A. I do not; it may have been—well, I would not say definitely just when it was; it was about that time though.

Q. Did you not after this occurrence bring this to Mr. Watkins' attention and didn't he deny to you that he stated that he had you "up a tree"?

A. As I said a minute ago he did not admit, but he did not altogether deny it.

Q. Well, then, you say that he did not deny it, do you, or how about that?

A. I do not think that he did. Well, I believe he did deny it and that I told him then before the meeting that he was telling what was absolutely untrue, and he knew it.

Q. That was in the joint meeting of the operators and miners, was it?

A. It was in the joint meeting between the executive board of the Operators' Association and some of the Mine Workers' officials. I think Mr. Green and Mr. Watkins and possibly one or two others, were the men.

503 Q. I would like to ask you, Mr. McKinley, while I think of it, whether you are paying the five-sevenths scale?—whether you are paying the union scale at the Richland mine?

A. Practically so; yes, sir.

Q. Well, you pay five-sevenths—you stated in your examination in chief—run-of-mine. That is your basis.

Witness: What is the question?

Q. You pay five-sevenths of the pick price for run-of-mine coal. Is that correct?

A. No, sir; because we do not pay for any run-of-mine coal. We handle a little engine coal and we average that with screened coal. Everything is paid for on a screened coal basis.

Q. Everywhere?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any run-of-mine coal there at all?

A. As I stated awhile ago we have a small amount of run-of-mine coal but we average that with the screened coal.

Q. Then you do not attempt to pay the union scale on the run-of-mine coal—machine mining?

A. If you will allow me I will explain a moment: That five-sevenths is not a practicable division in eastern Ohio, and the United Mine Workers themselves admit it, and they say it is not used and probably never will be, so why not just leave it the same as the base rate in the Hocking Valley? It is not intended or expected to be used.

Q. Mr. McKinley, what do you pay for your run-of-mine coal? You say you haven't much but of course you pay for it?

A. I say that we pay the average of the screened coal mined.

Q. What does it amount to per ton?

A. I could not say without I had the figures. It is on a basis that would vary according to a man's ability in mining. If he mines good, big coal he gets more than if he mines small coal. Each man's average is paid for the one or two cars or more which may go to the railroad and which is used run-of-mine coal.

(End of Cross-Examination.)

Redirect examination:

Upon re-direct examination the witness McKinley, recalled, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. At what mine did this incident with Watkins occur?

A. That occurred at the Delora mine of the Highland Coal Company, in Ohio.

504 Q. You said that the officials took away the charter of the local and that upon that being done the men came to time. What had that to do with the return of the men?

A. That is one method that the United Mine Workers had of enforcing discipline. They had what they call "take away the charter"; that annuls the local at that point; and then as soon as they do that, why, as a general thing, they ordinarily say that they obey the orders of the organization, and they come back to work; they ask for an official to come there and put them back to work.

Q. That is the equivalent then, in a sense, of ex-communication?

A. It is; yes, sir; and as soon as they are ex-communicated then they usually want to get back.

Q. And to a man living and working in the union field, that sort of a proceeding is effective, then, as a general proposition, is it?

A. It is a matter of practical life or death with him in a union field. He cannot work there unless he belongs to the organization and when he is ex-communicated of course he cannot secure employment unless he goes out of the state or the district.

(End of Re-direct Examination.)

Recross-examination:

Upon re-cross examination the witness, McKinley, recalled, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Because the operators themselves working union will not employ him?

A. The operators might be perfectly willing to employ him but as soon as he is out of the organization he cannot work with the United Mine Workers.

Q. They have no control over him when he is out of the mine?

A. They have no control over him but they will not work with him—the members of the United Mine Workers.

Q. Don't the operators in eastern Ohio pay five-sevenths for run-of-mine coal?—on a basis of five-sevenths?

A. I do not think there is a mine in eastern Ohio paying the five-sevenths rate.

Q. Were they in 1907?

A. No, sir.
Q. Are they now?
A. No, sir; not to the best of my knowledge.
Q. What rate do they have at the Aetna Standard mine?
A. That is not a commercial mine; that is a mine that supplies coal for the steel works alone, or rolling mill, which ever it is, and I think they pay what is termed bank measure.
505 Q. And that basis then does not exist at all in any regular coal producing plant?
A. Not in any regular commercial coal producing plant.
Q. Or any where in eastern Ohio?
A. Not to my knowledge, sir.
Q. Do you know a mine called the Moore's Run mine?
A. Yes, sir; I know the Moore's Run mine.
Q. Aren't they paying it there?
A. No, sir; they screen all their coal and pay on a screened coal basis.

(End of Re-cross Examination.)

Redirect examination:

Upon re-direct examination the witness, McKinley, recalled, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. And that coal at the Moore's Run mine, when furnished as run-of-mine coal, is screened, and then all put together again?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And it then passes as run-of-mine coal?
A. Yes, sir; it then becomes run-of-mine coal.
Q. But is paid for on a screened basis?
A. Yes, sir; that is my information.

(End of Re-direct Examination.)

PAUL LEONARD.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness Paul Leonard, said: My name is Paul Leonard; residence, two miles north of Wheeling; occupation, superintendent of the Richland mines; has been such superintendent for five years last June; has seen a man by the name of Thomas Hughes; he was on the Richland Coal Company's property two miles north of Wheeling; had a talk with Mr. Hughes in regard to organization; witness asked Hughes his business when he discovered him on the property and Hughes told witness that he was an organizer for the United Mine Workers; said his business in that section of the country was to organize the Panhandle district of West Virginia; the mines at that time in the Panhandle district were the Glendale mine, the Hitchman mine, the Moundsville mine, the Elm Grove mine, the Richland mine, the Beech Bottom mine, and 506 the Wheeling Steel & Iron mine; the Wheeling Steel & Iron mine is not a commercial mine but belongs to an industrial plant; all the others named are commercial mines.

At this point the witness was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. What did you understand him to say was his meaning when he said he was there to organize the Panhandle District?

A. Why, that he would make them join the United Mine Workers or tie them up, were the words he used to me.

Q. He said, then, that he was there to have the men join the United Mine Workers, or tie up the mines?

A. Tie up the Panhandle.

Q. What did you understand him to mean when he said he would "tie up the Panhandle"?

Mr. Hogg: If your Honor please, I do not like to be making these objections, but the only thing that the witness can testify to is what the party said and not his understanding. If he does not recollect what he said he can give the substance. Now, he has given what he said—that he was there to make them join the union or tie them up; that was the language. Now, what he meant is a different thing. Read that question, Mr. Stenographer, so the court may hear it.

(Last foregoing question was read by the stenographer.)

The Court:

Q. Mr. Witness, have you told all the conversation with him? Give his language as near as you can, how it occurred and what was said.

A. Why, the way it occurred was this: I was informed—I was in the shop at the time Mr. Hughes landed upon the property and when I went out of the shop a man made the remark to me that there was an organizer out there and we were going to have some trouble. "Oh," I says, "I do not think there will be any trouble." So I went out to Mr. Hughes and asked him his business and he told me he was an organizer. I told him to move off; that down over the hill was a good place for him; that we did not want him on our property; that we didn't want to be bothered with the union; that we were getting along first rate without any union. He told me not to get mad, that nobody was going to hurt me. I told him I was not worrying at all about getting hurt; but I stuck to him and did not allow him to see any of our men, and eventually put him on a car.

Q. Now, what was it he said about his object and purpose and intention?

A. Why, it was to organize the Panhandle.

507 The Court: I think he has expressed his conversation sufficiently. You can go on, Mr. Gilchrist, and ask him what further he said. His understanding would be immaterial anyhow.

Mr. Gilchrist: I expected to get out of the witness a further conversation explanatory of what was meant by the organizer when he said he would tie up the mine.

The Court:

Q. Did he make any explanation as to what he meant by tying up the Panhandle?

A. That they would organize us and we would recognize the union. He went on further and stated that he would come there and ask me for a job and I would be compelled to give it to him, and he would work for me.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Was that remark of his following any statement on his part that the men if organized by him would have to be recognized by the officials of his organization and the mine sign up and run union?

A. That was my understanding of it.

Q. What that the substance of your conversation with him on that point?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then getting back to the question that I asked you a moment ago, but as to which some objection was made by counsel on the other side. When Hughes said he was going to organize the Panhandle, or tie it up he meant, as you understood his language as you have expressed it here, to cause the mines to be shut down provided he succeeded in organizing the men and the operators refused to unionize?

(Question objected to by counsel for the served defendants.)

The Court: Under the exception I will let the answer be given and consider it finally.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Now, state fully—(interrupted)——

A. My understanding of it was that if the company did not recognize this union that the mines would be shut down.

Q. Did you see Hughes more than once?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?

A. At the Richland mine.

Q. What was he doing there, if you know?

A. He was talking to the men.

Q. Were you present when he was talking to any of the men?

A. Sometimes I was.

508 Q. If you heard anything that he said in talking to these men on the subject of joining the union, state what it was, as nearly as you now recollect?

A. I recollect of him telling one man—not a man, rather, but a boy, that we were paying at that time $1.75 for a boy's job—he told him that his job would pay him $2.25 if they were organized.

Q. Did you hear him talk to anybody else along that line of thought?

A. No; that was when I walked in where there were about thirty or forty men that he had gathered around him, that I heard this talk, and of course when I entered he quit talking to the men.

Q. He was then in company with the men, was he?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that on the property of the company or not?

A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. Was it near the mine?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know how he happened to be in conversation with them at that time?
A. No; I do not.
Q. You just found him there talking with the thirty or forty men?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Your employes?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did Hughes, in any of his talks with you—if you had any other than what you have already detailed—say anything about his work in other mines in the Panhadle District?
A. Yes, sir; he did.
Q. Well, what mine or mines did he speak of that he was working on?
A. He spoke of the Glendale mine—about them organizing and joining the union. If I remember right at the Glendale mine he got twenty-two men.

Mr. Hogg: Just note an objection to what the witness says in regard to what Hughes did at the Glendale mine, for reasons to be assigned at the final hearing.

The Court:

Q. Did he say anything about the Hitchman mine?
A. No, sir.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. What did he say, if anything, with reference to the twenty-two men?
A. He said they had been discharged by the company but he had gotten them jobs elsewhere at union mines.
Q. Did he say in what state?
A. In Ohio.
Q. That is just across the river from the Glendale mine—the State of Ohio?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. If he said anything about giving them cards—that is, union cards, as their evidence of a right to work in union mines in 509 Ohio—what did he say?
A. Why, that he had given them cards—good union cards.
Q. What, if anything, did he say about the cost of those cards or what he charged the men, if anything?
A. I do not remember that he said anything about the cards; that is, I do not remember that he said anything about the cost of the cards, but that he gave them cards.
Q. Now, if he said anything about fines for having worked at the Glendale mine, what was it?
A. I do not remember that he said anything about fines.
Q. Did Hughes succeed in organizing the Richland mine, where you were?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hogg: Please note an objection to that.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. What did he accomplish?

(Question objected to by counsel for the served defendants.)

A. Why, he accomplished the organizing of about fifty men, as near as I can recollect.

Q. How many men did the mine have employed at that time?

A. Between eighty and ninety, as near as I can remember.

Q. Now, I wish you would state, as nearly as you can now recollect, about the proportion of men who entered your employ after April 1st, 1907, that were included within the number of about fifty men that he succeeded in organizing at the Richland mine, as you have stated?

(Objected to by counsel for served defendants.)

A. I would say there were about forty; as near as I can recollect.

The Court:

Q. That had been been employed after April 1st?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. When the men were organized at the Richland mine by Hughes, what happened to the mine?

A. It was shut down.

Q. Did it resume union pursuant to the organizers' efforts?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then that was a case of tie up, was it?

A. Yes, sir.

510 Q. And that was what Mr. Hughes told you he would do provided the men were organized and the mine was not unionized by the operators?

A. Yes, sir.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Leonard, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Are you the same Paul Leonard who made an affidavit to be used by the Richland Coal Company in a suit by it against John Mitchell and others, filed in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I hand you what purports to be an affidavit of Paul Leonard, filed in the case of the Richland Coal Company versus John Mitchell and others, on the 24th day of October, 1907, and ask you to examine the signature to this affidavit and state whether or not that is your signature?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you read this affidavit, or have it read to you, before signing it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect the time when you met Hughes on the occasion of your going out of your shop when you were told that he was an organizer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please give the dates?

A. I do not know that I can remember the dates.

Q. Well, the year and month, as well as you can.

A. If I remember right it was in 1907.

Q. Was it in the month of October?

A. Well, I believe so.

Q. Is that your best recollection now?

A. That is my best recollection.

Q. You say that there are in the Panhandle District of West Virginia, the Glendale, Hitchman, Moundsville, Elm Grove, Richland and Beech Bottom coal mines?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you at one time run on a union basis at the Richland mine?

A. No, sir.

Q. You never did?

A. I never did.

Q. When did you go there?

A. I went there on the 26th day of June. It will be six years the 26th day of next June.

Q. Do you know whether or not the mine was on a union basis before you went there?

A. It was not.

511 Q. It never was run union?

A. I did not say it never was run union; I said it was not before I went there; I did not say that it never was run union.

Q. Well, was it ever run union?

A. I believe it was at one time.

Q. Do you know when?

A. No; I do not.

Q. How many men did you employ in 1906 when you went there?

A. Why, I cannot recollect just exactly—about fifty, I suppose, or possibly sixty.

Q. Then by the first of January, 1907, how many had you?

A. I do not know that I can just exactly state; there was quite a number of men.

Q. You say that you asked the organizer that you met—this man Hughes—his business at the mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you met him did you say this to him: "I told him that down over the hill was a good place for him"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you speak peremptorily or positively to him about it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he reply to you that there was no use for you to get mad—that he was not going to hurt you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were mad, were you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say that he was going to organize the men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you say to him in reply that you did not intend to let him do that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell him that you did not want him to trespass on the company's property?

A. I did.

Q. Did he then ask if you intended to insist on that and you told him that you certainly were?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did insist on it?

A. I did insist.

Q. Did you tell him that when a man applied for a job that it was always the understanding that the men there were not organized?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell him that you did not recognize the union at that mine?

A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. And did you tell him that the company was not going to be organized?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then did you say to him if under those circumstances he wanted to work, he could work for you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you also say to him that if he did enter your employment—that is, the employment of the Richland Coal Company—and wanted to join the union, that he would have to leave the employment of the company?

A. That he would have to go elsewhere to join it.

512 Q. I believe you stated that you saw him talking to some of the men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, after you had the conversation that you have detailed here on the witness stand, did Hughes go off of the property as you had requested him to do, or ordered him to do?

A. At times he would be off and at times he would be on.

Q. Whereabouts was he with reference to the mine at that time?

A. He was, as near as I can give it, about 600 feet west of the mine.

Q. Of the mouth of the mine?

A. Not of the mouth of the mine but west on the county road.

Q. How far was it from the mouth of the mine leading into where the men were working? Do you have a drift mine there or is it a shaft mine?

A. It is a drift mine.

Q. Well, go on.
A. Well, I would judge it would be from a thousand to twelve hundred feet.
Q. Then you had this conversation with him about a thousand or twelve hundred feet from the entrance to the mine?
Witness: That is, when he was talking to the men?
Mr. Hogg: No; I mean where you were talking to him in the conversation in which you told him to get off of the property.
A. Oh, that was about sixty feet from the mouth of the mine.
Q. Now, then, when he was talking to the men he was about a thousand feet, was he, from the mine, or twelve hundred feet?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You did not hear what he said with the exception of what he stated to a boy. What was the boy doing?
A. Spragging cars on the tipple.
Q. And he wanted to know what he was getting, did he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the boy said $1.75 a day?
A. Yes, sir; I think that is right.
Q. And he then replied that the union scale was $2.25 for that kind of work, did he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. He held that out to him, then, as an inducement to become a member of the United Mine Workers?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I believe you stated that you did not recollect anything else that he said, in your examination in chief?
A. I believe I did state that.
Q. That is about all you recollect, is it, of what occurred?
A. Yes, sir.
513 Q. I believe that you stated that Hughes gave certain men that you had discharged from the Richland Coal Company's employment, union cards. Did you or not?
A. I did not make any such statement; I did not make any statement of that kind.
Q. What did you say, then, in regard to that matter?
A. Why, that was the Glendale mine.
Q. Oh, that was the Glendale mine?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, where were you when you saw him, if you saw him giving the men the cards?
A. I did not say I saw him giving the men the cards.
Q. What did you say in regard to that?
A. He told me that he had given the men the cards.
Q. He told you that he had given them good union cards?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And that would entitle them to employment at a union mine?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you say that there were about fifty men who joined the union at the Richland mine?
A. Yes, sir; as near as I can recollect.

Q. And when they joined the Richland company discharged them. That was the rule, wasn't it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't they have to quit if they joined the union?

A. No, sir; I discharged three of the men or ordered three of the men discharged.

Q. Why?

A. For being leaders of the union.

Q. Well, were they members of the union?

A. They were at the time I discharged them; and the rest of them came out.

Q. And did not remain any longer with you?

A. No; not at that time.

Q. Well, you did not employ those men for any definite time?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Were they union men—those men that came out? Had they joined the union—those that came out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, your rule was not to allow a man to remain if he joined the union. Wasn't that it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So you would have discharged them had they not come out?

A. Yes, sir; I would have discharged them if they hadn't.

The Court:

Q. When you speak of coming out, do you mean coming out of the union or quitting work?

A. Quitting work.

514 Mr. Hogg: Coming out of the mine.

Q. I believe you stated that Hughes said nothing to you about the Hitchman mine?

A. I do not believe that he ever mentioned the Hitchman mine.

Mr. Hogg: If your Honor please, where evidence has been objected to I wish to make the statement that under the rule I do not want to be understood as waiving any point that is at issue, and I wish to state further that I have conducted this cross examination without waiving my objection.

Mr. Gilchrist: I understand that to be true only to the extent where the cross examination is strictly cross examination.

The Court: Certainly.

Mr. Hogg: And as a matter of course if we get irrelevant evidence in here ourselves, the court will not consider it.

The Court: The court will instruct himself to disregard it.

(End of Cross Examination.)

R. G. AUSTIN.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination, the witness, R. G. Austin said: My name is R. G. Austin; age, fifty; residence, Benwood, West Virginia; occupation, store manager for the Western Supply Company; the Western Supply Company's store is near the Hitchman mine in Benwood; witness has been in that position six years this month; witness saw a man by the name of Thomas Hughes around the Hitchman mine, believes it was in October, 1907, or around about that time of year; it was in the fall of 1907, it was about October, it was in the fall of the year; witness saw Hughes around there several times—around in front of the store and in the streets; witness saw him off and on for some little time; witness is handed a card upon which is printed this language: "Notice: To the Miners of the Hitchman mine. There will be a mass meeting Friday evening at 6:30 p. m., at Nick Heil's Base Ball Grounds for the purpose of discussing the principals of organization. President William Green will be present. All miners are cordially invited to attend," is asked to state what, if anything, he knows about that card, and replied: "Well, that card I took down off of a telephone pole, I believe after Mr. Hughes had tacked it up there, and I made that memorandum on there." The memorandum on the card is "9th 19, '07. RGA." my initials; that memorandum is in the handwriting of witness; witness made it on the card at the time he tore the card down; witness saw Hughes at different times.

515

At this point the following questions were asked, answers given and proceedings had:

Q. Did you see him put up this notice?
A. No, sir; I didn't see him put that one up.
Q. Did you see him put any notice up?
A. I did.
Q. What kind of notices were they?
A. Well, I saw him put up the same kind of notices as this.
Q. The same kind?
A. Well, it might not be the same kind of a notice but it was a notice of that description—a notice of a meeting.

Mr. Gilchrist: I offer this card in evidence to be marked "Austin's Exhibit No. 1."

Mr. Hogg: And we object to that as we did to the others.

Q. I believe you stated that you did not see Hughes put that notice up?
A. No, sir; I did not see him put it up.

Mr. Hogg: Well, we object.

Upon further direct examination the witness, Austin, was asked to look at the card handed him upon which appears in black stencil the following: "Notice. A meeting for Hitchman's miners at 6:30 p. m., Friday, Sept. 27, Pres. Green will be there," is asked to look at the card and state what, if anything, he knows about it, and replies that he remembers of Hughes sticking up such notices—remembers of Hughes putting up such notices as that; saw Hughes put up that notice, thinks he saw him, or one just like it.

516

At this point the following proceedings were had:

Mr. Gilchrist: I offer this card in evidence to be marked "Austin's Exhibit No. 2."

(Objected to by counsel for served defendants.)

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Austin, said: Witness could not tell what relation the Western Supply Company sustains towards the Hitchman Coal Company; the Western Supply Company furnishes supplies to the employes of the Hitchman Coal Company, it sells them goods; the bill or account for the goods is not rendered to the Hitchman Company, the men patronize the store and some of them pay cash; the Western Supply Company issues a coupon to the miner—to the employes—redeemable in goods; the Hitchman Coal Company pays the Western Supply Company for the coupons that it issues; the Western Supply Company does a pretty big business with the Hitchman Coal Company along that line—a pretty good business; it has been doing that kind of business with the Hitchman Coal Company ever since witness has been there; witness has been there about six years; cannot approximate the extent of that business with the Hitchman Coal Company; it amounts to a considerable sum during the year—it is quite a business; witness is intimately acquainted with the superintendent, Mr. Koch, and also with Mr. Hitchman.

At this point the witness, Austin, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. I believe you stated in your examination in chief that you saw Mr. Hughes in front of your store, or on the streets, in October, 1907?

A. Well, I am not certain about its being in October but it was around that time. It might have been September, or some other month; I do not just remember the month.

Q. Exhibit 1, filed with your deposition, marked "Notice," you tore down from a telephone pole?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you say that you did not see Mr. Hughes tack this notice on the pole?

A. Not that particular notice.

517 Q. You did not see him do that?

A. No, sir.

Q. At whose instance did you preserve this document?

A. At Mr. Koch's.

Q. At whose instance did you tear it down?

A. At his.

Q. Now, taking Exhibit No. 2 that you have spoken of, this seems to have been nailed or hung up somewhere. Where did you discover that?

A. Well, I think that was hung on a telephone pole.

Q. To a hook or nail?

A. Well, I could not say.

Q. Well, how long had it been there before you lifted it off of the hook or nail?
A. I did not lift that one off.
Q. Well, how do you come to identify it?
A. I saw another fellow lift it off.
Q. Who was that other fellow?
A. Mr. Knapp.
Q. Who is Mr. Knapp?
A. He is the electrician of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company.
Q. He is in the employ of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, is he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did he hand that to you?
A. No, sir.
Q. When that was lifted off by Mr. Knapp, what did he do with it?
A. Well, he took it in the office, I think; I do not remember.
Q. In the office of the Western Supply Company?
A. No; of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company.
Q. After it went into the office of the Hitchman company did you go on a mission of inspection?
A. No, sir; I did not even see him take it in the office; I just saw him take it and go around the corner with it.
Q. Now, about when was that?
A. It was in the fall of the year.
Q. In 1907?
A. I think it was around in September or October, 1907.
Q. Was it on the same pole that you discovered the notice that you took down?
A. No, sir.
Q. Well, then, you have not seen the notice to inspect it, until to-day, have you?
A. No, sir; not that I know of.
Q. Well, can you swear, then, that that notice that was handed to you by Mr. Gilchrist is the same notice that you saw Mr. Knapp lift off of the hook or nail?
A. No, sir.
Q. And you don't do it?
A. No, sir.

(End of Cross examination.)

518 M. C. KNAPP.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness, M. C. Knapp, said: My name is Martin C. Knapp; age, 39; residence, McMechen, West Virginia; occupation, master mechanic of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; has worked for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company—it will be eight years the 16th day of next October; witness has seen Thomas Hughes; talked with him; first saw him to know him in the private driveway of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company; with reference to the mine that driveway is laid direct from the street back to the mine, passing the store of the Western Supply Company.

At this point the witness, Knapp, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Well, what was the occasion of your conversation with Hughes?

A. I took down a notice that was hung on an electric light pole, I think, and started around into the office, and Mr. Hughes approached me and stopped me just as I got in off of the street, in the private driveway.

Q. What, if anything, did he say when he stopped you?

A. Well, he said things that I do not suppose it would be proper for me to speak here.

Q. Well, yes, it is proper.

A. He attacked me very maliciously and vigorously; he was very mad.

Q. What, if anything, did he say to you?

A. He asked what I took down the notice for and the way he spoke it, of course, I replied by saying no, and asked him what it was to him—that I didn't know him—and he told me what it was to him; he told me who he was and what he put it there for.

Q. Well, what did he say on that subject?

A. He said his name was Thomas Hughes; that he was a gentleman from the south and that he was there for the purpose of organizing the Hitchman miners, and had put that notice up. That he had put the notice up, if I remember right, and that he did not intend it to be interfered with by such fellows as myself. I told him I did not know as I was interfering with his business; that I was not taking much interest in his business at all; and I cannot recollect whether that was all or not; I may think of something else. Anyway, he said he would settle with me later—that he would 519 see me—and I replied to him that that was all right; he could do that; that he was on private property and to get out of the alley.

Q. Did he get out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Look at the card I now hand you, which is marked "Austin's Exhibit No. 2" and state what, if anything, you know about that?

A. To the best of my recollection that is the notice that I took down off of the electric pole.

Q. What did you do with it after you took it down?

A. I took it into the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company's office.

Q. Is this the notice, then, that Hughes referred to?

A. I would say that this is the notice.

Q. As his having put up and objecting to your having taken down?

A. Yes, sir.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Knapp, said: This private driveway leads by the Western Supply Company's store and on back to the mines; it is a wagon-way—a paved road; it is used by the people there in going over to the office and over to the mine, but not in going over to the store; it is paved with brick; is about fourteen feet, probably—fourteen or sixteen feet in width; witness met Hughes in the alley or in the private driveway, in daylight; Hughes hollowed in the first place and drew my attention, and witness stopped until Hughes came up to him, and when Hughes came up Hughes wanted to know why witness had taken down that notice; witness got that notice off of an electric light pole close to the store; that electric light pole did not belong to witness, but witness knows to whom the pole did belong; it was about noon when witness took the notice down; could not say how long the notice had been there; witness did not see Hughes put it up.

At this point the witness, Knapp, was asked and answered questions, as follows:

Q. It made you furious when you saw that notice?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you take hold of it gently or did you life it down pretty viciously?
A. I lifted it down gently.
Q. Well, you say that he attacked you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was it with language that he attacked you or with blows?
A. With language.
520 Q. Well, you are not afraid of words, are you?
A. No, but I squared myself just the same.
Q. Then you attacked him, did you?
A. No, sir; I did not.
Q. What I meant was with language—you attacked him with language?
A. Yes, sir; when I got a change to say anything.
Q. You sent back the same kind of a blow that he gave you?
A. Yes, sir; when I got a chance.
Q. He did not like it because you took down the notice?
A. No, sir.
Q. And you didn't like it because he found fault with you for taking it down?
A. I didn't like it because he attacked me in such a way that it was insulting.
Q. It was his language that insulted you?
A. Yes, sir; his abusive language.
Q. You did not feel that you had done just the right thing by taking his notice down?
A. I did not feel that I had done any particular wrong.
Q. You did not feel you had inflicted a loss or injury, but didn't you think that you had not done exactly the right thing by taking down his notice, to be frank about it?
A. No; I do not know as I did.
Q. Are you in the habit of disturbing opportunities for free speech?

A. No, sir.
Q. You are a lover of that, are you?
Witness: Of what?
Mr. Hogg: Of free speech.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you take that notice immediately to the office when—you got it?
A. I did.
Q. Did you proclaim in a loud voice to Mr. Koch that you had the notice?
A. No, sir.
Q. How did you speak—gently to him?
A. I walked into the office and spoke to the clerk and told him there was a notice that I had taken off a pole.
Q. And then you handed it to him?
A. I either handed it to him or laid it down on the desk.
Q. Then did you go out?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you notice what he did with it?
A. No.
Q. Well, did you go there afterwards and inspect it?
A. No, sir.
521 Q. That was your notice, wasn't it, after you had taken it down off of the pole?
A. No; I had no use for it.
Q. Then you didn't go to inspect it?
A. No, sir.
Q. When did you next see that notice after you had stored it away in the office?
A. Here.
Q. Now, you say that that is the same notice after the lapse of all these years?
A. To the best of my recollection it is the same notice.
Q. You think it is the same notice?
A. Yes, sir; there is a word in that notice that is mis-pelled; I took particular notice of that before I took it down.
Q. What word is that?
A. "Hitchman."
Q. Then you think there is no doubt about it?
A. I think there is no doubt about it.
Q. Suppose there were other notices like it that had been put up and all mis-pelled, how would that enable you then to identify it, having two or three like it?
A. It could have been possible if there had been any other notice like that, but not likely. That was hung on the pole by a string.
Q. How high up was it on the pole?
A. I could not tell you; I did not measure the distance; I do not know.
Q. Could you reach it conveniently, or did you have to get up on something?
A. No; I reached it conveniently.

(End of Cross Examination.)

Redirect examination:

On re-direct examination the witness, Knapp, was asked and answered questions, as follows:

Q. On your cross examination you said that the notice marked "Austin's Exhibit No. 2" contained one word misspelled. I hand you the notice and will ask you to state what the word is that attracted your attention as being misspelled?
A. "Hitchman."
Q. How is it spelled there?
A. It is spelled "H-i-c-h-m-a-n."
Q. And what is the correct way of spelling that name?
A. "H-i-t-c-h-m-a-n."

(End of Re-direct Examination.)

522 Recross-examination:

Upon re-cross examination the witness, Knapp, was asked and answered the following questions:

Q. Then, in giving that notice he did not notify the Hitchman Company but he notified the "Hichman" company?
A. I suppose he notified the "Hichman"; but I suppose it was intended for "Hitchman."
Q. Well, wouldn't it stand for "Hichman"?
A. Yes, sir.

(End of Recross Examination.)

JOHN H. SIVERT.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination, the witness, John H. Sivert, said: My name is John H. Sivert; age, 50; residence, McMechen, West Virginia; occupation, carpenter at the Hitchman coal works; has worked at the Hitchman coal wo/rks for about seven years last December; remembers the occasion of a strike at that mine in April, 1906; witness recalls the loading of coal from the bins at that mine on the engines of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company after April 16th, 1906, and before June 12th, 1906, that is loading coal on the contract that the company held for coaling engines at the bins; witness remembers that very distinctly.

At this point the witness, Sivert, was asked and answered the following questions:

Q. How was that coal delivered at the mine and how was it gotten into the bins from the railroad cars?

A. We have a siding where the empty cars are put on the B. & O. above the tipple preparatory to loading at the Hitchman tipple. The coal was supposedly brought from Fairmont and put upon this siding —loaded cars instead of empties at this time—and there is a trestle that spans McMechen Run, and by means of this trestle that is somewhere from 15 to 18 feet high, we took the coal over it. We had chutes put in that trestle—two chu-es—leading down to a temporary track that we laid from these chutes up into the Hitchman yards. There is a little stationary engine up there and by means of that engine and a cable we would pull two cars at a time from these 523 chutes up into the yard. There we laid a temporary track over the mouth of the mine, bringing it out to intersect the main track coming out of the mine, and the cars were brought into the yard and were switched up onto that track over the mouth of the mine and pushed by hand to the main track of the mine where they were put on the cable and taken to the bins as usually or as regularly brought out of the mines.

Q. From that bin, then, that coal was loaded into engines as fuel?

A. Yes, sir; that was the purpose of putting that in there—to coal the B. & O. engines.

Q. Did you see any shipping cards on any of the railroad cars which would indicate to you where any of the coal came from that was thus hauled in by the railroad company and then hauled up by the mine officials and put into the bin, and thence into the engines of the railroad company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you now recall what was on any of those cards, I wish you would state it.

A. Well, there was several kinds; but there was coal put in there that I could almost positively swear was not Fairmont coal, judging by the coal itself; but there was one special time that there was a drag of about six or seven cars put in there that were filled with Wheeling Creek mine coal.

Q. Where is the Wheeling Creek mine?

A. It is back of Bridgeport; I have never just been at the mine, but it is supposed to be in Ohio.

Q. Bridgeport, Ohio?

A. Yes, sir; I remember that very distinctly—about the drag.

Q. Do you know whether that mine belongs to the Lorain Coal & Dock Company?

A. I do not know positively and did not at the time. The only thing that impressed me was that we were waiting. It was awful late in the evening and it was quite a job for us to keep any coal in these bins whatever at that time, owing to the conditions we had to work under, and we had to wait almost all the afternoon on coal, and it came over awful late in the evening, and the railroad men that were to handle it said that they would have to wait until the C. L. & W. came in to get the coal. That is what rather aroused my suspicions at the time—why we would have to wait for coal to come on that road; and when it came over I noticed particularly the first car and I could see the way-bill, "Wheeling Creek Mine." I could not see all of them distinctly at the same time. It was getting dark and where I was loading—I was below the track attending to our pit wagons, loading them from the chutes and sending them 524 up. The track the coal was put in on was above me and ran parallel. I would be looking facing the first car and the others from me I would be looking glancing along the side. It was just a card with printing on it and it would look like one black streak, and that is why I could not say positively that they were all billed that way. The one in front of me I could see plainly and the others, I was looking glancing at. It was getting dark at the time.

Q. In appearance what would those cards look like compared with the one that you read?

A. They would look like the same cards.

Q. The Wheeling Creek mine over at Bridgeport was a union mine, was it?

A. I could not say positively for I had never given very much attention to any of the different mines. I do not know anything about unions or strikes or anything of the sort. I never have been implicated in anything of the kind and haven't taxed my mind about what were union mines and what non-union.

Q. You are not a member of the United Mine Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever a member of that organization?

A. I never was.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Sivert, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Mr. Sivert, how often would you be down there when that coal was brought in—every day?

A. Yes, sir; and sometimes into the night at twelve o'clock.

Q. You remained there, then, during the whole day, did you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that system was in use between the 16th of April and the 6th of June, as you stated in your answer to Mr. Gilchrist. That is right, is it not?

A. Well, it was along about that time. We had two hitches at it and the dates I cannot give positively.

Q. You answered in response to Mr. Gilchrist's question that it was between the 16th of April and the 12th day of June. Is that correct—that answer that you gave?

A. Well, I guess I did answer it in that way, but I would not say positively about the starting date or any future date.

Q. Anyhow you were there?

A. Yes, sir.

525 Q. You said also in your answer that the coal was supposedly delivered from the Fairmont mines?

A. That was my understanding.

Q. But on this occasion that you speak of when the C. L. & W. train came in was the day you saw these seven cars?

A. I would say six and I — almost positive there were seven of them.

Q. And on one of them, although it was getting dark, you could see distinctly enough to read the card on the car?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you recollect the language on the card?

A. Oh, not positively, no; for I did not tax my mind or memory with it, not knowing that I would ever be called upon to testify about it.

Q. Did you see "Wheeling Creek Coal Company" on it?

A. Well, now, it was "Wheeling Creek Coal Company," or "Coal Mine," or something of that sort; I would not say positively about that.

Q. That was the only one you read. You saw cards on the other five or six but did not read them.

A. Yes, sir; and the only thing that called my attention to it was that we were not working and somebody else was putting their coal there. That is about the only thing that caused me to take notice to it at the time.

Q. Who brought that coal in there?

A. I do not know who they were; they were railroaders.

Q. Who ordered it?

A. I do not know anything about that; I didn't.

Q. Do you know who put those cards on those cars and when and where they were put on?

Witness: These coal cars?

Mr. Hogg: Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. What sort of looking cars were they—about what size?

A. They were steel hoppers.

Q. Then they were pinned on there, were they?

Witness: What was pinned on?

Mr. Hogg: The sign, "Wheeling Creek Coal Company."

A. No, sir; they were on paper bills.

Q. What kind of paper was it? Was it a post-card, or tag-card, or what sort of a card?

A. It was not a post-card; it was just a square card.

526 Q. Do you recollect how it was fastened on?

A. It was tacked on.

Q. You do not know how long it had been there?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, do you know, Mr. Sivert, that railroad cars go from line to line and from place to place?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course you do not know how long that card had been on there? You do not know anything about that?

A. No; I do not know how long it had been on there but there were no others.

Q. That is the only one you saw of that kind during the time that you were there?

A. Yes, sir; on that car.

Q. Well, what other card like that, then, did you see? You did not state you had seen any more.

A. I could see them on the other cars but not to read them distinctly.

Q. You do not know what was on the other cards?

A. Well, I could not say positively about that but they looked similar.

Q. Do you know whether the Wheeling Creek Coal Mine was working at that time? Was it in operation?

A. No, sir; I do not know.

Q. Don't you know there was a strike on in Ohio at the same time, among the coal miners?

A. No, sir; not particularly.

Q. Well, if they were on a strike at that time and the Wheeling Creek Coal Company was in that strike, you would not get very much coal from that mine, would you?

A. I do not know anything about that.

(End of Cross Examination.)

JOHN MOONEY.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness, John Mooney, said: My name is John Mooney; age, fifty-six; residence, McMechen; occupation, track foreman; was track foreman for the B. & O. at Grafton, Benwood, Wheeling and Glovers Gap; was track foreman for the B. & O. about eighteen or twenty years; witness works now at the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company at Benwood; has worked for that company about eight or nine years; remembers the occasion of the 1906 strike at that mine; witness was there; he was working for the Hitchman Company.

527 At this point the witness was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. During the time the mine was shut down on account of the strike, do you remember whether any coal was loaded out of the bins of the company into engines of the B. & O.?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What coal was loaded into the bins during that strike and how did it come about?

Witness: You mean that was unloaded off of the side track?

Mr. Gilchrist: I want you to explain what you know about the getting of the coal into the bins when the mine was idle?

A. Well, the coal was backed in on the side track and shoved up there of a day time and at night, whenever we needed it, or whenever we ran out; and I was on top there and unloaded the coal. I dropped the drops out so the coal would run out of the car into the bin.

Q. Now, when the coal ran out of the hopper car it would run down into what?

A. Into a chute where they loaded the coal cars or mine cars.

Q. And then when the coal was loaded into the mine cars, what was done with the mine cars?

A. They were hoisted up and two more empties were put in the place of those that were loaded.

Q. Now, those loaded coal cars were hoisted up where?

A. They were hoisted up on the top and then shoved over with the motor to the bin to coal the engines.

Q. On the track of the trestle?

A. Yes, sir; on the trestle over to the bins where they coal the engines.

Q. Where are the bins with respect to the round house?

A. The bins are right along side of the round house.

Q. On what railroad were these cars of coal brought to the mine?

A. They were shoved in off of the B. & O. road for awhile—that is from the main line—and some of them came from over on the C. L. & W.

Q. Do you remember seeing any loaded cars of coal brought in by the B. & O. from the C. L. & W. line?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were any of those loaded cars, filled with coal, emptied by you?

A. Yes, sir; they were all emptied by me.

Q. And that coal so emptied was reloaded into the mine coal cars and put on the tipple and thence into the bin?

A. Yes, sir.

528 Q. And was that coal then fed to the engines of the B. & O. from the bins?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you at any time see any signs or cards on any of the cars which would indicate where the coal came from?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what you now recollect about that?

A. The cards on the cars were from the Lorain Coal & Dock Company.

Q. You mean, do you, that the coal was shipped by the Lorain Coal & Dock Company?

A. Yes, sir; that is where they told me they came from.

Q. And that is what the cards indicated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where does the Lorain Coal & Dock Company do business?

A. Over at Bridgeport, or out that way, in Ohio.

Q. Do you know the name of any one of their mines?

A. No sir; I do not.

Q. What did you do when when you observed that the cards were Lorain Coal & Dock Company cards?

A. Well, sir, I pulled some of them off and threw one of them down for Mr. Sivert and the other fellows to read; and as to the others, some I pulled off and some I didn't; and I told some of the fellows around there how awful strange it was—(interrupted).

Mr. Hogg: Don't tell what you told anybody.

Mr. Gilchrist: Just tell what you did. What did you do with the cards?

A. I took and threw one of them down that Mr. Sivert or some one tore off.

Q. Well, did you say anything about that Ohio coal to the men working about the mines who were on a strike?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were some of them around the mine still, were there?

A. Yes, sir; there were one or two.

Q. Do you recollect having told any particular person?
A. Yes, sir; I told two.
Q. If you now recollect, who was it you told?
A. John Oliver was one and Mr. Sivert was another.
Q. Can you fix the date or the time when you saw this coal that was contained in these Lorain Coal & Dock Company cars, there?
A. It was the 22nd day of June.
Q. The 22nd day of June?
A. Of May, I mean.
Q. How do you fix the date as the 22nd day of May?
A. By the B. & O. ice house burning down that day. It
529 burned that evening when we were sitting there waiting for the cars to come.
Q. And where was the B. & O. ice house?
A. Well, sir, I expect it was about four or five hundred yards, or may be a little farther than that, from where we were sitting there.
Q. What did you do at the time the ice house was burning?
A. We went down there and helped to fight the fire—all of us; helped to put out the fire.
Q. Did you go alone or was any one with you?
A. All of us went together down there.
Q. You say you were working there with some other people at that time unloading this car and having it loaded to the mine cars?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you recall who else was about there and working on the same job?
A. Yes, sir; Mr. Sivert was there.
Q. Mr. John Sivert?
A. Yes, sir; and Frank Goodwin was there and William Hawkins was there.
Q. Can you tell No. 8 coal from its appearance when it is being unloaded from a hopper car? Can you tell that as distinguished from Fairmont coal?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How can you do that?
A. Well, sir the Fairmont coal will run out a heap easier—out of the car—then No. 8. That is, No. 8 will stick on account of the slack; there is so much slack in it.
Q. In unloading this coal from these cars which contained coal shipped from the Lorain Coal & Dock Company's mines did you notice whether the coal was Fairmont coal or whether it was No. 8 coal?
A. Yes, sir; it was No. 8 coal.
Q. And what peculiar distinguishing feature did you observe in that coal which led you to the conclusion that it was No. 8 coal and that it was not Fairmont coal?
A. Well, sir; there are streaks in it, of this slate, and then there is a bottom coal that is mixed amongst it about three or four inches thick, I expect. The Fairmont coal hasn't got any of that in it, or I never came across any—not big lumps like that.

Q. From your recollection now, of the coal that was supplied to the engines of the B. & O., out of the bins of the Hitchman mine during that strike, and after May 22nd, 1906, what could you say as to the character of the coal that was furnished by the B. & O. and loaded in the manner you have stated, up over the tipple and into the bin?

A. Well, sir, there were three different kinds of coal unloaded there.

Q. What kinds of coal, then?

A. There was Fairmont coal, there was No. 8 coal and there was one car of blacksmith's coal that was backed in there—Piedmont coal.

530 Q. So that there was some Fairmont coal, and then there was one car of Piedmont coal, and the balance was No. 8 coal?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. After May 22nd, 1907, in the supply of this coal used in this manner, what coal predominated? You have stated that there was Fairmont coal, that there was one car of Piedmont coal, and that the balance was No. 8 coal. Now, what was the proportion, as nearly as you recollect?

A. Well, I expect there was more—there was an awful sight of Fairmont coal and there was a lot of No. 8 coal put off there, too; I could not tell you how much.

Q. After April 16th, 1906, how soon did this loading process start?

A. Well, I could not tell; it was not very long after the mine had stopped that we had to lay track.

Q. That is, you had to lay a temporary track?

A. Yes, sir; a temporary track to haul the coal over?

Q. To arrange to haul the coal up on the trestle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But after that time the coal was shipped in, then, was it, and hauled up over the trestle and into the bins, and thence into the engines, until the mine resumed operation June 12th, 1906.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you think that during that entire time there probably was more Fairmont coal than there was No. 8 coal?

A. Well, there was a lot of No. 8 coal. There was not very much difference, I do not think, between the two. There may have been more Fairmont coal than there was of the rest.

Q. May 22, 1906, was the first day that you remember now of having seen the No. 8 coal from the Lorain Coal & Dock Company's mines. Is that what I understand you to say?

A. Yes, sir; but then if it had not been for it being so late, I would not have noticed that very much, I guess. It was awful late and we had between six and eight cars to unload,and whe hadn't had any coal since eleven o'clock, I think, and we did not get started until half past four or five and of course that would throw us until about ten or eleven o'clock at night getting done.

Q. Your attention then was directed to the origin of the shipments owing to the fact that you had had to wait so long?

A. Yes, sir; and I asked the conductor what kept them so long, and what was the matter that they didn't get the coal over sooner, and he said he had to go over to the C. L. & W. and wait until the C. L. & W. local fetched the coal in before they could get it.

531 Q. And that was said with reference to this coal which you say you unloaded on May 22nd, 1906?

A. Yes, sir.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Mooney, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Your hearing is bad, isn't it?
A. Yes, sir; a little.
Q. You don't know of your own knowledge where any of this coal came from, do you?
A. Only by the cards on the cars.
Q. I know; but you did not see where it came from? You did not see it loaded into the cars?
A. No, sir; I did not see it loaded into the cars at all.
Q. You do not know what mine this No. 8 coal came from?
A. No, sir; I do not know which mine.
Q. You saw some cards tacked on there marked, "Lorain Coal & Dock Company."
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How large was the card?
A. I expect it was eight inches long, may be, or it might have been a foot.
Q. How wide was it?
A. About six or eight inches.
Q. Were the words in printing or in hand writing?
A. They were printed.
Q. They were printed with black letters?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was it a white cardboard or was it yellow?
A. It was a white cardboard.
Q. Did you notice to what railroad company the cars belonged?
A. To the B. & O. Railroad Company.
Q. Were they marked B. & O.?
A. Yes, sir.

(End of Cross Examination.)

J. W. LOGSTON.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness, J. W. Logston, said: My name is J. W. Longston; age, fifty-two when my next birthday comes; residence, McMechen; occupation, coal miner; works at the Hitchman mine; has worked at the Hitchman mine about eight years; was working there when the mine was unionized in 532 1903; cannot just recollect how the mine came to be unionized then; recollects that there were men there in the pit talking to the men about joining the union; they were employes at the same time; after the mine was unionized those men quit and went away; after the mine was unionized the men came out for awhile; witness would not say for certain how long they were out before they went back to work again; witness says that the way he understood that strike was for the company to recognize the union; witness cannot remember any strikes after the company recognized the union; witness mined coal at the Hitchman mine on a run-of-mine basis; witness mined coal there on an average basis; the basis now used there is run-of-mine; the run-of-mine basis was the best method for witness to make money under; run-of-mine was better than the average basis.

At this point the witness was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Do you remember Thomas Hughes?

A. Well, I never knew the man's name.

Q. Do you remember of a man being about the Hitchman mine along in September and October of 1907, trying to organize the mine?

A. I remember once going out of the pit and going home. I was going across the bridge right below the Hitchman Coal Company's coal mine, and there was a fellow caught up with me right there by the bridge and I talked to him as we walked down the street until we came to Third Street, and he asked me if I would not sooner it would be a union mine than the way it was run, and I told him I did not know whether I would or not. Then he wanted to know if I would not go back in it again and I told him if he got the rest of the men, that I was willing; and he said something about that he thought it would not be hard to get the balance of the men; and that is all I remember about his saying.

Q. Did he offer you any union card?

A. Well, there was something said, I believe, about if I would go back into the union, and I happened to lose my job, he said there would be no trouble in getting a job at other union mines and he would give me a card to that effect.

Q. Did he say anything about you—about paying any money to him?

A. I did not hear him say anything about money that I recall.

(End of Direct Examination.)

533 Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Logston, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Mr. Logston, is your hearing bad?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hogg: Well, I will get up close so I can make myself understood.

Q. Now, you spoke about two scales—the run-of-mine and the average scale?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is right is it? I understood you right, did I?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, that run-of-mine coal applies to engine coal, does it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Of course the other coal is commercial coal—the screened coal—is it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, now, how long have you been on the average basis?
A. I cannot say for certain how long it was an average basis.
Q. Well, you recollect when you started up non-union in 1906, do you? You were there, were you, at that time—the second time when you started up non-union?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When you started up then non-union in 1906 did you start up on an average basis, or was it a straight run-of-mine basis? Which was it when you started up the second time, when you ran non-union in 1906?
A. I can't remember now.
Q. What are you on now?
A. On a run-of-mine basis.
Q. About how long have you been on that basis?
A. Well, I cannot tell you that.
Q. Do you recollect what you get for run-of-mine basis—how much your pay is?
Witness: Per ton?
Mr. Hogg: Yes.
A. Thirty-two and one-half cents, I believe.
Q. Thirty-two and one-half cents for run-of-mine basis?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, do you recollect how long that has been in force—that 32½ cents?
A. I cannot remember.
Q. For sometime, has it?
A. Yes, sir.

(End of Direct Examination.)

534 HERMAN A. HUNDT.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness, Herman A. Hundt, said: My name is Herman A. Hundt; age, thirty-four; residence, Wheeling, West Virginia; occupation, attorney at law; does some stenographic work once in awhile; had occasion to go to Benwood on Friday evening, September 27th, 1907.

At this point the witness, Hundt, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. What was the occasion of your going to Benwood at that time?

A. Well, Mr. Lewis Walters, one of the court reporters of Ohio county, asked me to go down there in his place, stating that he had another engagement and could not fill that one, and I told him I would go. I was instructed to go down to Benwood that evening of September 27th, to report the proceedings of a meeting that was to be held that evening near the Hitchman coal mine. So I went down there that evening. I left home about six o'clock and got down there about half past six. I walked back and forth from Nick Heil's place where there is a base ball field and where the meeting was supposed to be held. I did not see anybody there—and there was no platform or anything—so I walked down Marshall Street toward McMechen in a southerly direction, and toward the Hitchman coal mine. I got down that far and I did not see anybody around there so I just loafed around and walked back and forth on that street. There was at that time two saloons there—one of them run by a man by the name of Wilhelm, and the other by some foreigner whose name I have forgotten. I heard people inside and I walked in to see who was in there and what they were talking about. There were several people in there. I was there just a few minutes and then came out and loafed around until about eight o'clock. It was about dusk then and I did not see anybody. Then I went to the Hitchman plant to see Mr. Koch, to see what was to be done, and while talking with Mr. Koch and reporting what I had done, Mr. E. C. Pickett came in and said that Mr. Green, Mr. Zelenka and Mr. Hughes were on the outside. I walked up past them and stood around waiting to see what was to be done there and whether they intended to hold the meeting, so that I could report it. It was kind of dark and I did not think they would hold the meeting, so I slipped back to the Hitchman office and told them I did not think the meeting would be held, 535 but in all probability they would go up on a car. They were standing in two groups, I expect between sixty and one hundred feet north of the Hitchman mine, or rather the Western Supply Company's store. There were two groups of men conversing there. I passed them but they were speaking in such a low tone that I could not catch what they said. I stood around there for a little time and then made arrangements to board the same car that they would return to Wheeling on. After a time Mr. Pickett came up on the car and these same gentlemen were on that car. While they were standing on Marshall Street it was a little dark where they were standing and I could not see who they were; that is, I could not see their faces very distinctly; so when we got on the car—Mr. Pickett got on the car and those Moundsville cars are rather lengthy—and these gentlemen sat in the rear end and Mr. Pickett and myself went in the front vestibule. While up there he pointed the three men out to me—that is, he pointed out who was who and gave me their names—Green, Zelenka and Hughes—and there was a fourth, but I do not know who he was.

Q. As you came by the crowds you have spoken of, did you see these persons you have named in those crowds?

A. Yes, sir. Well, I could not say that they were crowds, exactly; I would say there were not more than six in one bunch and then a few feet away there were six more, and in those two bunches were Green, Zelenka and Hughes. Green was pointed out to me. He wore a light suit that evening and a derby hat, and he had a scar on the left side of his nose. Zelenka was a tall fellow and inclined to be stout. He wore a dark suit of clothes. Hughes was a young man and thin, and had on a dark suit of clothes.

Q. And the other man? Do you recollect what he looked like?

A. He was a man built about the same as Mr. Hughes; he was a young fellow.

Q. Would you know Mr. Zelenka if you were to see him again?

A. I think I would.

Q. Will you look around the court room here and see if you can recognize him?

A. That is the gentleman back there with a blue necktie on.

Q. That gentleman who just smiled at you?

A. Yes, sir; he is smiling now.

(End of Direct Examination.)

No Cross Examination.

536 ROBERT MYERS.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination, the witness, Robert Meyers, said: My name is Robert Myers; born in 1871; residence, Glendale; occupation, coal miner; has mined coal for eleven years; has been mining coal in different mines in Pennsylvania and West Virginia; has not mined coal in Ohio; tried for work there but could not get work; did belong to the United Mine Workers of America; is not now a member of that organization; is now working at the Hitchman mine; has worked here going on seven years; remembers the occasion of the 1906 strike at that mine; was working at that mine at that time; has done work at the Glendale mine; worked there about three months before the strike came on in 1906; the national strike of 1906 was called April 1st; the mines generally closed down at that time; the Glendale mine closed down then; witness was working at that time at the Glendale mine; that was not his permanent place of work at that time; was working there just temporarily at that time to do some repair work; witness was at time really in the employ of the Hitchman company; he nad been sent down from the Hitchman mine to the Glendale mine to do some work, and while he was working at the Glendale mine doing that work this strike of April 1st, 1906 came about; when the Glendale mine shut down on April 1st, 1906, witness did not go back to the Hitchman mine.

At this point the witness, Myers, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Why was that?

A. I was trying to go and went up again while the Hitchman mine was working ahead, and there was a good many Americans there and they called me a "black sheep" and I didn't work.

Q. Was the Hitchman mine running at that time?

A. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did they say you would be a "black sheep" if you were to go to work?

A. Well, of course I worked at Glendale at that time.

Q. They claimbed that you were working at Glendale?

A. Yes, sir; I explained it to them but they would not know and even did not care about what my explanation was.

Q. Now what was the Hitchman mine doing—running at that time—if you know?

A. Well, after the first of April they worked fourteen days ahead before they closed down.

537 Q. What did the men at that time during those fourteen days do?

A. They loaded engine coal.

Q. And the objection, then, was made to your working because he would be a "scab" if he worked at the Hitchman mine?

A. I suppose that they thought I was.

Q. So you didn't want to be a "scab" and you did not go to work?

A. No, sir.

Q. At that time were you a married man?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any family.

A. Yes, sir; three children.

Q. Did you own any property?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it paid for?

A. No, sir; I had just started to pay for it.

Q. That is, you had just recently bought the property?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had made a partial payment on it, had you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And owed the balance?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The mine was idle from April 16th, 1906, to June 12th, 1906. What did you do during that time?

A. I did some work around about the house—some repair work.

Q. Where was your house, Mr. Myers?

A. At Glendale.

Q. Did you have any land with it of any amount?

A. Well, Mr. Koch allowed me to have some of his land to raise some garden stuff on.

Q. And you put in your time about the house and your place?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you managed to exist during the time that you were idle and kept out of work by reason of the strike?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. While you were in the union—you call it the union, do you—the United Mine Workers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. While you were in the union was any of your money taken off of you in order to pay officials?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall about how much they got from you?

A. I cannot remember how much but I remember of between twenty-five and fifty cents dues. It was not the same money always and I cannot remember; I do not know how much it was.

Q. You had dues and then you had assessments, did you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the money was checked off by the company and you got the balance of what you earned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you understand would be the action of the union when you got out of work—on a strike—with reference to 538 money?

—. My understanding was that the union would be willing to help a man out if he was out of work, while he remained idle.

Q. And was that the reason that you were perfectly satisfied to have your money retained and paid to the union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, during this strike of 1906, were any benefits (they call them benefits) due you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were those benefits paid to you or not?

A. Yes, sir; I got some of them, but they belonged to our own local there in Glendale.

Q. Let me see if I understand you: How much did you get?

A. Well, I cannot remember very good, but I believe it was between three and six dollars, and then they offered me three dollars of a store bill.

Q. The money that was paid you, that money was money that was in the local at Glendale, as I understand you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not, then, money that was paid to you by the officials of the union?

A. No.

Q. How did it come that they gave you from three to six dollars in money out of the Glendale's local funds when you were really a minor belonging to the Hitchman mine and only working temporarily at the Glendale mine?

A. Well, they sent a man to the Hitchman for my card two days before the strike came on.

Q. That is, your card as a member of the union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They sent from the Glendale local up to the Hitchman local to have your union card sent there from the Hitchman local to have your union card sent from the Hitch- — stand you to mean?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was a few days before the men came out where?

A. Out on a strike.

Q. On which strike?

A. Nineteen hundred and six.
Q. On April 1st, 1906?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. At Glendale?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So then they wanted to get your card from the Hitchman mine taken down to the Glendale mine a couple of days before the men would strike at the Glendale mine. Is that right?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was the card there, in fact, sent down?
A. Well, I do not know; I did not ask; the men of our own local told me they had my card; I told them it was not necessary 539 to get this card; that I would not stay at that time; that I was down on repair work.
Q. And you do not know, then, as a matter of fact, whether the card really was sent down?
A. No, sir; I do not.
Q. After the strike of April 1st, 1906, at the Glendale mine, then you were idle for fourteen days and you did not go back to the Hitchman mine because you would be called a "scab"?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And then when the Hitchman mine was closed down on the 16th of April, 1906, you did not work any more until June 12th, 1906?
A. No, sir.
Q. And that was when the mine resumed non-union?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you been working there ever since?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Has there been any labor trouble there? Have you hay any strikes?
A. Not yet.
Q. From June 12th, 1906, to this date, 1911?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you have any talk with a man by the name of Thomas Hughes?
A. I remember him; yes, sir.
Q. You remember a man by that name?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was he doing there—if he was about the Hitchman mine—if you recall?
A. Well, he explained to me that he was trying to organize the place again.
Q. What is that?
A. To organize the Hitchman coal miners again.
Q. What do you mean by "organizing"?
Q. To get us organized—organized back into the United Mine Workers of America.
Q. What did he say to you?
A. Well, he said it would be a very nice thing if we would go back again; and so he said if I would put my name down and give him fifty cents on a book (he did not show me the book, but said it had lots of names down on it of the Hitchman coal miners); he said if I would give him fifty cents I would be entitled to a union card to go any place and get a job, if the Hitchman company would fire me, and he would put my name down on his book.

Q. Did you give him the fifty cents?

A. No, sir.

Q. What did you say to him on that subject?

A. Well, I said I would not do anything like this; he might be a stranger and I did not know that he was the man that he said he was, and anyhow, I was awful careful in putting my name down to anything. He told me that he was a good friend of Mr.
540 Koch, and that Mr. Koch had nothing against having the place organized again. He said he was a friend of his and I made the remark that I would ask Mr. Koc*k* and see if it was so; and he said no; that was of no use, because he was telling me the truth.

Q. Did he show you any book?

A. No, sir; I was trying to see the names on the book but he would not show anything. He told me he had it and I asked him how many names was on it and he said he had abou*n*t enough to "crack off."

Q. What is that?

A. That is what I didn't understand.

Q. Did you ask him what he meant by "crack off"?

A. The time was too short; no, sir. I was waiting for my street car to go home on and I went on the car.

Q. Did you say anything to Hughes about the job that you then had at the Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what did you say, if you can recollect?

A. Well, I told him that I didn't care much about being organized again, because I had too much experience already how it goes. I told him I was in several strikes and there wasn't anybody that helped me out, and I had to beg the company to get my job back again after I lost my job.

Q. Did you say anything to him about having any property?

A. Yes, sir; I told him it was impossible for me to go any place else, because I could not walk around with my property on my back and hunt another job. I says, "I have work where I am now and as long as the company treats me as they are treating me I will not do anything against them that they didn't like to have."

Q. During that strike do you remember of seeing any official down near your home and talking with him?

A. Well, the rest of them said they was officials; I do not know that they were. I was trying to talk to one of them—or supposed to be one—and he gave me a very short answer. I was trying to find out what we were going to do—going to work or strike ahead again.

Q. Continue on a strike?

A. Yes, sir; we were on a strike that time about ten weeks.

Q. Did you say anything to them, or to that official, about coal being loaded on the engines up there that was shipped in from other places?

A. No, sir; I had no chance to say anything.

Q. He declined to talk to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know about that coal coming in from Ohio?

A. Yes, sir; that is the reason I was trying to find out what 541 we were going to do. I heard that the coal that the Hitchman coal company used on the engines was coming from places that was not on a strike and were in the strike district.

Q. If they were in the strike district, your meaning is that the coal came from some mine that was working in the district wherein the general strike still existed. Is that what you are trying to explain?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What section of country did you understand the coal had come from that you were trying to inquire about?

A. Well, from what I could find out they said the coal came over from Ohio.

Q. And at this very time you were being kept out of work by the officials of the United Mine Workers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now allowing the men to go to work again?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what you were trying to inquire about?

A. Yes, sir.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Myers, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. You didn't see for yourself where this coal came from, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You simply heard about it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Hughes told you he thought it would be a nice thing for you to join the union, did he?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that he would give you a card to get employment elsewhere?

A. Well, he did not say he would give me a card; he said if my name was on the book he had that it would be just as good as if I had a card.

Q. And you told him that you could not very well work any place else because you had property there that you had to pay for?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was about the extent of your conversation with him, was it, as near as you recollect?

A. I do not know what you mean by that, sir.

Q. About as much as you talked to him—what you have stated here. You did not have anything more to say to him, did you?

A. Well, we had a good deal of talk; I cannot remember all he said.

Q. You were talking in a friendly way, were you, about it?

A. Yes, sir.

542 Q. And you were waiting to go up home on a street car when you had this talk?

A. Yes, sir; but he was trying to speak to me about it two or three times before and I was always anxious to get home; I was waiting for the car and he he never got got a chance to talk to me before.

Q. Do you know when this was?

A. I believe it was in 1907, or something like that.

Q. What time in 1907?

A. I do not know exactly; it was in the summer time.

Q. Now you spoke about getting six dollars in money. What man or person paid you that?

A. Well, I got it from an old man named Mr. Summers. He died. He used to be secretary of our local in Glendale.

Q. Who gave you the three dollars to get the store goods—the three dollar order?

A. No, sir; he gave me the cash money.

Q. But I am asking you who gave you the three dollar order?

A. That was Mr. Summers.

Q. Do you recollect what store that was on?

A. No, sir; I don't do the dealing; my wife does that, and she got the order and told me after all that she could not use that order.

Q. She told you that she could not use it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who had signed the order?

A. I believe I was not at home when she got the order. Some of my friends signed the order—that is, the order for me.

Q. Did you see anybody representing the United Mine Workers in Sub-District 5 of District 6, about that time? Did they come to you?

A. Only one of them came to me. I heard that he was a member of the United Mine Workers of America. That was my understanding. I asked who it was and they told me it was one of our officials.

Q. And you say you got nothing at all from them—neither money nor orders?

A. I do not know who the order came from. I got money twice in cash from our own local in Glendale. You misunderstood: I got this money from our own local in Glendale, and then the order, I do not know who gave it to me.

Q. You do not know where the money came from except what you were told—that it came from your local?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is that right?

A. Well, the money I had twice was from our own local but where it came from I do not know, as I told you. They did not tell me where it came from.

(End of Cross Examination.)

543 B. C. ROWAND (Recalled).

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness, B. C. Rowand, recalled, was asked and answered questions, as follows:

Q. Mr. Rowand, at the time of the 1906 strike at the Hitchman mine, were you on any committee of the men employed at that mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you and any of your committee have any dealings with Mr. T. L. Lewis respecting continuing work at the mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go to Mr. Lewis's house?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know Mr. Lewis, do you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He here in this court room?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is now there in the court room?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall in that conversation between Mr. Lewis and the committee, at Mr. Lewis's house, whether anything was said about loading engine coal at the Hitchman mine pending the settlement of a scale for the national organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As nearly as you now recollect I wish you would state what was the substance of what was said at that time?

A. A committee of four of us went over to Mr. Lewis's home and told him that the company was willing to sign up the 1903 scale, and we would like to have the privilege of going ahead and loading the coal for the engines, pending a settlement, and that they agreed to pay us the 1903 scale; and we explained to him that if they gave us an advance that the company would pay us, but he would not let us go to work; he would not give us the privilege.

Q. Was that visit before or after the mine was shut down?

A. As near as I can recollect now the mine worked one day after that. We were at Mr. Lewis's house on Sunday and the mine ran the following Monday.

Q. So, then, it was just before going out on the strike of April 16th, 1906?

A. Yes, sir; just before that.

Q. Was anything said in that conversation about what might happen in case the mine was shut down and the company was unable to mine coal and furnish it to the engines of the B. & O.?

Witness: You mean at Mr. Lewis's house?

544 Mr. Gilchrist: Yes; was anything said in that conversation about that?

A. Why, yes, sir; I believe there was.

Q. What was it as nearly as you now recall?

A. I believe we tried to explain to Mr. Lewis if they shut down that the men would go ahead and work anyhow, for the company had said they would not recognize the union if they forced to shut their mine down.

Q. Well, was anything said in that same conversation upon the subject of the company loading other coal over the tipple that might be brought in by the railroad for engine use?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What, as you now recall, was that conversation, in substance?

A. As near as I can remember we told him if we did not load that coal somebody else would, and that it would come from the Fairmont field where they were non-union, and that they would haul it up over the tipple the same as they had done before.

Q. What, if anything, did Mr. Lewis say to that?

A. Well, I cannot remember just what he did say, but he said that there were lots of companies that were willing to sign up pending a settlement.

Q. Well, wouldn't he let them sign up that way pending a settlement.

A. No, sir.

Q. Did he say that in that conversation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact did your prediction come true relative to the supplying of engine coal over that tipple?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you were a member of the committee of the men at the mine?

A. I was at that time; yes, sir.

Q. Did you and other members of the committee make any investigation as to the source of the supply of coal that was ultimately used for the engines there?

A. I do not remember of making any examination as a committee, but I did personally.

Q. And what was the result of your examination on that point?

A Well, we didn't have anything else to do but loaf around there and watch this coal go up over the tipple and naturally wanted to see where it came from.

Q. And where did it come from?

A. It came from the Fairmont field for a while and then it was reported that the Lorain Coal & Dock Company was shipping coal over to our place, and I went down on the sidetrack to see.

Q. Well, what did you find, if anything?

545 A. I found three or four cars on the sidetrack with the card on one, "Lorain Coal & Dock Company."

Q. And the coal that was in that car—what became of it, if you know?

A. It was dumped down into the chutes and hauled up on the tipple and put in the bin.

Q. And this occurred during the time that Mr. Lewis was keeping you idle at the Hitchman mine and allowing the Lorain Coal & Dock Company to run its mine and supply coal that would otherwise have been supplied by your labor and the labor of your associates. Is that a fact?

A. I do not know that it was particularly Mr. Lewis. We could not get the agreement from the officials to load our coal.

Q. Well, you went to see Mr. Lewis and had a talk with him on this subject?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was either through Mr. Lewis or through some other officials who had the control?

A. It was through the officials of the United Mine Workers.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Rowand, recalled, said: That he is in the employ of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company at this time; is running a machine; that he was one of a committee of four which visited T. L. Lewis at his home in Bridgeport, Ohio, the day before the strike at the Hitchman mine in April, 1896; the members of the committee besides witness were William Daugherty, William Schack and James Conoway; witness did not do the talking for the committee; the proposition was brought up by some individual in the meeting, witness does not remember who; the only ones present at the meeting besides Mr. Lewis were the four members composing the committee.

At this point the witness was asked and answered question-, as follows:

Q. I understood you to say that you stated to Mr. Lewis that the company was willing to sign up the scale of 1903 provided the men would go back to work.

A. No, sir; I never said that.

Q. What did you say?

A. I said they would sign up the scale of 1903 and let the men continue to work.

546 Q. Well, that was the same thing, wasn't it?

A. No, sir; we had never quit yet.

Q. Well, in that respect, then, you ought to correct your answer, or my question, rather. Then you were still at work?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you stated to him that the committee was ready to sign up the scale of 1903 and let the men continue to work?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, wasn't that what the convention wanted—the scale of 1903 to be signed up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you mean to say that after you told Mr. Lewis that they were willing to sign the scale of 1903—the very one they wanted signed—that he would not let you sign it?

A. Yes, sir; they hadn't made their scale then.

Q. Well, isn't that the one they agreed on in 1903?

A. They did in the future; yes, sir.

Q. Other operators had not signed it yet?
A. Not at that time; no, sir.
Q. I believe that you said that you went down and looked at some cars on the track to find out if you could where the coal was coming from that was to be used in coaling the engines?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you found there three cars on the track?
A. Three or four.
Q. On one of which cars you saw a card?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And on the card was marked, "Lorain Coal & Dock Company."
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Of course you do not undertake to say that the coal came from the Lorain Coal & Coke Company's mines?
A. No more than what the card said.
Q. Was it a B. & O. car?
A. Well, I did not notice the car, but it was a steel hopper.
Q. Do you recollect how long this was after the strike had commenced that you saw this car?
A No; I do not know as I could not say how long it was.
Q Was it a month would you say?
A. Yes, sir; I judge it was, if not more.
Q. The Hitchman Coal & Coke Company resumed work on the 12th of June, 1907?
A. I do not know when it was.
Q. Well, you were out in all about six or seven weeks, weren't you?
A. Something like that; yes, sir.

(End of Cross Examination.)

547 MIKE POPAGE.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination, the witness, Mike Popage, said: My name is Mike Popage; age, twenty-seven; I live in Hitchman Row, Benwood; occupation, coal miner; was born in Austria; came to America in 1898; lived in Wheeling; when witness first came from the old country witness first stopped in Wheeling, and from Wheeling witness went to Benwood and has lived there ever since; witness has been working for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company for about nine years; witness remembers when the mine was organized in 1903; remembers that the people all got together and organized and all of them were working for the Hitchman Coal Company; there was an organizer there to bring that about; he was working in the mine—a few of them were working in the mine; after the mine was organized those men did not continue to work in the mine; they went away when they organized; after they organized we had a strike; the company would not stand for organizing and we came out; after the company signed up with the union witness went to work; there was a strike after that; we had the next strike in 1906; did not have any strike before that that witness now remembers of; does not remember much the occasion of the 1906 strike; was idle for quite awhile, and on June 12th, 1906, went to work again; has continued to work there from June 12th, 1906, to the present time; witness says there has not been any strike since they started up non-union; had been a member of the United Mine Workers; is not one now; during the time that witness was a member of the union part of witness's money was taken and paid to the union; witness got paid every two weeks, and the union takes off a percentage; the more a man makes the more the union takes off, and sometimes there were assessments, extra amounts taken off; witness does not know what that money was taken off for; during the time witness was idle in the strike of 1906 witness got three dollars benefits; that is, three dollars between April 16th, 1896, and June 12th, 1906, that is all witness got; witness does not know why he did not get more; witness wanted more if he could have gotten it, if they would have given him more.

At this point the following question was asked and answer given:

Q. Was any explanation given to you why you did not get more benefits?

A. Yes, sir; they said we ain't got no money.

548 Upon further direct examination the witness, Popage, said they did not offer him anything else instead of money; did not offer him a store order; he was not a married man at that time; witness remembers of a man by the name of Thomas Hughes coming about the Hitchman mine, saw him sometimes; talked with Thomas Hughes a few times.

At this point the witness was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. What did he talk to you about?

A. Oh, he tried to get me along with him to help him out so he could get the Hitchman mine organized again.

Q. In what way did he ask you to help him?

A. To help him to get the people together, and everything, and he was to pay me for it.

Q. Were there at that time many men employed at the Hitchman mine who were foreigners?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you speak their language?

A. Yes, sir.

—. Could he speak their language?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did he want you to interpret—. You understand what interpret means?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he want you to interpret what he said to those men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you do it?

A. No; I would tell him I won't do it.

Q. Then what did he say?
A. He got mad and went away.
Q. After that did you see him any more?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How did he treat you after that? I mean how did he treat you when you did not agree to interpret for him?
A. Why, he came to my house—the second time he came to my house.
Q. You mean he came to your house a second time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then he had been there before?
A. No; not before.
Q. The second time you talked to him he came to your house. Is that the idea?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, what did he say then?
A. He tried to get me to interpret again, and promised me a good job and everything else.
Q. Did that appeal to you then? Did you agree to do it then, or not?
A. No, sir; I would tell I had nothing to do with him anymore.
Q. Why did you tell him that?
549 A. They blamed me for not getting the men organized; they said it was my fault that the people kept on working.
Q. And that Hughes could not organize the mine?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did Hughes tell you that?
A. Yes, sir; he said that is what he heard off of the people.
Q. That is, you mean, the men that were working in the mine?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did he tell you at any time how he was getting along?
A. No.
Q. Did he succeed in organizing men there? Did he organize the men at the Hitchman mine?
A. No.
Q. Did the mine continue working while he was there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you remember of coal being brought in from somewhere, and hauled up on the trestle, and then out into the bin, and loaded on engines, during that strike of 1906?
A. Yes, sir; but I do not remember much.

(End of direct Examination.)
No cross examination.

JAMES STEWART.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness, James Stewart, said: My name is James Stewart; age, twenty-seven; residence, McMechen, West Virginia; occupation, coal miner; is working for the Hitch-man Coal & Coke Company; has worked there since 1905; was working there at the time of the 1906 strike.

At this point the witness, Stewart, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. During the time the mine was shut down on account of that strike, what did you do? Did you stay around there or go to work elsewhere?

A. Well, after they went on strike I started to work at the Mound coal mine, at Moundsville, West Virginia.

Q. Was that run union or non-union?

A. Yes, sir; they had signed up.

Q. When you went from the Hitchman mine down to the Mound Coal Company mine, what became of your union card?

A. I took it there with me.

550 Q. And when the mine started—when the Hitchman mine started up non-union on June 12th, 1906—what did you do relative to your card?

A. I worked at Moundsville until after the Hitchman company had been working awhile, and then I came back to work. They were working for a couple of weeks before I came back, and may be more; I won't be sure.

Q. And you left your card at the Mound mine?

A. Yes, sir; I left it there at the Mound mine.

Q. How long did you work for the Hitchman company after you started to work, after the resumption non-union at the Hitchman mine in 1906?

A. Until about 1908.

Q. Were you about the Hitchman mine working there in the fall of 1907, when Thomas Hughes was there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see Thomas Hughes there?

A. Yes, sir; I saw him there several times.

Q. Did you have any talk with him?

A. Yes, sir; I talked with him several times.

Q. Did you hear him talk with any other persons?

A. He was around there all the time and he was talking to everybody he would come to.

Q. To men employed at the Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you what he was there for?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?

A. He told me he was there to try to organize the mine.

Q. Did he say what his business was?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?

A. He said he was an organizer.

Q. For what?

A. For the United Mine Workers, and that he was there for that purpose. But I knew him before he came around there.

Q. You did know him before that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did he say to you, if anything, with relation to organizing the mine?
A. I do not remember all he did say, but I remember one certain thing that he said: He told me during one night that he was going to have a meeting called there. I do not know what the date of it was, but it was in the latter part of August or first part of September. He told me he had had a couple of meetings there, but he did not seem to think it was any good; but he told me he was forming a kind of secret order among the men. He said he had a few men—he did not state the number of them—and he said each man was supposed to give him so much dues to keep it going; and then 551 he said after he got the majority he would organize the place. He asked me what I had to say about it and I told him my job at the present time was satisfactory and the men had agreed with the company not to organize and not to have anything to do with the organization, and I told him I did not want to have any trouble and nothing to say, anyway; and I think that was the last time I saw Hughes around there. I saw him after that across the river but I didn't have any talk with him.
Q. Did he say anything to you about quitting work at the Hitchman and going to a union mine?
A. Yes, sir; he told me about it. He said he would get me a job, and I told him that might be all right about that, but I told him I did not think he could place me in any job any better than the one I had at that present time; and that is about as far as that went.
Q. You say you remember of some meetings being held?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What kind of a notice did he put out for the meetings?
A. Well, I could not just say about the notices.
Q. Did he mark on the pavements, or anything of that kind?
A. Well, there was names around there, about meetings, but I do not know whether he wrote them, or who wrote them. I could not state just what was on them, but we miners claimed that that was what the purpose was.
Q. Were there calls for meetings marked on the pavements?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In chalk or some substance like that?
A. It was in chalk.
Q. White chalk?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was that done anywhere near the Hitchman mine?
A. Well, the one I saw was right in front of Wilhelm's saloon, on the sidewalk.
Q. Where is Wilhelm's saloon with reference to the mine.
A. It was about 150 yards north of the mine.
Q. Did you attend any of the meetings that he held?
A. No.
Q. Did he say anything to you along the line of thought that unless you joined the union at that time, if the mine were unionized you would not get a job?

A. Yes, sir; he stated to me if we did not go in the local, or stay away from there and work where mines were organized, that we would not ever be able to get a job in a union mine, but I have worked in two union mines since that, and had two union cards, and then came back to the Hitchman.

Q. Did you hear him talk with others along the same 552 line?

A. Yes, sir; he talked with them all about the same, that ever I heard him talk to.

Q. Did you hear him tell them that unless they joined then, that if the mine was organized they would be out of a job and they could not get any?

A. He was talking to me and there was five or six or seven sitting there in a bunch, and they all heard just the same as I did about it.

Q. Did he say what he was going to do with the men when he got enough to organize?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say he was going to do?

A. He stated when he got a majority that he was going to organize the mine. I expect the meaning of it was that he was going to organize whether it was against the company or not.

Q. Did he say anything about shutting the mine down if they did not unionize it?

A. He stated it that way—that whenever he got a majority he was going to organize or they would close the place down.

Q. In point of fact, did he get a majority and unionize the mine or not?

A. No, sir; I think he failed.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Stewart, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. When was it that you had this last conversation that you speak of with Hughes? About when was it? You said you saw him afterwards across the river.

Witness: You mean the one about the meeting?

Mr. Hogg: You said you had this last conversation with him when you told him that you had a job there, and that you promised them not to join the union, or something to that amount, and he then went away and that was the last time you saw him there.

A. I stated that was when I was talking there to him—talking about his secret order.

Q. Was that the last time that he was over there to the Hitchman mine?

A. No; I expect he was over there after that.

Q. But I am talking about what you said in your examination in chief. What was it you said? When was the last time you saw him there, did you say?

553 A. The last time that I saw him around the mines was the time he told me that.

Q. When was that?

A. In the latter part of August or first of September when he told me if he got a majority he was going to organize the mine.

Q. And that was the last time you saw him?

A. Around the mine.

Q. And that was the latter part of August or the first of September?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, you were working there during that time, in September and October?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And continued to work then until some time in 1908?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, while he was there he was trying to get men to join the union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he invited you to join the union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And told you he thought it would be better for you to join, didn't he?

A. Yes, sir; that is what he said.

Q. And he said if you worked there and happened to be discharged, you could not get into a union mine?

A. That is what he said.

Q. His idea was that there were a great many more union mines across over in Ohio than there were non-union, wasn't it?

A. I expect that was what he meant.

Q. Well, did he give you any further reasons why he thought it would be better for you to join the union?

A. No; not just exactly.

Q. Where did you meet with him—at your boarding house or outside?

A. I met him above the Hitchman coal company's works.

Q. In daylight?

A. Yes, sir; in the afternoon.

Q. You talked to him on two or three occasions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, how many men would you say you heard him talking to all told there before that last time, just before he went away?

A. Well, I could not just say, but he was around there from some time during the morning until late in the evening, and he was in and out. There are three saloons there and he was in and out and he had them all together; he just talked to every one that came along.

Q. Trying to get them to join the union?

A. He stated that was what his business was there?

Q. No, when did you first notice him there after the Hitchman people first started up non-union after 1906? Was it in 1906

554 or 1907 that you noticed him there?

A. Why, it was in 1907 when I first noticed him around there.

Q. I believe you stated that when the strike was called in April, 1906, you went down to the Mound coal company?
A. Yes, sir; some three days after that.
Q. During April, though?
A. I do not know just whether it was in April or whether it was the first of May; it was right away after they signed up.
Q. They signed the scale and went to work?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then the strike at the Mound Coal Company also commenced on the first of April, 1906?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. The same time that the strike at the Hitchman commenced?
A. The Hitchman commenced on the 16th of April.
Q. Then did you stay up at the Hitchman mine until they quit mining coal for the engines, or not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then after the 16th you went down to the Mound Coal Company?
A. No; it was after that.
Q. Then there was awhile that you did not work, was there?
A. Yes, sir; a couple of weeks.
Q. You must have gone down there about the first of May?
A. It had been three weeks or more; I do not just remember.
Q. Then they went to work in the same way that they had done before, after signing up the scale?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you worked there as a union man?
A. I worked there as a union man.
Q. Do you know whether they signed up the scale of 1903?
A. No; I did not see the scale but that is what the men claimed.
Q. That is what you got?—the pay you got?
A. Yes sir.
Q. How far is that Mound Coal Company, would you say, Mr. Stewart, from the Hitchman Coal Company's plant?
A. I think it is about seven miles.

(End of Cross Examination.)

E. A. UPSTILL.

Direct examination:

Upon direct examination the witness, E. A. Upstill, said: My name is E. A. Upstill; age, 52; residence, Cleveland, Ohio; occupation, vice-president and sales agent of the Hitchman Coal 555 and Coke Company; has other business, that of operating in and selling coal generally; has lived in Cleveland about twenty-two years; prior to going to Cleveland resided at Pittsburg and Cannonsburg, Pennsylvania, and while in Pittsburg and Cannonsburg his business was that of producing and selling coal; was engaged in the coal business for about five years in Pittsburgh and Cannonsburg, Pennsylvania, prior to going to Cleveland; witness has been in the coal business for the last twenty-seven years—all of his business life; as a result of his experience in the coal business witness has become acquainted with the different characters of coal, to a greater or less extent; is familiar with the Fairmont coal; with the Pittsburg coal, so called; with the No. 8 coal, so called; with the coking coal; with the cannel coal, and with the smokeless coal; witness knows from his experience or the general trend of trade the markets in a general way of the different kinds of coal; witness knows in a general way the locations geographically, and in a general way geologically, of the different kinds of coal; knows that the vein mined at the Hitchman mine is known as the Pittsburg No. 8, it is the same vein that is mined in Belmont and Jefferson counties, Ohio; with regard to the size of the vein, the coal mined at Fairmont is larger and the physical conditions are better—some of it is suitable for coking purposes, and for all purposes witness would say the Fairmont coal is the equal and for many purposes it is superior to the Pittsburg No. 8 coal; in markets where coal from the Fairmont field and coal from the No. 8 vein is to be found, the Fairmont coal stands better in the market as a rule than the No. 8; witness has visited the Fairmont field to some extent and is familiar with the general working conditions relative to unionism there; witness is familiar with the working conditions in the No. 8 vein in Eastern Ohio to some extent, in Belmont county and Jefferson county; witness is familiar with the Hocking Valley field to some extent; in a general way the bulk of the coal produced in the Fairmont field goes to the west and northwest generally, and also to the east—to the seaboard; a portion of the coal from the Pennsylvania field—western Pennsylvania—is consumed locally, but much of it goes to the west and northwest by rail and by lake; if shipped by lake from the Pittsburg district the coal generally goes to Erie, Ashtabula, Cleveland, Sandusky and also to Fairport; the coal mined in western Pennsylvania as a general rule is mined under union rules or under the organization otherwise of the United Mine Workers of America;

556 meaning by western Pennsylvania, roughly speaking, the Pittsburg district and the Monongahela district: the coal that is mined in the Pittsburg district is both gas and steam coal; it is bituminous coal; and in the markets of the west and northwest to which the Fairmont coal is largely shipped, this coal from western Pennsylvania stands, as compared with Fairmont, as a general proposition, superior to the Fairmont coal for all purposes, and under ordinary circumstances would command as good if not a better price; there are many different qualities of coal in Pennsylvania the same as there are in West Virginia.

The Myersdale coal is a very soft, friable coal, and is not of the same general quality as the Fairmont or Pittsburg; it is generally shipped to the east, witness believes; as a rule there has not been very much coal shipped from Connellsville, but if it were shipped its natural channel would be east; the Connellsville coal is put to use—in the first process of manufacture—for making coke, and that product of coke is shipped from the locality or the place of mining the coal to the markets—to points of consumption, those points of consumption vary—east and west and north and south; Fairmont coal which is the subject of shipment to and which does not go to the west and northwest goes to the seaboard largely and to eastern points generally, and naturally would then come into competition with coal from the Myersdale district; coal is produced in the southern portion of West Virginia; witness is familiar with that coal to a greater or less extent; and that coal which is the subject of shipment finds its market both in the west and in the east; the coal in that section of the state of West Virginia is produced in different fields, for instance, the Kanawha field, the Bluefield field, and the Pocahontas field; the character of that coal in the southern portion of West Virginia varies, to some extent for some purposes it—is superior to the Pennsylvania coal and the Fairmont coal in the markets of the west and of the northwest, and laying aside those purposes for which it is not superior, witness thinks that for everything with the possible exception of making gas it is equal in quality for the purposes for which the Fairmont coal would be sold in these same markets, so that the Fairmont coal would be superior even in the markets of the west and the northwest for gas purposes; the coal that is shipped from the southern fields of West Virginia to the coast goes principally to Norfolk and Newport News, Virginia, and then is carried by vessels to New England and other eastern ports; in these ports that coal would come in competition with coal from other portions of West Virginia and Pennsylvania, such 557 as the Myersdale coal mentioned; coal that is mined in the Pittsburg No. 8 vein in eastern Ohio, outside of local consumption, goes to the west and northwest, and thus comes in competition in those markets with the coal that is shipped from the Pittsburg District and from the Fairmont District and from the southern districts in West Virginia; some of the coal that is mined in the northern Panhandle of West Virginia, in the Pittsburg vein No. 8, is used locally and much of its is shipped to the west and northwest also; no, witness says he would have to correct that since he comes to think of it, and witness adds, most of it is used locally, but some little—some portion of it—can be shipped to the lakes and points locally between the mines and the lakes; it cannot be shipped generally to the west and northwest, or rather it can but it is not; that condition obtains by reason of the freight rates; there is a differential against that particular coal of twenty-five cents a ton to all points west and northwest, except to local points between the mines and the lakes, and the lake rate proper; coal that is shipped from the northern Panhandle of West Virginia is, as against Ohio, under a handicap to the west and northwest of twenty-five cents per ton; there isn't any point of difference to witness's knowledge as to the coal itself between the coal mines located in Belmont and Jefferson Counties, Ohio, in the No. 8 vein, and the coal mined in the northern Panhandle of West Virginia, except the physical fact that the Ohio River intervenes there; the Ohio River simply intervenes between the northern Panhandle district of West Virginia coal and the eastern Ohio or No. 8 coal, and there is a twenty-five cent differential against the coal from the northern Panhandle of West Virginia when coal from that section and coal from the eastern Ohio district immediately across the river is shipped to the same market in the north and northwest—that is a fact.

At this point the following proceedings were had:

The Court: Pardon me right there: It is a matter of common knowledge that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company places a differential of twenty-five cents on coal west of Newburg. Does the Pennsylvania make the same differential against your coal shipped east from the northern Panhandle?

A. No, sir; we ship east under the same rates as Fairmont. There is no differential east. We have the same rates east as Pittsburg.

Q. Over the Pennsylvania lines?

558 A. Over the B. & O. We are located on the B. & O., and we have the same differential as Pittsburg and Fairmont, east and also west.

Upon further direct examination the witness, Upstill, said: The Hitchman mine is situated on the B. & O. Railroad; it is not situated on any other road; it has no shipping facilities in any way except over the B. & O.; the mine is located at Benwood, below Wheeling.

At this point the following questions were asked and answers given, and proceedings had:

Q. Now, the Pittsburg vein, No. 8, has in a general way certain boundary lines, geologically speaking, and it is mineable under the present methods of mining in certain places where the coal exists. In some sections the conditions may be that the coal is too deep for economical mining to enable the product to complete with other coal mined under more favorable circumstances. If you know, in a general way, about where this Pittsburg No. 8 vein of coal lies and is mined, please state.

A. It is mined in Jefferson, Harrison and Belmont counties of Ohio, and in Marshall county, West Virginia. I do not know whether any other counties come in there in the Panhandle or not, but it is mined clear up through the northern Panhandle.

Q. Passing up the river from Marshall county in which Benwood is situated, comes Ohio county, and passing still farther up the river comes Brooke county, and still above that Hancock county. Coal is mined, then, is it, in the Panhandle district in Marshall county, in Ohio county, in Brooke county and possibly some in Hancock county?

A. Yes, sir. I am not familiar with the territory up there. I know that coal is mined up there but I do not know whether it is all the No. 8 seam or not.

Q. It may be the No. 7 coal?

A. Yes, sir; or the No. 6, or the regular Pittsburg vein.

Q. It runs out, does it?

A. There is a line of demarcation up there some place.

Q. Do you call this No. 8 the regular Pittsburg vein?

A. It is an extension of the Pittsburg vein into the Ohio field.

Q. As compared with the Fairmont region it is not so thick?

A. It gets thicker in Fairmont and is purer; Ohio is not so pure as Fairmont.

Q. What do you call six and seven?

A. Those would correspond geologically with your different veins in this state.

559 Q. The little Pittsburg and Freeports?

A. The Freeport and little Pittsburg; those are just local geological names.

Q. Passing from the Ohio towards the east, assuming that the Ohio River in its general course between the upper end of Brooke county and Moundsville, West Virginia, runs substantially north and south—passing from the Ohio River then on that assumption towards the east, how does the coal dip, if at all?

A. I am not familiar with the physical conditions there, but I would rather think to the southeast.

Q. Do you know how far east from Wheeling coal is mined successfully?—that is, eastward from the river?

Witness: Do I understand along the line of the railroad or back through the country?

Mr. Gilchrist: There is no production apart from the railroad along the Pittsburg division of the B. & O. road.

A. There are mines all the way along, right into Pittsburg.

Q. The Elm Grove mine is where?

A. The Elm Grove mine is east of Wheeling on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Q. About five miles?

A. Five or six miles, I should think.

Q. There is no mine after that, then, until you come to beyond Finleyville?

A. No; on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad there is no mine until you come to Finleyville or some place near there.

Q. So that you were in error when you said there was a continuous string of mines along that road from Wheeling clear into Pittsburg?

A. I did not mean to say there was a continuous string of mines, but that coal is mined at places along. I remember now that there is a gap there.

Q. And the gap is due to the fact that the coal dips so deep that it cannot be mined?

A. Yes, sir; the coal all lies deep there.

Q. And when you come into the Finleyville district you get into the Pittsburg district again?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from there on into Pittsburg it is mined, so that coal is generally mined right along the railroad—(interrupted).

A. Yes, sir; and right along to the Monongahela and Youghiogheny rivers.

Q. When you answered as to those mines being continuous from Wheeling to Pittsburg, along the Pittsburg division, you were misled by me owing to the fact that I assumed you were familiar with that much of the region. I recall now that you said in advance that you were not familiar with it; so that was my fault and I, of course, apologize.

A. Yes, sir.

560 Q. Now, the coal in the Pittsburg No. 8 vein is mined in the northern Panhandle down as far as Moundsville, is it, in Marshall county?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are familiar with that feature of the Panhandle, are you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And passing from the region of Moundsville, where is coal next mined out along the B. & O., that you know of?

A. I think the next point is at Farmington.

Q. That is on the outskirts of the Fairmont field?

A. Yes, sir; so considered.

Q. So that between Moundsville and Farmington coal is not mined?

A. Coal is not mined in that territory.

Q. Now, the Fairmont field, when you reach Farmington, is a different coal, I believe you said?

A. It is of a different nature—different in quality.

Q. Do you know why it is that the coal between Moundsville and Fairmont is not mined, assuming that there is any coal there?

A. If there is any coal there it lies very deep.

Q. So deep that it could not be economically mined under present operating conditions?

A. Not at the present day.

Q. Now, this twenty-five cent differential you said applied to the Fairmont field and to the northern Panhandle district so far as the B. & O. serves that region; Is that so?

A. As compared with Ohio? Yes, sir.

Q. This mine of the Hitchman Company at Benwood is not in what is known by the railroad company as its Fairmont field?

A. No, sir.

Q. It is in what is known as the Moundsville district, is it?

A. The Moundsville district; yes, sir.

Q. But the Moundsville district is charged under its descriptive name of Moundsville district the same twenty-five cent differential in favor of Eastern Ohio that the Fairmont district is charged in favor of eastern Ohio?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have said that the coal in the eastern Ohio field, in the counties of Belmont, Jefferson and Harrison—did you name Monroe, or not?

A. No; I do not think so, although there is some coal mined there, I guess, but not to any great extent.

Q. You have said that the coal mined in Belmont, Jefferson and Harrison is of the same vein as the coal mined at the Hitchman mine and the northern Panhandle of West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir; it is so considered.

Q. The coal is mined under the same or substantially simi-

561 lar conditions on each side of the river, is it?

A. Yes, sir

Q. Do you know whether the product of the coal mines in those counties of Belmont, Jefferson and Harrison is the product of union labor or of non-union labor?

A. It is the product of union labor.

Q. Do you know whether the coal mined in the Pittsburg vein No. 8 at the Hitchman mine is the product of union or non-union labor?

A. Non-union labor.

Q. Do you know whether the operating conditions at that mine and at the mines in Belmont, Jefferson and Harrison counties, Ohio, are substantially similar?

A. Yes, sir; they are.

Q. Aside from the question of compensation of labor?

A. Yes, sir; the physical conditions and the operating conditions are identical.

Q. Do you know how the wages paid to the mine workers and other employes for the production of coal at the Hitchman mine, in the Pittsburg vein No. 8, compare with the prices paid for union labor for the production of coal in the mines in the No. 8 district in Belmont, Jefferson and Harrison counties, Ohio?

A. They are just the same.

Q. Do you know whether that same condition obtains as to the other mines in the Panhandle district of West Virginia?

A. Not of my own personal knowledge, but I believe it does.

Q. Did that condition come about in any way by reason of the fact that that territory in the northern Panhandle district of West Virginia had been a part of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and had at one time been organized?

A. I believe so.

Q. So as one of the results of that section having been under the jurisdiction and control of the United Mine Workers, the wages of the men have been retained on the same basis as the United Mine Workers?

A. They are so retained; yes, sir.

Q. The result, then, of this situation would be, would it, that barring slight differences in operating methods, equipment, &c., of the mine, and the ability of the operator in shrewdly managing his business, the cost of the product of any mine in eastern Ohio in the counties of Belmont, Jefferson and Harrison would be substantially the same as the cost of the product of mines in the Panhandle district where the coal was substantially the same and where the wages were substantially the same?

A. I think the cost of production would be about the same.

562 Q. Now, that coal in the northern Panhandle of West Virginia is shipped to the west and to the northwest subject to a discriminatory charge of twenty-five cents per ton as against the coal from the mines in Belmont, Jefferson and Harrison counties, Ohio.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that twenty-five cent differential enough to keep the coal out of the market which comes from the mines of the Panhandle district of West Virginia?

A. Oh, decidedly so.

Q. When you say decidedly so, do you mean that it is altogether impossible to compete in the market under the ordinary conditions of trade?

A. Yes, sir; you would not expect to get twenty-five cents a ton more for coal of the same general quality simply because it was produced on the otner side of the Ohio river.

Q. Passing to the Fairmont district: that coal you said was mined non-union and was mined from a larger vein and under more favorable circumstances as to the conditions of the coal. Do you know how the wages paid in the Fairmont region, and other costs of operating, compare with the wages and other costs of operating in the mining of coal in the northern Panhandle district of West Virginia?

A. Not in detail, but generally speaking they are very much lower.

Q. Do you know how they compare with the mines in the No. 8 field in Jefferson, Harrison and Belmont counties, Ohio?

A. Much lower.

The Court:

Q. Are the mining conditions easier—is it easier to get out coal in the Fairmont region than in Ohio?

A. Very much so. The physical conditions are better, the vein is thicker, and the men do not have the dead work to do—that is, in the handling of slate, posting, and so on.

The Court: I do not know anything about it but I had an idea derived from what I have heard of the Fairmont mines that the conditions there were more favorable than in the Ohio mines.

Witness: The whole condition is better. They have an advantage in the cost of production of from thirty to forty cents a ton.

Q. You have to pay higher rates in Ohio for mining?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To compete against the Fairmont region, with its lower 563 cost of mining to all the markets of the west?

A. Yes, sir; as against Fairmont.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. You said to the court in answer to a question I was about to ask as to what was the natural result of the easier conditions and also the wages in the Fairmont district with respect to the cost of coal—you stated that the coal there in the Fairmont region could be produced from thirty-five to forty cents a ton less than in Ohio?

A. From thirty to forty cents, I said.

Q. Now, passing again to that differential of twenty-five cents, it would seem that the Fairmont field could easily absorb the twenty-five cent differential and still have an advantage of five cents over the Hitchman and the mines in the northern Panhandle of West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir; and still be able to compete with Ohio against its higher rate of mining.

Mr. Hogg: I want to interpose an objection to each question propounded and to each answer made by the witness on the stand thus far, as not in any wise bearing on the controversy involved in this case. There isn't any question, it seems to me, but that the sole issue here is whether this organization is a lawful one; and secondly, if it be a lawful one, then as to the right to solicit members to their organization from the plaintiff's employes. There isn't any evidence here of fraud or violence and there is nothing for this court to determine except these two matters. Now, as to the condition of things in the field and whether the operators would unionize, that may be considered; but there is no attempt here to unionize the Fairmount mines; no attempt here to unionize—in the sense of compelling the Panhandle people to operate their mines by agreement with the union, and the conditions existing in the Panhandle and in Ohio are the same and the wages agreed to, and the evidence thus far produced by the plaintiff, are the same; and I cannot see how the court is going to derive any information as to whether this organization is a legal organization or not from this sort of testimony, and I wish to be emphatic, may your Honor please, in excepting to each question and answer so far detailed by the witness as not bearing on any of the issues raised by this suit. I may be unable to perceive its bearing, but I have remained here and listened to the testimony and considered it from every conceivable phase of the case. There is already an immense volume of evidence in this case and it is a hardship on any one connected with the litigation to allow the 564 expenses of the litigation to increase, except as may be necessary by legal and relevant testimony. It seems to me it is unjust.

The Court: Well, as I have said repeatedly, I will have the objection entered and will consider the admissibility, or rather the pertinency of the evidence upon the final hearing. In other words, I will hold the exception until then and for this reason: There are very explicit charges in this bill to the effect that the defendants confederated in a conspiracy to destroy and injure the business of the plaintiff. Now, I can see, in one view of the case, where this testimony might be pertinent. It is simply a recital of the conditions that surrounded this mine. If those conditions were such that it were absolutely impossible for them to meet the demands and requirements sought to be enforced against them by the defendants, as officers of the union, and the officers of the union knew it, that might be pertinent testimony. If it was common knowledge to them, it might be evidence that they were enforcing a demand such as could not be met under any conditions. I think you can see my idea, and under the broad plan that has been adopted here you must let in everything that will tend to prove in any way the issues in support of the theories made by the parties themselves. I think I will admit this now. I always go on the proposition of being on the side of the plaintiff when he is introducing his testimony, and let him have the benefit of all testimony that I can possibly conceive is proper; then when the defendant comes to introduce his testimony I try to get on his side of the case and let everything in that will possibly support the theory as he may present it.

Mr. Hogg: I have been going all the while on the assumption that we have the right to except to any incompetent or irrelevant evidence on the final hearing, under the rule.

The Court: Yes, sir; and that is what I mean by it. Rather than pass upon the matter here in its fragmentary state, I would rather pass on these exceptions as a whole when I have all the testimony before me and can understand fully the theories advanced by both sides.

Mr. Gilchrist: I believe I am correct in assuming that the same privilege of exception to any irrelevant, immaterial or otherwise improper testimony will be accorded to the plaintiff on the final hearing, as is accorded to the defendant.

The Court: That is the rule.

565 Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. When you speak of the twenty-five cent differential as a uniform rate, do you mean to other points than those you mentioned in your first statement upon the subject of the differential?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what is lake coal, or what is known as lake coal?

A. Coal that is shipped to the lake for reshipment by vessel.

Q. What is the differential, if there is any, in favor of the eastern Ohio field and against the Hitchman mine, from the Moundsville district on the B. & O., on what is termed lake coal to certain points?

A. Three cents per ton.

Q. So that during the time of the year in which shipments of lake coal may be made, there is a three-cent differential only against the Hitchman mine and in favor of the eastern Ohio mines on lake coal to certain points?

A. Yes, sir; on lake coal only.

Q. During what period of the year may coal be shipped for lake trade on that three-cent differential?

A. From about April 1st until about December 1st.

Q. And that varies somewhat with the season of the year, I suppose?

A. The weather.

Q. Cold weather would close navigation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And cold weather in the spring would retard the opening of navigation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So the date of opening and the date of closing is variable?

A. Yes, sir; those dates mentioned are the extreme limits.

Q. That is, in the length of the period during which coal may be shipped from the Moundsville district for lake purposes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the three-cent differential?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In competing with the eastern Ohio field there would be, then, on lake trade during that restricted period of time in the summer and in the fall, merely a three-cent differential against the Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And under ordinary conditions of trade and under an ordinary market is that differential of three cents such as to debar or such as in many instances to permit the shipment of coal from the Hitchman mine to the lakes, for lake trade, and thus compete with eastern Ohio coal in the same markets in the west and in the northwest?

A. It is sufficient at times to debar it from making shipments, only because the mine must absorb or take care of this three-cent differential in the price of its coal. In other words, we must 566 reduce the price of our coal to meet the price of Ohio coal laid down at the lake front.

Q. In shipping coal for the lake trade during that restricted time and on that three-cent differential to the particular ports to which that three-cent concessionary rate applies, what, if you know, is the requirement with reference to the speedy loading of coal on vessels for further transportation to the ultimate market? I mean with respect to the question whether there is any dockage facility, or whether there is demurrage charged, or what there is, if anything, that affects the question as to whether a mine might mine coal all winter and send it to this point under the differential?

A. No, sir; we are allowed and were allowed seven days' time up until last year, but last year it was reduced to five days. That is, we are allowed to hold the coal on the cars at the lake front for five days and accumulate sufficient for a cargo. If you hold it longer than that we are subject to a demurrage charge of one dollar per car a day. We must get the vessel there and load the coal within five days after its arrival at the lake front.

Q. Then it becomes important on such shipments to know that you have a vessel at hand and can promptly unload the cars when you are shipping lake coal?

A. It is almost imperative.

Q. May you ship less than a full cargo of coal?

A. That would depend. If you were selling it for account of mines on the other side of the river where the coal could be bunched and put in together, we could then ship less than a cargo. If we were shipping to a point of final destination ourselves, up the lakes, we would have to ship it in cargo lots running from three to ten thousand tons according to the size of the vessel.

Q. So that you are then further confronted with the shipping difficulty after you overcome the three-cent differential?

A. To a greater or less extent.

Q. That would make necessary very careful calculations as to the prices and dates when you could deliver coal from the Hitchman mine?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When this coal shipped from the Hitchman mine for lake trade during this brief period of time during which it may be shipped on the three-cent differential reaches its ultimate market, where, in the main, is that market?

Witness: The final market, do you mean?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes.

567 A. Usually the lake ports in the northwest such as Duluth, Superior and the Canada ports, and Milwaukee or any other ports at which it may be sold.

Q. What coal would that coal shipped from the Hitchman mine as lake coal come in competition with in the final market?

A. It would come in competition with all the various coals, but more particularly with the Ohio No. 8 coal of Harrison, Belmont and Jefferson counties.

Q. And is that owing to any particular reason or is it a mere outgrowth of the fact that Ohio is bounded on one side by the lake to which this coal from the Hitchman mine would be shipped for transshipment?

Witness: I do not know that I understand that question.

Mr. Hogg: Read that question, Mr. Stenographer; I do not understand it either.

(The question is read by the stenographer.)

A. Well, that is due to the reason that the Hitchman coal is of the same general quality as the Ohio coal and it naturally must go in competition with it.

Q. And it arrives at the same ports owing to the fact that it departs from the same ports, does it, in the main?

Witness: You mean as to its final destination?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Coal from these mines in eastern Ohio goes in the main to the same ports that coal shipped from the northern Panhandle of West Virginia would go?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And vessels engaged in carrying coal, carry coal to the north to the same lake port and then have sometimes return cargoes?

A. They generally have return cargoes.

Q. And that brings about a condition where the coal from the Panhandle district naturally gets to the same place where the coal from the eastern Ohio district gets?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I believe you said that coal from the eastern Ohio district went very largely to the west and to the northwest, and you have now said that coal from the same region went to lake ports and thence to the north and northwest lake ports. You have said that the 568 coal from No. 8 district in Ohio had its final destination in the north and northwest lake ports, or otherwise finds itself in competition with coal from the Fairmont region and coal from the Pittsburg region?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same thing then would obtain as to the competition that the Hitchman coal would encounter at a lake port in the north or the northwest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But that condition could not obtain, as I understand you, at other points than lake ports owing to the twenty-five cent differential which debars the Hitchman coal from reaching the inland ports in the north and the northwest and competing with the different kinds of coal including the eastern Ohio coal that gets to these inland ports?

A. It could not by rail.

Q. Is it a practicable proposition to ship coal on a three-cent differential to lake ports in the north and the northwest, and then unload, and then trans-ship by rail out into the interior of the country, and compete with coal which goes direct by rail to those ports from eastern Ohio or from the Pittsburg district or from the Fairmont field?

A. That is a pretty far reaching. Our operations, so far as the shipment of coal is concerned, and when we get it on the docks at the northwest. It is then handled by different companies and becomes a different proposition. It has to be re-screened and reloaded into cars which are handled by separate and different companies entirely. We sell it to the dock companies and they handle it that way.

Q. And each time coal is loaded or unloaded it naturally is reduced to finer lumps?

A. Oh, yes; it suffers a loss every time.

Q. And the finer the coal and the more slack you have the less valuable your product is at the point of final sale?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where in the main is the coal mined in Indiana marketed?

A. In the markets of the west and northwest.

Q. And the coal mined in the State of Illinois?

A. In the same markets.

Q. All this coal comes in competition then in one section of the country?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The members of the United Mine Workers in the states of western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, formerly met in national convention, did they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Latterly and at the present time they meet still in national convention, but in dealing with the operators in fixing the scale, while they formerly dealt with the operators in those particu-
569 lar states corresponding to the membership of the union, they now deal with the operators of western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana jointly?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, Illinois has withdrawn?

A. It deals separately.

Q. I have here a book which says on its title page, "Proceedings of Joint Conference of Coal Operators and Coal Miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana. Cincinnati, Ohio, March 8-29, 1910. Revised and Edited by F. S. Brooks, Secretary." Will you look at that and state what it is and where you got it?

A. That is what purports to be the "Proceedings of Joint Conference of Coal Operators and Coal Miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana," and I received it from Mr. F. S. Brooks, the secretary of that meeting.

Mr. Gilchrist: I offer this book in evidence to be marked, "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1."

Mr. Hogg: Let an objection be noted to it.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Mr. Upstill, in 1907, during the period when the lake trade was open, did you sell any coal for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, or make any contracts for the sale of coal for the lake trade?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you state whether you were able to fill the orders that you took, or not?

A. We were not from the Hitchman mine, entirely.

Q. What did you do as to the amount that you failed on tonnage?

A. We bought it from mines on the Ohio side of the river.

Q. No. 8 coal?

A. No. 8 coal, and applied it in those contracts.

Q. What price were you to obtain for the coal that you had to substitute for, for the Hitchman coal, per ton, on that contract?

A. I think it was $1.05 a ton to the best of my recol-ection now.

Q. Why was the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company unable to supply the coal, as you recollect?

A. It was owing to their restricted operations on account of their trouble with their men.

Q. And the attempt to organize the men?

A. Yes, sir; the agitation and the attempt to organize the men. At that time they were not able to get out or produce the coal they should have produced.

570 Q. What tonnage was it that you had to purchase elsewhere on account of your contract?

A. Oh, I suppose we had to buy ten or fifteen thousand tons all told.

(End of Direct Examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross examination the witness, Upstill, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. Where did you buy the coal that you applied on your contracts for the supplying of the lake trade?

Witness: From what mines did we buy it?

Mr. Hogg: In Ohio; yes, sir.

A. I rather think we bought some from Pursglove.

Q. State the location.

A. The mine is located on the C. L. & W. Division of the B. & O.

Q. Whereabouts in Ohio is it?

A. Beyong Maynard, some place; I do not know exactly; it is in that territory.

Q. Do you recollect the quantity you bought?

A. I stated that altogether we bought between ten and fifteen thousand tons at different mines; I cannot recall just now all the mines.

Q. If I understood your examination in chief you stated that the Pittsburg vein No. 8 is mined in the Panhandle district of West Virginia, in which the Hitchman mine is located.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That the same vein is mined in eastern Ohio, in Belmont, Harrison and Jefferson counties.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that these two localities in which this vein is situated are separated by the Ohio River?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same practically, I believe you said they were; and the same conditions of mining exist in the Panhandle district that exist in Belmont, Jefferson and Harrison counties?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you also stated that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company pays the same price for mining coal now that is paid in the eastern Ohio section in the counties mentioned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to state whether or not the Panhandle district located in West Virginia, where the Hitchman mine is sit-571 uated, is in the same Sub-District of District 6 that the counties of Harrison, Jefferson and Belmont are in?

A. I understand that they are.

Q. I also understood you to say that the reason the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company pays the same price that is paid at union mines in Ohio, is because when the Hitchman mine stopped running union in 1906 it just continued for that reason to pay the same price that the union paid.

A. That is what I said; yes, sir.

Q. And this matter of paying prices in the two sections has continued from 1906 up to the present time?

A. That is my understanding; yes, sir.

Q. You know nothing to the contrary?

A. I know nothing to the contrary.

Q. And they paid the same prices at the Hitchman beginning in 1903 and continuing through that year, and in 1904, 1905 and up to April 1st, 1906, that were paid in the counties of Belmont, Jefferson and Harrison in the State of Ohio.

A. I believe that to be the case.

Q. Because they were all running on a union basis at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you also stated that there is a freight differential on the B. & O. railroad of twenty-five cents that is applied to shipments made from east of the Ohio River, as compared with those made from west of the Ohio River, in the State of Ohio, in shipping coal west?

A. West of the line of the C. L. & W. railroad.

Q. Where does that intersect the B. & O. railroad, leading north?

A. At Bridgeport.

Q. How far is that from the Ohio River?

A. It is on the bank of the Ohio River.

Q. I believe you also stated that the bulk of the coal mined at the Hitchman mine finds a local market instead of a market either east or west of their plant?

A. I do not know that I stated that, but that is a fact. It does find some local market.

Q. I understood you to say that the greater part of the Hitchman product found a local market.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that has obtained for a long time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not only when they ran union but since they have been running non-union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I also understood you to say that there is a differential against the operators in Ohio of twenty-five cents for shipments of coal from that region to the eastern markets?

A. No; I did not say that.

572 Q. What did I understand you to say in reference to that?

A. I do not think that question was asked me.

Q. Well, what do you know about that?

A. They have no rates to eastern markets that I know of.

Q. There are no shipments made east?

A. No, sir.

Q. It is all shipped west?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I also understood you to say that the same rates of freight were extended to the Hitchman, so far as the eastern markets are concerned, that are given to the Pittsburg and Fairmont fields?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the average annual production of coal from the Hitchman mine for the last eight years?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has it been on the increase or not?

A. I think it has been on the decrease for the last two or three years, but I cannot give you the figures, as I haven't them.

Q. What was the annual production of the Hitchman mine for the year 1910 as compared with the same production for the — 1909— more or less?

A. I would be unable to answer that question without the figures, but I think it was a little less.

Q. What was the annual production of the Hitchman mine for the year 1909, as compared with the production for a like period for the year 1908?

A. Probably a little more or the same.

Q. How does the production of 1907 of the Hitchman mine compare with the production for 1906?

A. Nineteen hundred and seven would be the greater.

Q. How does the production of 1906 compare with the production of 1905?

A. I could not tell you; I haven't any idea and cannot say.

Q. This coal that you purchased to apply upon your contract for the lake trade, where did you dispose of it and to whom?

A. I applied it on the contracts that I made for the Hitchman coal.

Q. To whom?

A. Largely to Pickands, Mather & Company; some I think to the Lorain Coal & Dock Company; some to George M. Jones Company, of Toledo; some to the Drake Coal Company, of Cleveland; and other small orders and contracts which we had that I do not recall at this moment.

Q. Now, in furnishing coal to the lake trade, that is handled by companies or corporations located on the lakes owning or operating their own docks, is it not?

A. Not necessarily their own docks. Do you mean at the port of loading or at the point of destination?

573 Mr. Hogg: At the port of loading.

A. (continued). No; the railroad companies own the docks at the point of loading.

Q. Are the sales not negotiated to individuals, companies or agencies handling the lake trade?

A. Yes, sir; they are naturally negotiated with people who have use for the coal on the lakes.

Q. Then all of the coal that is shipped to the lake trade is sold at the point of unloading, as a rule?

A. No; there is no fixed rule as to that any more than there is to any other transaction. You either sell it at the mine or you sell it delivered, according to the deal.

Q. That is what I mean; mines operating say in the Panhandle of West Virginia or mines operating in Ohio, either sell their coal at the mine or sell it at the point of destination at the lake.

A. Plus the freight.

Q. If it is sold at the mines it has a proce f. o. b. as a rule?

A. F. o. b. at the mines.

Q. Did you buy any of this coal that you speak of from the Lorain Coal & Dock Company?

A. I do not think I did that year.

Q. What year was it in which you made this contract?

A. It was in 1907.

Q. Coming back to the sale of the coal to the lake trade, the sale was either consummated at the mine or at the lake shore, plus the freight, by the Ohio operators or the Panhandle operators.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, are you aware that there are different freight rates in the State of Ohio for shipments to the lake shore?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us how many.

A. I think there are only two.

Q. Can you designate them or distinguish them in any way?

A. Yes, sir; there is what is called the Middle District rate including Massillon and Tuscarawas fields, and the No. 8 and Hocking rate, including the Pittsburg No. 8, the Hocking and Cambridge districts.

Q. Now, coming back to the three-cent differential for lake trade: As I understand your testimony, if a shipment is designed for the lake trade the differential is only there cents per ton.

A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is obtained, I presume, is it not, by a rebate at the lake?
A. No.
Q. Where is that rebate obtained?
A. I do not know just how they handle that, but I know there is no rebate to it.
574 Q. It is a flat charge, is it?
A. It is a flat charge.
Q. In the first instance?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So that on all shipments for the lake trade the differential is twenty-two cents per ton less than for the other trade?
A. As applied to our mines.
Q. I mean as applied to the State of Ohio.
A. As applied to the State of Ohio as against the Hitchman and other Panhandle mines.
Q. Did I understand you to say that the market value of the Pittsburg vein of coal and the Fairmont vein of coal, is about the same, or not?
Witness: The Pittsburg vein as confined to the Pittsburg district proper?
Mr. Hogg: Yes; the No. 8 vein.
A. I did not say that, I do not think.
Q. What did you say as to the difference? Did you not say that the only difference is in the thickness of the Fairmont vein?
A. No; not as regards the market, I didn't; that applied to the mining conditions.
Q. Then the mining conditions of the Pittsburg No. 8 as compared with the Fairmont vein are the same, with the difference created by the thickness of the Fairmont vein?
A. And other physical advantages.
Q. So that the Fairmont coal may be mined cheaper than the Ohio coal and the coal in the northern Panhandle of West Virginia. Is that right?
A. By thirty or forty cents a ton.
Q. What did you say about the market value of this Fairmont coal as compared with the Pittsburg vein No. 8?
A. I said that the Fairmont coal was worth a little more in the market for some purposes than the No. 8.
Q. Would the physical conditions in mining at Fairmont make a difference of thirty or forty cents a ton?
A. In my opinion, they would.
Q. You have had no practical test of it?
A. Except as we met the contention in the market for trade.
Q. Well, I am talking now about the physical conditions in the cost of mining.
A. No; I am not in the mining — and of course I cannot speak specifically of that.
Q. This is a mere matter of opinion then of yours?
A. No; how I arrive at that is that there is a difference of twenty-five cents in the rate if freight. We have the advantage in Ohio of a twenty-five cent difference in freight, and still with that 575 differential they can undersell us in times of compet-tion for business.

Q. Of course you cannot say, then, that that is due entirely to physical conditions outside of the fitness of the vein?

A. It is entirely due to advantages of some kind that they have.

Q. What is the difference in screening in the Fairmont region and the No. 8 seam?

Witness: Do you mean in the size of the screens or in the proportion of fine coal that they get?

Mr. Hogg: In the proportion of fine coal.

A. I am not qualified to answer as to that, as I do not keep posted on that question.

(End of Cross Examination.)

Redirect examination:

Upon redirect examination the witness, Upstill, was asked and answered questions, as follows:

Q. What is the comparative selling price of the Pittsburg No. 8 coal in the markets of the west and the northwest where that coal comes in competition with the Fairmont coal, or Pennsylvania coal, or Indiana or Illinois coal, if you know?

A. That is pretty broad.

Q. Well, just generally speaking.

A. That would depend largely upon the nature of the competition and the condition of business. In many cases, for ordinary steam purposes, when it comes to competition West Virginia can make lower prices than we can. For gas, of course that is a specific coal, and we cannot in Ohio and in our No. 8 district compete with that kind of coal.

Q. When you say West Virginia coal you do not mean from the northern Panhandle?

A. I mean Fairmont coal.

(End of Redirect Examination.)

And the plaintiff here rested its case.

576 Testimony on Behalf of Served Defendants.

Philippi, West Virginia, March 18, 1911.

WILHELM W. SAVAGE.

Age, forty-three; occupation, secretary-treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; formerly a miner for twenty years; began work when about eleven years of age; mined coal at French Hill, Trumbull County, Ohio; worked there until he was nineteen years of age; moved from there to Portage county and worked there with the exception of two years, until he took position as secretary-treasurer of United Mine Workers. In those two years worked in Indiana at Center Point, Clay County; been secretary-treasurer of District No. 6 twelve years; prior to the organization of the United Mine Workers was a member of the Knights of Labor and a local officer; the Knights of Labor was composed of all crafts; was initiated into it in 1887; the National Progressive Union was organized as a branch of the Knights of Labor; it was organized as an open branch because many of the members objected to the secrecy of the Knights of Labor, and were not in favor of doing business in secret; the National Progressive Union was formed, witness thinks, about 1882 or 1884; it had already been formed when witness joined; it was part of the Knights of Labor, known as District Assembly 135; the Knights of Labor carried on their business in practically the same way as the United Mine Workers do now, except that their proce-dings were strictly secret. A man could not enter a meeting of the Knights of Labor unless he was properly initiated and carried with him the signs and pass-words; the United Mine Workers of America was established and organized in 1890, at Indianapolis, Indiana, but the first ground work was laid at Columbus, Ohio; it is an open organization; it has no other or different objects or purposes from that of the Knights of Labor; being handed "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 1," and asked to examine the preamble, states that it sets forth the objects and purposes of the organization since it was organized in 1890. Here this preamble, together with section 2 of article one of the constitution are inserted with the evidence of the witness.) Witness states that this preamble and section apply to the objects and purposes of district 6, and all other districts subject to the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America; it also applied to sub-district 5. The witness explains the clause in the preamble "To secure an earning fully compatible with the danger of our calling and the labor performed," by saying, "We, as 577 coal miners, when this organization was formed, feeling then, as we do now in many instances, that the miners are not compensated as much as they should be for the labor performed; the object of the organization is to secure to these men, by united action and by contracts with our employers, a wage that we believe to be right."

As to the clause in the preamble reading "To secure an earning fully compatible with the dangers of our calling and the labor performed," the witness further says: "The mines of this country are dangerous in many ways. In the different strata we have very dangerous roofs and we have other dangers to encounter, such as gases, fire damp, powder explosions and impure air." Prior to 1890 witness found conditions in a deplorable state. Men were compelled to work in mines where there was not sufficient air to generate lights. He has worked in places where three men tried to make enough light for one man to work. He knows those conditions impaired the health of any person compelled to work there. Knows it materially injured him, because for two years after that period he was ill and unable to do labor which he should have been done. Those conditions existed for the reason that there was no inspection of the mines. The men were disorganized and one man of himself could not force a condition, and if he would attempt to do so he was immediately notified to secure employment some other place, and if he should go to another place he would find practically the same condition existing. Since that time, or in the seventies or early eighties, in Ohio, they had a mine department composed of a chief mine inspector and one deputy, to cover the whole state, which was very inadequate, for the reason that it was impossible for them to visit all the mines, and the men insisted that something be done to remedy those conditions. There were very few laws on the statute books in those days governing mining, and it seemed that the general public not understanding the situation that existed in the mines, was indifferent to the condition, and when the men went before the legislature a man, as witness understood—heard it from men who were there at the time—took the floor in the legislature and stated that sufficient air would go into a mine without artificial means, which the men know now and knew then to be untrue. The organization, as the preamble suggests, believed in remedying this, and has striven at all times to remedy those conditions. They have succeeded in a large measure but there is still a large work to be done. Witness also says that the organization was not formed only to secure higher wages; but better 578 ventilation in the mines and improved sanitary conditions, so that a man going into a coal mine to work can work there and come out and still retain his health. Witness says that under the old conditions—men who mined thirty or forty years ago, you will find that a large percentage of those men have what is called "miner's asthma." When they reach the age of between forty-five and sixty years their breathing gets very bad. Witness has seen them with asthma so bad they could not work any more, just on account of the bad air they had encountered in the mines. Some call this disease "miner's consumption." While a man may live for years in that condition, he cannot labor in the mines because he has not the breath—his breathing or his lung power is gone, so that he cannot breathe enough to do the work. Owing to this imperfect supply of air there is not sufficient oxygen to generate lights, unless it would be in a place where there is what is called white damp and that situation is more dangerous than black damp. A lamp will burn in that place and burn very brightly, but the gases there are so poisonous that a man is liable to drop over and go to sleep and should he go to sleep he will never waken unless somebody carries him out in the air.

Witness has never worked in a machine mine but has been in them and is in touch with them. Knows about the work in them and the conditions that exist. For instance: "If you had a trolley in this town, and you would place the trolley wire by the sidewalk within four feet from the ground, and that was on the side of the walk where people were walking up and down, and that wire were charged (some of our wires are charged with four or five hundred volts), we know that somebody at some time will touch that wire. As it is on the outside, trolley wires are hung high up in the street where you cannot come in contact with them. In the mines they are hung along the entry-ways and men walking along these passage ways stumble and fall on these wires. In fact, I saw one poor fellow one time who was going out. He had to move to one side of the entry to get away from cars that were coming towards him, and he stumbled and fell upon this wire. While the volume of electricity was not sufficient to kill him, it burned his hands or fingers clean off and both of his hands were absolutely crippled. We also find them electrocuted and dying immediately. Then there are other dangers in machine mining. The men are caught in the chains of the machine, for instance. The chain revolves at such a speed that a man's pants are liable to be caught in it. I have known in Ohio an instance where a fellow was drawn into a machine and they 579 had to go outside of the mine and get a surgeon to come inside of the mine and amputate that man's limb so they could get him away from that machine. Of course that man did not live but a few hours. These are some of the dangers in coal mines. * * * There are other dangers of this kind: There is a class of men coming into this country today, who are employed as coal miners, who have never seen a coal mine. They are given employment in a mine that generates gas or fire damp. They know nothing of those things and if they are given a safety lamp those men are liable—not knowing the danger—to strike a match if their safety lamp goes out and cause an explosion that will send to eternity all the men in that mine. Those are some of the dangers existing. Now, incompetent miners are employed after an examination, and we are endeavoring to have a standard placed so that a man of that kind cannot be employed by himself but only under the direction of a competent person. We believe by so doing that we are going to protect the competent miners in a mine. That policy is resisted by the coal operators where we have endeavored to secure laws governing that class of labor. * * * It would have a great effect upon the saving of human life and limb in the mines.

The United Mine Workers of America, as an organization, have taken an active part in securing remedial legislation for these evils. They have spent thousands of dollars, and have spent it in this way: They have had, sometimes—many of the districts now have—a standing legislative committee that waits upon the legislature or the members of the same. They employ attorneys to draft bills which they believe to be constitutional, &c., and have some member of the legislature to introduce those bills. They have those legislative committees there for the purpose of acquainting members of the legislature with their wants and desires and the purposes of the laws, have spent thousands of dollars in that way.

The organization does as much as it can towards acquainting ignorant foreign *emi*grants with the dangers of mining coal. Under their contracts, a mine committee is not supposed to go around the working places of the miners unless they have actual business in going there or unless they are called. In fact, the operators have insisted that this condition exist, and witness thinks there is a clause covering that feature in the contract existing in Sub-district 5, of District 6.

Witness being asked if membership in the union affords these *emi*grants an opportunity to get acquainted with these dan-580 gers of mining, witness says that the organization is largely educational, and it is meant to be so, but it depends upon the miners in each locality how much they make it so. It would naturally tend that way.

Being asked as to what steps have been taken in Ohio and other states to remedy the defects entailing dangers upon the miners the witness says: "We have made a very great improvement, and I will say this: That so far as the operators are concerned we do not find the same resistance, or it is not as noticeable along those lines *h*ow as it was some years ago. We are getting better acquainted and I believe that the average operator wants to protect his employes as much as practicable; but on account of the keen competition that sometimes exists—some of those things cost some money to put them in force, and we all know how men are in business; they want to make profits; and while the selling price of coal is low they lose sight of the fact that they are taking chances by not doing things that they should do, thereby causing a loss of life. And that is true of coal miners themselves in their working places at times. We have men killed because they take too many chances. For instance, a man may have a piece of slate hanging over the place where he is working, and he has a car there, and he says, 'I will load this car before drawing that slate down;' and he starts to loading the car but before he gets it loaded the slate is on top of him. Those are reckless men who take chances and it is those things that we are trying to avoid. Of course they cannot all be eliminated. Some one will be killed in coal mines so long as coal is mined, but I believe they can be minimized largely so that not so many of them will occur."

As to laws designed to avoid the dangers incident to the use of electricity in a mine, the witness thinks there is an agitation of that kind or a law proposed—is not certain whether it is a law or not; thinks there was a bill of that kind introduced in the Legislature of Pennsylvania; there is none and has been no agitation in Ohio; he believes that mines can be wired to a better advantage than they are today; finds a great improvement today over what existed three years ago, on account of the agitation in Ohio. Four or five years ago a bill was introduced in the legislature which had for its purpose the compelling of operators to cover their wires or have them insulated so that if a man came in contact with them he would be safe, but on investigation witness understands that insulation itself is not practicable on account of the operation being by direct contact. And on account of the insulation being imperfect they cannot get 581 insulation that would protect life as it should. Sometimes the insulation may break. A man may think on account of the wire being insulated that he can touch it, and by doing so at a place where the insulation is bad he would be electrocuted.

Witness understands that in Pennsylvania the matter of the greater safety of compressed air as compared with electricity is a very live question; the union believe, and everybody knows, that the use of compressed air is absolutely safe, while in the use of electricity there is a great element of danger. On the other hand, they find from the operators' standpoint that he can mine coal cheaper with electricity than he can with air; there are some men that put the dollar above human life; witness does not think they do it viciously but they do it on account of their greed to make money and possibly sometimes to save their money; witness thinks that many be *strrib*utable to the spirit of the times and the genius of our people; it would not necessarily be visited on the coal operator only.

Witness is acquainted with Mr. J. C. McKinley, who has testified on behalf of the plaintiff that it is one of the chief purposes of the United Mine Workers of America to unite all of the workers in and around coal mines to secure a minimum wage for the laborer and to enable also the operators to dictate a minimum price for their coal in the markets. As to this witness says they believe that if there is a minimum wage placed upon mining that it will compel the operator to go into the market and secure prices for his coal so he can pay those wages, and when a man is compelled to do a thing he will always find a way to do it, and they believe it is possible that can be done. They also believe that the American public is willing to pay the price as coal in the United States is cheapest—that is, coal mined in the United States is cheaper than any coal in the world, and the American public are getting their coal very much cheaper than in any other country in the world.

There is a very great discrimination in the selling of coal to those who use it for fuel for the producing of steam as a motive power, and the price that is paid for it by the great mass of domestic consumers; it is very evident that when the railroads get coal at prices quoted from eighty cents to a dollar a ton and some of them pay a little more—possibly a dollar and ten cents a ton—and the general public has to pay from three to five dollars a ton for coal, it is evident that those people are getting their coal very cheap as compared with the general public.

582 The United Mine Workers believe that the operators and the consumers of coal as a fuel could regulate the price of coal for these purposes on a more equitable basis to the great mass of domestic consumers throughout the country, and that it should be done; witness does not think that would affect the marketing of the coal so as to deny the operator a fair profit; if they would get more for their steam coals they would be able to reduce the other to a certain point—the percentage of coal that goes for steam purposes is so large that if they get more for their steam coal they could reduce the price of coal to the general public and still put their business on a better paying basis.

By the Court:

"Q. Right in that connection let me ask this question: What should be the effect of establishing a minimum price for coal that would warrant all operators in selling their coal based on that minimum price, upon the poorer classes of coal, or the grades of coal that would not rank high for steam coal, with the Pocahontas and the New River and the No. 8, which you speak of, in Ohio. Wouldn't it have the effect, in other words, of destroying coal operators in all other veins that could not compete in the market with them, and create a monopoly in favor of these better veins?

A. I do not think it would, for the reason if that would be true in that case, it would be true now, because the good qualities of coal would adjust themselves accordingly.

Q. Well, there is unquestionably an over-production of coal in the country?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And isn't it really a fact that the producers of these indifferent coals simply live by cutting the price of coal and selling it at a cheaper price?

A. Well, in some instances. How, we have in Ohio—and I can speak for those veins better than I can for others—we have some seams there that are poor in quality. For instance, in the Jackson district, as we cal- it, they are mining there what is known as No. 4 and No. 5; they are not a good quality of coal but still they find a market for it, and they pay our scale of wages there. Again, in that same section, we have what is known as the No. 2 seam of coal that is very good for domestic purposes, and I guess one of the best in the country. Still that coal maintains its price; those operators will not sell it unless they get a good round profit on it, and I believe it sells at the mine at from fifty to seventy-five cents a ton more than this No. 4 and No. 5 coal.

583 Q. You think, then, that the better coal would command a price above the minimum price sufficient to give the poorer veins the minimum price?

A. Yes, sir; just like a good garment will command a better price than a cheap garment."

Witness is not sufficiently acquainted with the seams in West Virginia to talk intelligently of them; he knows what is called Pocahontas coal, but knows nothing about the New River coal.

There is a difference between unionizing a mine and unionizing the employes in the mine; unionizing the employes—is having the men join the organization; unionizing a mine is creating joint relations between the employers and employes; a mine cannot be unionized unless the employer enters into contractual relations with the union; it is not the policy or purpose of the United Mine Workers as an organization to coerce a man into doing a thing against his will; this distinction between unionizing a mine and unionizing the employes of a mine has existed since the organization came about, and this method of unionizing a mine existed in 1906 and 1907.

"Q. Something was said yesterday about the strike in the eastern Ohio field as having gone into effect on the 20th of March, 1911. I want to ask you whether the operators in the Tuscarawas field were under contract relations with the organization to pay the scale beginning in the year 1910?

A. Yes, sir; on April 5th, in the city of Columbus, we met (that is, the officials of the Ohio miners) with the operators from the Hocking district, eastern Ohio, Guernsey and some other places that I cannot recall just now, and we drew up the contract which I believe has been read here. The substance of it was that they would pay an advance of five cents per ton for pick mining and 5.55 per cent on day labor, and the same relative price for machine mining, commencing then and expiring on March 31st, 1912. The operators of the Tuscarawas district—that is, the officials of that association—were not in Columbus that day but they sent word to us that they were ready to sign and that if we would forward them a copy they would sign it and return it; which was done."

Mr. Cassington, President of the Association, signed for the association; they were in the joint association that covered all the mines in that district; they operated under that scale until June 11th of last year; the operators of Eastern Ohio likewise signed the 584 scale; the operators in eastern Ohio are the same men that are operating the mines that the strike was called on in the Tuscarawas field; they entered into contractual relations through their representatives, for both fields; after having pursued that agreement for a while they declined to carry it out further in the Tuscarawas field; but they did continue to pay in the eastern Ohio field.

The scale of 1906 adopted at the convention in Indianapolis, readopted the scale of 1903. In 1903 the price for pick mining was ninety cents per ton; in 1904 the miners of the country accepted a reduction of five cents per ton; in 1906 the men demanded a restoration of the scale of 1903, which would bring it back to ninety cents a ton, which was eventually agreed to. If an operator signed that scale he had a right to go on and continue his operation as a unionized mine; it was not to the interest of the United Mine Workers to refuse to let anybody sign that scale; they courted signatures to that scale; and wherever they found an operator that was inclined to sign that scale, they went after him and tried to prevail on him to do so. Witness remembers the signing of that scale by the Lorain Coal and Dock Company, but not the date; he is informed that the Mound City Coal Company, located in the northern Panhandle of West Virginia, also signed the scale; the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company declined to sign that scale; and that was the difference between the Mine Workers' organization and the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company. As to why some operators refused to sign the scale, the witness says:

"The operators in Sub-District No. 5 were paying at that time two cents a ton for the handling of what we call 'draw slate.' They were contending to get that price off. As we understand it, that draw slate exists the same in the Pittsburg district as it does in eastern Ohio. In the Pittsburg district they were not paying this two cents and the operators in eastern Ohio were contending that they were coming in competition with the Pittsburg coal and that they should be relieved of this two cents per ton. Of course the miners demurred and the operators insisted that it should be done, and for that reason they refused to sign the scale as other operators in Ohio signed it—because they wanted that two cents off. Other operators refused to sign the scale because of this controversy on the two cents; they were afraid if they did sign the scale that the organization would hold them down to paying this two cents even if the other operators would succeed in getting it off. We met in 585 convention in Wheeling—the miners and operators of the district—and the scale was signed as the miners desired, with this exception; that there was a clause written into that scale to this effect; that at the expiration of the contract if the Miners' organization did not secure for the miners in the Pittsburg district two cents a ton to bring their price up to the price then existing in eastern Ohio, then the miners in Ohio would relinquish that price. The miners failed to get the two cents in eastern Ohio and in making our contract in 1908 the miners—according to their previous arrangement—surrendered the two cents a ton." This was done in order to equalize the burden among the operators as they saw it and make it uniform throughout.

"Q. Mr. Savage, I call your attention to the plaintiff's bill filed in this case appearing in the transcript of the record at pages 24 and 25, which reads as follows: 'After your orator started up non-union about June 12th, 1906, as aforesaid, efforts were repeatedly made by one or more of the defendants to induce your orator to unionize its mine, and, failing in that, efforts were made by some one or more of said defendants to bring about by inducement, persuasion, threats, and intimidation, and by various means and devices unlawfully to induce your orator's employees to cease working for your orator, and by use of like means, devices, intimidations, threats, persuasion and inducements to prevent men willing to work for your orator not to engage to work, or if having engaged to work, then not to go to work for your orator.' Have you heard that allegation read?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that true or not true?

A. No, it is not true."

At that time witness believes that the Hitchman was a non-union mine, and says that had the United Mine Workers sought to organize the employes of the Hitchman mine, they would not have sought to have them cease working for the company, because as an organization they do not desire to go to a mine and get a lot of idle men on their hands. It sometimes occurs that they do have them, but if the men quit of their own accord the organization is not responsible for it. Witness knows nothing of any movement, either as an individual or as an officer, in any way to have the men of the Hitchman Company cease working for it, in 1906 or 1907, or any other time since it started up non-union; he had nothing to do with it individually, and knows of no attempt of that kind on the part of the United Mine Workers. Neither as a member of the organi-586 zation, nor as an individual, did the witness attempt in any way to interfere with the operation of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company's plant after it started to run non-union.

"Q. I call your attention to an allegation on page 28 of the plaintiff's bill, appearing in the transcript of the record filed as an exhibit in this case, which reads as follows: 'Yet you- orator says that although it has refused to permit it, still the said defendants, further proceeding to carry out their conspiracy, are now endeavoring to unionize your orator's mine, and threaten, and your orator has reasonable ground to fear that they will, and so alleges, close down your orator's mine and keep it closed until your orator will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor.' Have you heard that allegation read?

A. I have.

Q. Is that allegation true or not true?

A. It is not true as far as I know.

Q. Are you attempting it in any way?

A. No, sir."

As an officer of District 6, witness says that no officer of that district, or sub-district 5, had any authority to shut down the Hitchman Company's mine in 1907, that he knows of; that it would have been against the interest of the United Mine Workers to have done so.

Witness is acquainted with Thomas Hughes; he was employed by District 6 as an organizer in 1907; but he had no power or authority to shut down the Hitchman mine; no organizer has such power; the business of an organizer is to try to induce men to join the union.

It is not the policy of the union to coerce men into joining the union; they are expected to join voluntarily and freely.

The scale adopted by the United Mine Workers in 1906, which the Hitchman Company refused to sign, expired March 31, 1908; since that time the United Mine Workers have adopted a new scale.

Witness says that the following allegation in the plaintiff's bill is not true: "Your orator further says that unless enjoined by this court, the said defendants acting individually and agreeing, confederating, combining and forming themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, as aforesaid, will, in pursuance of their unlawful purposes and designs, by enticement, persuasion or coercion, in one form or the other, bring about the shutting down of your orator's mine and the ultimate de-587 struction of its business, and will without the consent and against the will of your orator compel your orator to recognize said defendants and said associations in the further transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal, and will compel your orator to contract with its employes through the said defendants as officers of the said associations under such rules and regulations made and enforced by said associations and by said defendant officers as will enable the union to dictate the persons whom your orator shall employ and those whom your orator shall discharge, the wages your orator shall pay, and further will compel your orator to agree that each of its future employes as members of the said United Mine Workers of America shall owe and yield to said Union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employes would owe to your orator, and that they will thus take charge of, dictate the management of, and virtually control, your orator's business, and thereby perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon your orator which distinctly violate your orator's contractual common law, statutory and constitutional rights as a citizen of the State of West Virginia."

The United Mine Workers did not in 1907, nor have they since then tried to compel the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company without its consent to recognize the United Mine Workers in its contractual relations with its men; it was not then and is not now a part of the policy of the United Mine Workers to dictate to the Hitchman Company the men it should employ; an operator who is running his mine as a unionized mine has the right to discharge his men, for cause.

A mine cannot be unionized without an agreement signed up between the coal operator on the one side and the Mine Workers' organization as the representative of the men on the other side; the right to discharge a man for cause has never been denied to an operator. But there are cases come up that if a man is discharged in the union and they find he is unjustly discharged, the union will take up his case for him. If a man is discharged from a mine he ought to be discharged for cause. The union has had men discharged and admitted the cause and admitted that they should be discharged, but the union has prevailed on the operator and he has consented to let the man go back to work; that was by the use of conciliation.

By the Court:

"Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Savage, is that subject considered at all or embraced at all in any way in the contract you have 588 with the operator?

A. Yes, sir; we have a clause in our contract covering questions of discharge."

Witness states that the following allegation of the plaintiff's bill is not true: "Your orator further says that in effecting their said object of unionizing your orator's mine the said defendants propose and threaten to, and your orator being so informed and believing it to be true, alleges on such information and belief that said defendants will and are about to indulge in all the many methods of accomplishing their results by the use of threats, intimidation, force, violent or abusive language, picketing your orator's premises, picketing or patroling or guarding the streets and approaches to your orator's premises and going to the homes and boarding houses of your orator's employes for the purpose of intimidating or coercing them to leave your orator's employment and to picket railroad and street cars passing to and from or through your orator's premises for the purpose of intercepting your orator's employes in going to or from your orator's premises and for the purpose of intercepting and preventing persons coming to your orator's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering into your orator's employment." The United Mine Workers did not in 1907, or at any other time, authorize, direct or advise any of its representatives to use threats, intimidations, force or violence and abusive language for the purpose of intimidating or coercing the employes of the plaintiff to quit the plaintiff's service; they will not employ men who use abusive language, if they know it; it is contrary to the purposes and objects of the United Mine Workers; it is not the policy of the United Mine Workers to coerce anybody, whether employed or not, to become a member of their union.

The witness did not in the year 1907, either individually or as an officer of the United Mine Workers, enter into a conspiracy and confederacy or combination to injure the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company in any way in the operation of its mine; "we never do conspire; our work is an open book;" if there had been a conspiracy of that kind witness presumes that he would have known about it because matters of that kind of legislation, in the absence of a convention, are handled by the executive board; witness being the secretary of the board and taking the minutes of the board would surely know whether there was anything transpired along those lines. Witness understands by a conspiracy that men organize for the purpose of injuring another man or his business; nothing of that sort 589 was done with reference to the Hitchman Company's property or men; the union is not secretly organized for that purpose; they are not secretly organized for the purpose of injuring any man or his business, nothing of that kind was done secretly or openly; witness was not on the premises of the Company in 1907; knows of no one who was authorized to coerce or intimidate its men to quit their employment, nor anything of that kind, did not know of anybody that was representing the United Mine Workers in 1907, or at any other time, going to the Hitchman mine or premises, for the purpose of intimidating the men, or coercing them or doing any other unlawful thing to compel the men to become members of the United Mine Workers of America; the organizers have charge of the work of getting men to join the union; that is, they are instructed to go and if possible hold meetings and talk to the men and show them the benefits of organization as the union sees it; they are not acting for the union if they use anything beyond reasonable persuasion.

Witness understands that Lee Rankin lives at Martins Ferry and is employed by the Florence mine as superintendent; by becoming superintendent of that mine he forfeited his membership in the union. He does not now represent the union in any way.

Cross-examination:

Witness was born in Wales and came to this country in 1870; on direct examination the stenographer got his name wrong; it is "G-w-i-l-y-m," the Welch for William; he is George W. Savage the defendant; was less than two years old when he came to this country; came with his parents and located at Church Hill, Trumbull County, Ohio; lived there until he was about nineteen; that was formerly a coal producing country; witness worked in the mine in that county, starting work when he was about eleven years of age, mining coal; continued to mine coal there until he was about nineteen, when he moved to Portage County and mined coal there until he went to Indiana and mined coal there two winters—in 1887-'88 or 1888-'89, at Center Point, Clark County; was there two winters then about 1890 or 1891 returned to his home in Portage County, where he remained until he removed to Columbus about twelve years ago—about 1900; the occasion of his leaving Portage County and moving to Columbus was that he had been elected secretary-treasurer of the Ohio miners, and the headquarters being there, it was necessary that he make his home there, at least he thought so.

590 Witness became a member of the United Mine Workers in 1890 when they were organized; prior to that he had been a member of the National Progressive Union and of the Knights of Labor; he has been an officer of the union all the time; thinks he was president of the local union first, from 1890, and was in office all the time until he came to Columbus, he had been financial secretary-treasurer of the local assembly of the Knights of Labor during his stay in Indiana; held no other position previous to that or subsequent to it in the Knights of Labor or in the National Progressive Union; since moving to Columbus in 1900 witness has occupied the position of secretary-treasurer of District 6; was re-elected at the last convention and will enter a new term of office April 1, 1911, and run until March 31, 1912.

The United Mine Workers as a body hold national conventions, and witness has attended all of them since 1894; he has also attended the joint conferences of the mine operators of the central competitive states of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and the miners' organization; the first one that he recollects of attending being at Chicago in 1898, and was present when the Chicago agreement of 1898 was agreed upon or made; has attended each of the joint conventions since that time, and was present at the joint convention held in 1910.

Witness states that he is acquainted with Thomas Hughes and that Hughes was in attendance upon the last national convention held in January at Columbus; he was also in attendance at the last convention of District 6; does not know whether he was in attendance at the last convention of sub-district 5 of District 6; witness himself was not there; witness was at the last convention of District 6; it was held January 9-14; the last national convention was held commencing January 19, 1911.

"Q. In the proceedings of the American Federation of Labor—the executive council meeting—which is reported in the American Federationist of March, 1911. I find what purports to be a copy of a telegram sent by the United Mine Workers' organization to Samuel Gompers. The telegram is dated at Columbus, Ohio, January 20, 1911, and at the bottom contains the signatures of a number of persons, amongst them Thomas Hughes. * * *

This is the defendant Thomas Hughes, and witness believes the communication referred to is the report of the committee on resolutions, and believes Hughes was a member of that committee.

591 Witness believes he has attended all conventions of District 5 since 1894; he has also been in attendance at different times at the conventions of all the sub-districts of Ohio, but not all the same year; this year he has not attended one of them, but it is the first time he has missed in his attendance since he has been an officer.

Witness, upon request, produces and filed with his testimony to be marked "Savage's Exhibit No. 1," a copy of a certain strike order issued during the preceding month.

As near as witness can remember, he made the statement attributed to him on pages 112 and 133 of the document filed as "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1." Witness also states that he made the remarks attributed to him on page 114 of the same exhibit, and "the reason I said it was because if we were selling coal we would not sell it for 85 cents a ton, and I wish to say with reference to that extract you read there that the reason my remarks were directed as they were, was, that the coal operators in every convention, as a matter of argument against any attempts that we make, will cite West Virginia. We believe if we organize West Virginia that that would take away the argument they present to us in Ohio and the competitive fields, and we ask their assistance in organizing this State."

Witness recalls certain statements made by Mr. Chapman, contained in "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1," at pages 64 and 65, and says he has heard similar remarks made at various conventions, but that the organization does not agree with these statements.

On page 210 of the same exhibit a statement is quoted, as to which the witness says he believes he has heard such statements, but he does not agree with them.

"Q. On page 211, Secretary Perry of your organization is reported as having made this statement: 'The price paid for mining in West Virginia is not the only cost of production. Those men have bills to pay that you do not, and you know it. It is not necessary that I should mention what they are. As a result of the organization trying to organize that field there is an added cost to the production of those operators.' Do you recall any language of that kind having been used?

Witness: Does he say what the added cost is?

Mr. Gilchrist: No, sir.

Witness: Did you read all of his statement?

592 Mr. Gilchrist: All that related to that particular point. I will hand you the book.

(Witness is here handed "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1.)

A. Yes, sir; he made such a statement. I believe I know what he means but I do not know that I have stated it.

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes, you have.

Witness (continuing): He had reference, as I understand it, that the added cost that the operators of West Virginia were put to, of their own volition, was the employing and paying of policemen or guards around their mines. As I understand it they have such people employed in this state for the purpose—(interrupted).

Q. Of protecting themselves against your organization.

A. We know of our people coming in here to organize and they have been assaulted in nearly every instance that they have come here, and I presume that is what those men are paid for, or at least that is what they do; and if you will go back to my statement before that convention you will find that I asked the operators to see to it that the law protected the miners in this State and that we would then see that the state was organized.

Q. In other words, I understand you to mean that you stated before that convention that if the law could be so fixed that you would be given a free hand in organizing, that you would soon organize West Virginia?

A. I never made that statement; I do not think I did.

Q. I am asking you if that was substantially what you said?

A. I meant to say that if we had the protection of the law that now exists, that we will organize the state.

Q. Then you claim that you haven't the protection that the law gives?

A. We absolutely know it.

Q. What experience have you had in West Virginia in that line?

A. Personally, none. I know of an instance where men have telegraphed me at Columbus when they were assaulted in the streets of Fairmont, and I know of another instance where two men were assaulted at Welch, West Virginia, and appealed to a justice of the peace for protection and he refused to give it. They were even refused medical attention and were placed on a train and pulled into Columbus and placed in the St. Francis Hospital there, and they remained there for several weeks. They had no medical at-593 tention until they reached Columbus, Ohio. I would also state that I was in Fairmont—I believe it was two or three years ago—when coming from Morgantown. I got off the train there one night and went to Skinner's Tavern where I met some gentlemen, who were coal operators, in the lobby of the hotel. One of those men being a personal friend of mine when working in the mines, advised me not to walk on the streets of that city that night.

Q. Mr. Savage, you are a man of intelligence in the world, as the world goes and as your opportunities have afforded you a chance for experience and observation. Taking human nature as you find it in the world at large, if your organization seeks to and does do only good things, can you account for it in human nature, why there is such pronounced hostility to your organization in certain parts of the country?"

The witness says there is not so much opposition as there was twenty years ago; that there is not the opposition in his state that there was when he became a member; witness believes a majority of the operators there prefer doing businss with organized labor than without it; there may be some small non-union mines in Ohio; in Ohio the union contracts for a closed shop.

Witness is here read an item in the Wheeling Daily Intelligencer of March 22nd, 1911, on the front page, headed, "Call Troops in Big Strike Demonstrations Prevented in Illinois Town—Strikers are to be arrested." Witness is then handed the paper and says that he is not satisfied with it; that if it is correct his organization had nothing to do with it; that he read an article in a newspaper the day before stating that there were 200 Italians who refused to let the other workers in those mines go to work. And presumes that "the other workers" meant members of the organization, and knows that so far as the organization is concerned, they will direct the men to go to work; that Illinois is a union state, and if the occurrence reported in the paper is a strike it is a strike of men who do not understand the purposes of the union; that members of the union do not engage in riots or assaults, so far as he knows.

Asked as to the Irwin field in Pennsylvania, witness says he knows nothing of it except from reading; in years past it has been considered a non-union field; being asked if "it has not been a thorn in the side of the union" for many years past witness says that any field that is not organized, they desire them to be organized, 594 because it is their purpose to organize the miners of this country, and says "if you think that is a thorn in your side then you can use it as such."

Witness thinks organizers have been sent into the field at different times, but he does not know to what extent they succeeded, he has no direct information from there; has heard different statements but is not in a position to say which is right or wrong; witness has read statement that some of the operators in the Irwin field are operating and has read statements that some are not; the union is now sending money over there to support the idle men because they are idle; if they were working they would not get it. As to there being trouble there and the state constabulary being sent in witness says he is informed—does not know whether it is correct or not—that there was no disorder there until the state constabulary got in there; he is informed (does not know whether it is correct or not) that that institution as organized in Pennsylvania have murdered men there and have even torn down the stars and stripes and trampled upon them when a body of miners was marching in a parade. Witness knows of no acts of violence and disorder caused by the members of the union—believes a man is innocent until he is proven guilty.

Neither the national organization of United Mine Workers of America, nor the district bodies nor the sub-district bodies are incorporated.

Witness says that the strike called in Ohio, according to the notice filed as "Savage's Exhibit No. 1," is based upon the contention that the operators whose mines are closed failed to live up to an agreement made between them and the organization for the operation of mines in another part of District 6; asked if he does not think it would be more conducive to the successful operation of the union if it were in incorporated body, he says that is a big question. As to the enforcement of contracts he says the miners, when they sign a contract, have nothing at stake but their honor, as he understands it, and he also understands that the operators are in the same situation so far as it pertains to the organization. He does not think the operator would be responsible, in his or its property, for breach of such a contract; at least, they have never recovered anything of that kind; a coal operator can close his mines at any time he desires and they have no reason to know why he closes his mines; there they could not recover from that coal operator because he could assign different reasons. When asked if they could not recover against an operator who broke his contract, witness says when an operator closes his mine he has no contract.

595 The result of the failure of these operators to keep their contracts has been that the union has suspended work; they have suspended and the men are idle.

"Q. And they are to be idle until you have whipped the operators?
A. The circular don't say so."

Witness was in different parts of the state of Ohio during the 1906 strike; believes it began April 1st, 1906, but does not remember the exact date when work was resumed—it may have been August but witness does not think it was quite so long; witness was not in West Virginia during that time.

When asked if he had not taken refuge under the construction of the word "conspiracy" in denying that he was engaged in a conspiracy against the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, witness says that as he understands it there is no conspiracy connected with the organization whatever; that their laws do not prescribe anything that tends to a conspiracy, and they expect to carry out the laws of their organization at all times.

Redirect examination:

Witness was an officer of the United Mine Workers since 1890, but continued to work in the mines until he was elected secretary-treasurer in 1900. It was not, in 1907, or at any time before or since, the purpose of the organization of the United Mine Workers of America to form locals and get miners to join the union for the purpose of discriminating against the West Virginia operator and in favor of the Ohio operator; if efforts were made in 1907 to get the employes of the Hitchman Company to become members of the union, it was not for the purpose of discriminating against that company in favor of any other operator, it is the purpose to organize all the workers in the country, and if they were to do that they could never hope of organizing the miners anywhere. The Mr. Chapman to whose remarks attention was called on cross examination was a coal operator.

T. L. Lewis.

Age, forty-five; residence, Bridgeport, Ohio; occupation since April 1, 1908, President of the United Mine Workers of America; from April 1, 1900, until March 31, 1908, Vice-President of the United Mine Workers of America; became a member of the 596 United Mine Workers when it was organized in 1890; transferred his membership from the National Progressive Union of the Miners and Mine Laborers of America; the National Progressive Union was formed and made up of the organized Mine Workers who believed in what was known as the open system of organization; they believed in conducting their meetings openly, so that everybody would know just exactly what business they transacted. That was organized, as near as witness remembers, in the month of August, 1888, at Columbus, Ohio. Before becoming a member of the United Mine Workers witness — in and around the coal mines of Western Pennsylvania, Central Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana for a period of twenty years; worked as a breaker boy in the anthracite region; as a trapper boy in the mines of western Pennsylvania; as an oiler, or boy who greases cars on the outside of a mine; dumped the dirt or the refuse that comes from a mine in mining coal; laid track; set timbers; driven mules; in fact, everything that a man could do in what is known as a pick mine.

The preamble to the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America contains a declaration of the principles of the organization; section two of article 1 is a part of the method of adopting or endeavoring to secure the adoption of the declaration of principles; the organization has no other objects, except those stated in the declaration of principles; and in article 1 under the heading "Name, Objects and Jurisdiction."

"I might say in that connection that section 2 of article 1 where it states that 'the objects of this union are to unite mine employes that produce or handle coal or coke in or around the mines, and ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strikes'—that when that clause is understood by the operators and the miners and by the American people, 'conciliation' means the holding of conventions of operators and miners for the purpose of presenting their respective demands. That is the first step in the conciliatory feature of our union and has been practiced ever since it was organized. As to the next step—'arbitration'—it is generally understood by the operators and miners that we endeavor to arrive at intelligent conclusions as to our differences and arbitrate them ourselves. In other words, when we present our respective propositions, we enter into a general discussion of them. We then refer them to a committee of operators and miners, jointly, and under that system when that committee takes the matter up for fur-597 ther consideration, there are possibly a great many things that come out with regard to the detail or inner business methods of the operators that they do not desire discussed in open conference, because they are private matters. For instance, the operators have no desire to tell everybody the exact amount of profit they earn by their business, but they want to convey that information to the representatives of the miners as an argument against conceding what the miners' representatives may demand in an open convention. But there are times also, when they present those things in order to show that they don't want to let their competitors, or let everybody know that probably they are making no money. There are a gr-at many things in connection with that feature that are purely business matters and yet they are not laid bare to the people any more than such matters are in any other line of business. All these facts are brought out in joint scale committee meetings. After that if we can arrive at conclusions, or we can decide among ourselves that our demands have been unreasonable, and we have not been able to support them by the facts, and the miners have receded from their position, and the operators are unwilling to prove that their claims are correct and the miners incorrect—there have been times when it has taken place when we disagreed, and we failed to arbitrate our differences, and there was no desire to fer them to any other source or any other method of arbitration, that it has resulted in what we call 'strikes' or a suspension of work, and the general proposition is to try and bring about a condition to have a wage contract agreed to for fixed periods of time and do away entirely with the necessity of suspending the operation of the mines in any section of the country.

Q. Mr. Lewis, has that method, or not, been pursued, or has it been the endeavor of the United Mine Workers of America to pursue that method since its successful organization?

A. That has been its endeavor, and aim, and object ever since it was organized and it has been very successfully carried into effect."

This method now applies to Western Pennsylvania, Central Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Wyoming, Montana, Washington, part of West Virginia, part of Kentucky, part of Tennessee, Colorado, and province of Alberta and British Columbia in Canada.

As to that portion of the preamble of the constitution relating to the dangers of mining and the labor performed, the witness 598 says that the organizers of the United Mine Workers believed, and the members now believe that evidence has been produced from time to time to show that mining is the most dangerous occupation in this country outside of that in connection with powder mills. This fact has never been denied in joint conference with the operators, in discussing that phase of it. Witness believes that to secure an earning fully compatible with the dangers of mining and the labor performed, the miner should receive for his labor the highest standard of wages, and until the union was organized the men did not receive the standard of wages paid to ordinary, common, every day labor that required no skill—having special reference to men who work out on the highways, doing common labor, men who work on the sections, who never come into any danger of any kind or character as miners understand danger.

In regard to the second clause, relating to the establishment of the right to receive pay for labor performed in lawful money, the witness says the object of that is that previous to the organization of the United Mine Workers a miner might have worked for a month, or a year or two years and never have seen a dollar that he could call his own, "of Uncle Sam's currency." He was required to buy everything that he needed in what is known as a company store, commonly called by the miners a "pluck-me," and the reason that was given that slang term was because of the exorbitant prices charged by company stores as compared with stores run by an ordinary business man in a community. Since the forming of the organization, recognizing the iniquitous system of paying to miners, first, low wages, because of a disorganized state, and then taking everything from him, because of that disorganized state, and the existence of the company store, the men have been able by legislation—by securing the enactment of laws in various states—to practically wipe out that system of existence everywhere. It exists in some of the non-union districts yet.

As to the frequent and usual consequences of declining to deal at the company store in a non-union district, the witness says there are times when they are discharged from the employment of the company; but the more effective way to get rid of that man and make him voluntarily quit the employment of the company is to give him the worst place in the mine in which to work. In other words, the man who deals the most in the store receives more considera-599 tion from the mine foreman in getting a better place then the fellow who purchase the necessaries of life wherever he saw fit.

As to the clause relating to the "introduction of any and all well defined and established appliances for the preservation of life, health and limbs of mine employes," the witness says: "Under the non-union system—and I speak now of my own experience, and when I speak of my own I speak of the experience of thousands of others—under the non-union system I have been compelled to go home on more than one occasion because of the failure of the mine foreman to have a sufficient supply of timber either on the outside of the mine or delivered to the inside, in order that I could use that timber to properly timber the place and protect my life. Rather than run the risk I would go home and sometimes bring other men out. That is one of the appliances that we mean under this term—the furnishing of a sufficient supply of timber at the working places in order that we can protect ourselves. Another appliance, as affecting health, is sufficient ventilation. In other words, to provide by artificial means a current of air that can be made as near pure, at the working places, as artificial means can make it. Under disorganized or non-union conditions, and previous even to the creating of mine departments, miners were required to work in an impute atmosphere to such an extent that me were required to go home before even a half day's work was done; and I have known men to become ill and remain at home several days, and the result was directly traceable to this condition in the mine. Another safety appliance we believe in is where means can be provided to remove the water from the working places. For instance, if a room or entry is dripping and the water accumulates there, it naturally lies against the face. Under non-union or disorganized conditions you are told that you can work there or you can leave; but under union conditions we make it a part of our wage agreement that that water shall be taken out previous to starting time or the man who works in the place will be paid for bailing it into barrels and as the water hauler comes along he hauls it out, and that creates a condition that is in our favor, because if by using those local means to keep the p-ace dry, it is done. Another thing in connection with the matter: In some of our mining states where we have conditions of that kind the men get wet. Now, because it is impossible to take all the water out, they have to walk home, and in winter weather their clothes freeze on them and that is conducive to injuring their health. We have by legislative enactment, through 600 the influence of the organization, secured laws requiring the building of wash houses near the mines in order that the men may change their clothing as soon as they come out of the mine and go home in dry clothes. There may be other matters besides what I have mentioned but those are the general matters."

The effect of the endeavor of the organization to change those conditions has been very radical—so much so that different states have enacted laws requiring an increased inspection force, imposing heavy penalties on mine owners for their failure to provide sufficient ventilation, and providing every safeguard that artificial means can provide.

The condition itself established the desire for a change. It created in the minds of the men working under those conditions, a desire to have them changed, but they discovered that individually it was a hopeless task, and that was one of the things that prompted the Mine Workers to organize, and the organization grew in strength, by reason of coming together and discussing these things; it educated these men as to the best means of securing remedial legislation; and of course they then, by an organized power, exerted their influence with the legislative branch of the government and secured the enactment of these laws.

As to the advancement of legislative action on the part of the states since the organization of the United Mine Workers, witness says that one of the changes—in union districts especially—has been to require the largest possible volume of air necessary to give the men proper ventilation; the increasing of the inspection force in practically every mining state in the union—even in West Virginia; and the establishment of mine departments in the states where they had none. In addition to this, in order to safeguard the lives of the men, a number of states have enacted and others are considering the advisability of enacting other laws for having the shots fired outside of the regular working time.

In answer to a question by the Court the witness says that the inspection laws of the different states have been enacted at the instance of the United Mine Workers, and a number of them have increased their efficiency since 1890; prior to that time they had mine bureaus in a few of the states; but every mine bureau in this country can be traced directly to an organized effort on the part of the Mine Workers. Previous to the United Mine Workers, there were miners' organizations, but they were never powerful, and went out of existence because of the discrimination of the employer in endeavoring to drive them out of existence.

601 As to clause four: "To reduce to the lowest possible minimum the awful catastrophes which have been sweeping our fellow-craftsmen to untimely graves by the thousands; by securing legislation looking to the most perfect system of ventilation, drainage, etc." the witness says that this is practically outlines in his general review of the third declaration. The word "etc." is added to meet any new conditions that may arise, and the men have discovered in the development of the mining industry in this country that in mines where they generate large volumes of fire damp, or gasses, that it needs the most practical men to work in those mines in order to avoid the risks of these terrible explosions that take place; and they have had for many years an agitation in the organization, and in some states laws have been enacted as a result of that agitation, in favor of requiring men to pass an examination as to their competency before they will be permitted to work in places by themselves in the mines. In other words, they must work with practical men before they assume the responsibility of working alone. That would be a disadvantage to the operator only to the extent that the mine foreman is required to ask the question of a man that he employs, whether or not he can show a certificate to work in a mine where fire damp is generated. It would be a benefit to the operator in this respect; that if he employed incompetent men and as a result an explosion occurred and would, as an additional result sacrifice the lives of a large number of men, in addition to destroying the property, it would be to the disadvantage of the operator because he would have to stand the loss un- he had the property insured. It would be to the disadvantage of the mine owner because he would have to meet the condition and reimburse, so far as the liability laws would require, for the loss of the lives of these men, and yet it would not bring back those lives.

As to clause six: To uncompromisingly demand that eight hours shall constitute a day's work," etc., the witness says: "That is a matter that is open to discussion and I will state it according to my own experience as a miner. We claim as mine workers, that no man can work longer than eight hours and give the very best possible service, or what he is capable of giving. In other words, if a man goes into a mine and works continuously for eight hours, his physical strength will not stand for any more work than that if he keeps it up one day after another. That is the reason why we claim that, from that standpoint, and then our other reason in meeting the arguments of the opposition is this: If this is permitted, the 602 operators claim there should be no restriction on the number of hours because it may interfere with the production capacity of the mine. Our reply to that is, that the mine workers of this country do not work on an average over 210 or 215 or 220 days in the year—through no fault of their own but because there is not an opportunity to work, for the reason that the coal is not consumed that could be produced in operating the mines 300 days in a year." Witness thinks that in the end the result would be practically the same as if the restriction did not exist.

As to the provision in section seven as to the education of the children "by lawful- prohibiting their employment until they have attained a reasonably satisfactory education and in every case until they have attained fourteen years of age," witness says that so far as the effect on the development of the mine, or an increase of production is concerned, that provision has no effect — all. That the miners do not believe that any boy should be required to go into a mine under fourteen. "If you will pardon me I want to say from my own personal experience that had I had the opportunity of securing an education previous to the time when I was fourteen year- of age, the chances are that I would not be here now. And what is true in my case is true in cases of hundreds of other boys, and this has become so apparent to the nation itself that there is a widespread agitation all over the country by men in every walk of life and every profession, to legislate child labor out of existence.

* * * * * * *

"So far as mining was concerned (before the formation of the United Mine Workers) our boys could go in the mines at seven or eight years of age, if they wanted to, and very often the father would take the boy in the mine when he was eight years old in order to get for him half as many cars as a man would get out. The boy could not mine coal, but because of the number of men employed in the mine, and what they called the 'turn run' system, the father would mine the coal and load his turn and the boy's turn, and the boy was required to stay in there all day and do what he could to help.

* * * * * * *

"Gradually we have brought about a change in that respect until there are not many states where boys under fourteen are 603 permitted to go in the mines, and in some states they must be able to read and write and they cannot go into mines until they are sixteen. That is true in Ohio.

* * * * * * *

"I think the United Mine Workers had everything to do—in co-operation with members of other labor unions—in bringing their influence to bear upon the legislative branches of the states and requiring them to have those laws enacted by the presentation of facts to the members of the legislature, and of course by bringing pressure to bear on them. If they didn't support such a measure they would vote in the next election for them to stay at home. That might be called coercion but it is politics."

As to the eighth clause: "To abrogate all laws which enable coal operators to cheat the miners and to substitute laws which enable the miners, under the protection and majesty of the state, to have his coal properly weighed or measured, as the case may be", the witness says that declaration was put in there for the purpose of requiring mine workers to recognize the the right of their employees to select a representative to go on the tipple and watch the coal being weighed. In other words, he was a check for the weighman, and that is where the term "check weighman" comes from. That was done for the purpose of seeing the coal correctly weighed and properly accounted for, by the miners' representative. Before the organization of the United Mine Workers he was not allowed to see it and it was not practicable for a man to see the result of his own work. A man could not go in a mine and mine a ton of coal, and load it, and follow it out to the tipple and see it dumped and weighed; it was impracticable to do that; and when he expressed a desire that he and his associates should select a competent man to go on the tipple, that right was denied by the mine owners, previous to the time of the organization.

When a mine is operated with the co-operation of the United Mine Workers or under its jurisdiction, the question is not raised at all; they have a check weighman on the tipple at every mine where there are contracts existing between the United Mine Workers and the mine owners, with full authority to see every ton of coal weighed and to properly account for it, and there is no objection.

By the Court:

Q. Do you permit a system of mining by the car and paying by the car?

A. In some places where the car is measured that is done.
604 Q. Is there any objection to that system where is saves the expenses of a check weighman and all that sort of thing?

A. No, there is no serious objection to mining in any manner in which the correct weight or measurement can be ascertained, whether it is by the car, by the ton or what we call solid measurement. We have places where we mine coal at so much a foot.

Q. Well, it has one element of fairness in it—that it enables the man who wants to get out more cars to make a higher wage, and allows the company to ascertain which are the best miners, does it not?

A. Your Honor, I think not, if I grasp your meaning. There is no restriction on mining coal and putting into a car, where we have it by the ton, and a man may load 800 pounds or 2,200 pounds or 3,600, according to the capacity of the car. Some men when they build the cars up on the side—that is, above the body of the car—some men who are practical miners take the chunks of coal and built up more firmly and squarely than an impractical man, and they get more weight on the car. Others simply round up the car and have less weight, and it requires as much expense to haul out a car partly full as it would if it were completely full. Now, as to the other point you brought out there, in regard to loading by the car: If they load by the car there would not be any necessity for a check weighman except to see whether or not the men loaded their cars of a uniform height, and in that instance the weigh-boss, or the company'- weighman who has to keef a record of the car, might say that the car hadn't been loaded up full and he would dock that man one, two, three, or four hundred pounds, in accordance with what his judgment was, for deficiency in weight; then you would have to have a check weighman there to see whether he had arrived at a correct conclusion or not.

The real object of a check weighman is to see that the men get honest weights; the miners pay the expenses of a check weighman.

As to clause nine: "To secure by legislation, weekly payments in lawful money," the witness says that they had a system to pay by the month, and usually they never received any pay. "If I were a miner and I had to wait until the 25th of next month for the money I had earned this month, and I hadn't any credit, being a new man in town and no one knew me, I would have to get the necessaries of life somewhere. And the inducement to go and purchase the necessaries of life from the company's store was strong because I could not earn enough money ahead to enable me to 605 go and buy from independent groceries; and the idea of having weekly pays was to get our pay as often as possible in order that we might purchase the necessaries of life where it suited our convenience and the the best advantage."

The weekly pay system is not insisted on anywhere, because the miners do not believe it would be right to insist on the weekly pay system until they have established the semi-monthly system everywhere; at present the contracts provide for semi-monthly payments.

By the Court:

Q. Then practically the "pluck me" stores have been abolished and the semi-weekly payment system established, which is satisfactory generally?

A. Your Honor, I might say that the semi-monthly pay is satisfactory as a general rule; the semi-monthly pay is satisfactory, so far as I know, to all of us. The company store system in all of the districts where we have wage agreements entered into between the mine owners and the miners has been abolished. I might say that in that connection, however, that a large number of coal companies have in connection with their mine operations stores that are not directly connected with the company. They are organized under the name of a supply company and as a result of that, why, they naturally do everything they can to get the trade of the men, but they do it now on what we might say is a legitimate basis, because they must depend upon selling their goods as cheaply as anybody else in order to get the trade.

Q. And if they do sell as cheap the miners usually patronize them?

A. Very largely; especially in a community where it is made up solely of miners.

Q. How was this system with reference to the pay of the miners before the formation of the United Mine Workers and the making of the declaration of principles as you have stated?

A. Well, before the formation of the United Mine Workers nearly all the companies had company stores, but there were some exceptions. The exceptions were that some miners did not have company stores because they did not want to be bothered, in some insta-ces, with carrying the accounts or carrying the men, because they would necessarily have to carry them along if there wasn't much work at the mines. That applied usually to the smaller companies, wherever it existed, and the result was that where company stores existed the men did not have the opportunity that they have now to provide for their families the same things that they can provide at the 606 present time. That was due, to some extent, to the higher cost of the necessaries of life in the company stores as compared with the independent stores.

Witness considers that the establishment of the semi-monthly payment and the doing away with the company store system has been to the miner equivalent to advancing his earning power from ten to fifteen per cent. and possibly more.

As to the purpose declared: "To render it impossible by legislative enactment in every state, for coal operators or corporations to employ Pinkerton detectives, or guards, or other forces (except the ordinary forces of the state) to take armed possession of the mines in cases of strikes or lockouts," the witness says: "In the early history of the organization, and previous to the forming of the United Mine Workers, if the mine owners and their employes disagreed and that disagreement resulted in a strike or suspension of operations at the mine, the operators would endeavor to induce their own employes to return to work and on a failure to do so, that they would import other men to take their places, and also employ guards, ostensibly to guard the property but in reality to stir up a disturbance in that community in order that it might reflect on the intelligence of the miners and their peaceful disposition. In Ohio, where I lived, we had what was known as the Pinkerton system. The Pinkerton agency with its headquarters at that time in Chicago—away back in the eighties—made it their business to furnish guards to any mine owner or to any corporation in the country at so much per man per day. They did that, now, in lots of places in the country. If the guards were employed from among the citizens of the community, or within the state, at those times, our people did not seem to think that there was anything wrong about it, but when they would land in a mining community, in full uniform, with rifles on their shoulders and revolvers strapped in their belts, and drop twenty-five or fifty of those men off of a train in a community where a strike existed and no breach of the peace had been committed, we believed that had a tendency to arouse bitterness and precipitate a breach of the peace. As members of labor unions we regarded it as an armed invasion of the state, because they were employed by private corporations and were not summoned there by any of the authorities of the state. That condition existed in the Hocking district in 1884, to such an extent that—well, it bordered almost on civil war between not only the miners and the Pinkertons but the citizens generally. Growing out of the agitation to abolish that system, through the influence of the labor unions, the Ohio legislature 607 enacted what was called the anti-Pinkerton law, and they cannot in that state import any more guards under that system."

Witness thinks that action or change has improved the peace and good order of the mining communities wonderfully, and thinks the conditions themselves will bear that statement out.

As to the eleventh declaration: "To use all honorable means to maintain peace between ourselves and employers," etc., the witness says the practical purpose of that declaration is to endeavor to meet with the mine owners, through representatives, in what are called joint conventions, to present a proposition embodying what the miners believe they should receive for their labor, and the conditions under which they should be employed. The operators in presenting their side either deny in toto all of their demands, or state that they could not concede all of them and continue to operate the mine. The effect has been that from four states the miners have extended their wage contract mutually agreed to between the operators and miners, to all the states that witness has enumerated. There can be no advantage taken on either side by the voting strength, all parties must agree. The vote on a proppposition must be unanimous, one vote will defeat a resolution. It is the idea of the miners in the clause referred to to maintain peace between themselves and their employers, adjusting all differences so far as possible. It is impossible to adjust all of the differences because the operators have some things that they claim they ought to have and the miners have some things they ought to have, but in the general adjustment those things are waived, and they reach conclusions and sign up contracts, and the purpose of that is to do away with strikes. In other words, to do away with the suspension of mining operations, in the mining industries. To have both the mine owners and the mine workers as nearly satisfied as human nature can make it. It is impossible to make men perfectly satisfied.

It is not now and never has been the policy of the Mine Workers' organization to use force or coercion or any unlawful methods to promote its jurisdiction or the growth of the organization; the moment they attempt to extend their power of usefulness by that means, instantly they will go out of existence.

In negotiating with a mine owner to employ union labor, "the policy of the organization has always been to get the consent of the mine owner rather than to coerce him, and I might add to 608 that, that coercion may be susceptible of many constructions. For instance, we have had cases where a number of men that were organized at a mine have said to the employer, 'You can employ whoever you see fit, union or non-union, but if you want our services we reserve the right to say whether or not we will work there while that man is working there.' Some people say that is coercion. If it is, everything in life is coercion.

Q. In other words if you do not desire to have a mine filled up with non-union men you reserve the right to quit.

A. If we have a contract of that kind, yes, sir; and if we have a contract with the employer at that mine, and there isn't any agreement signed up, and there isn't any agreement existing verbally between us, then we reserve the right to quit; but we have never attempted to say to the other fellow that he shall not work there. That is his business."

Each local union is a part and parcel of the national organization, and receives its charter existence from the international organization; the national conventions are made up of representatives of the local unions.

The international convention has power to add to the constitution of the national organization, through representatives from the local unions; it cannot be changed otherwise; the constitution of a district is framed by representatives of the local unions in district conventions; the constitution of a sub-district is created and amended by the representatives of the local unions attending the district convention from within the territory covered by the sub-district organization.

The highest authority in the organization is the international convention. They formulate the general demands for the various districts throughout the country, and they deal with questions of a national or international character only. If there are scales of wages already existing throughout the different districts, the national convention decides whether there shall be a general increase or a general reduction.

When the national convention has decided to change the scale, when it comes to questions of detail, the district or sub-district directly affected has power to take up what are known as the internal differences, and agree with the operators in these respective localities as to what they shall be. As a general proposition, the international convention finding an existing scale as already applied and adopted in the various districts, decides either to let it alone as it is, or to increase it or to reduce it; except they add this: When they are 609 considering that feature of it, there is a clause usually in the demands that internal questions both as to prices and conditions shall be referred to the respective districts for adjustment. The reason why they say "prices and conditions" is, that it may be a condition of employment that they want to take up in the state or sub-district, or it may be a question of price outside the mining rate, the day wage scale and the hours of labor. It may be a question of paying for this water that has been described; in some districts they are not paying for it, in others they are; and there is a discrimination there in favor of one operator against the other. The matter is taken back to the district in order to have that adjusted. One operator might say "I won't pay for it because operators in other states are not paying for it." The miners may say "We want pay for bailing this water out because they are paying for it in another district." That is the detail; that is the internal difference; it is internal as it applies to that state. That is adjusted locally as applied to the districts or sub-districts.

The district can adopt such constitutional provisions as it may deem wise and proper, so long as that does not conflict with the national constitution; a sub-district can adopt its constitution to its locality so long as it does not conflict with the district and national constitution, according to article 12, and article 13 of the constitution of the international organization.

Witness is acquainted with the coal fields of West Virginia in a general way; the mining districts of West Virginia are designated as the Fairmont region and there is one section of that east of Fairmont known as the thin vein section. There is the New River field, the Kanawha district, the West Virginia central field, the Elkhorn region, and a thin vein of the Elkhorn known as the Thacker field. The Pocahontas field, located on the Norfolk and Western Railroad, is what is known as the Elkhorn field; the New River field is on the C. & O.; it is of the same character largely as the Pocahontas, except there are veins in the New River section known as smokeless coal. The Kanawha field is located west of New River, on the Chesapeake and Ohio and Kanawha and Michigan railroads; the northern panhandle is not a distinctive West Virginia field, and until recently most of its coal was consumed locally. In the development of the district, however, there has been a great deal of coal shipped out of the district.

In West Virginia the United Mine Workers operate at the present time in the Kanawha District and in the panhandle; at one 610 time they had locals in every mining district in West Virginia; at present there are fifty or sixty locals in the Kanawha field and at one time there were eight or ten in the panhandle; in the Kanawha District approximately three thousand miners belong to the United Mine Workers; there are no mine- in the Kanawha District proper that have union men that are run non-union; there are some in what is known as the Cabin Creek section of the district. The coal in the Kanawha section finds its market west, either Cincinnati, Chicago or the lakes. It is shipped to the lakes over the Kanawha and Michigan railroad. They (the K. & M.) could handle all the coal from there for the last several years that they could mine. There is a report being circulated now that the C. & O. railroad is connecting up with the Ohio Central in order that they can ship coal from the C. & O. side of the Kanawha Valley to the lakes via the K. & M. From one side of the valley, the C. & O. side for instance, they ship their coal to Cincinnati and it goes into the northwest that way, if it goes at all. The K. & M. is on the north side of the Kanawha River and they ship their coal by way of Pt. Pleasant. They cross the river at Pt. Pleasant and connect up with the Ohio Central lines, and they go into the northwestern territory that way. There is some coal shipped from the Kanawha District down the Kanawha River and Ohio River to Cincinnati. It is transferred at Cincinnati from the boats to railroad cars and shipped into the western territory.

The New River coal is shipped east, principally—some of it to Norfolk and there loaded on vessels and some of it is shipped up to the New England states. Some of the New River coal goes west because of its peculiar qualities. It is called smokeless coal and burns to an ash and hasn't any clinkers in it whatever. It is peculiarly adapted to certain purposes.

The Pocahontas coal goes both east and west, and a large part of it is converted into coke right on the ground. If the iron and steel industries are in a prosperous condition, they convert more of that coal into coke than if there is a stagnation in the iron and steel industries. It is generally understood that all the product of the Pocahontas field can be converted into coke, but there is not always a market for it; it is a splendid fuel coal, however. A large percentage of the product of the New River and Pocahontas fields finds its way into the use of the United States Navy at the seaboard; both coals are peculiarly adapted to navy fuel; also, there is some of the New River coal converted into coke.

611 In the last few years the Virginia Railway has been constructed connecting the sea board with the New River and Kanawha fields; it is to transport coal from those districts to Norfolk to be there transferred to vessels to supply the New England trade. Witness's own opinion is that it was built for the ultimate purpose of shipping coal from West Virginia via the Panama Canal to the eastern countries. That road comes into the Kanawha field at Deepwater, about forty miles from Charleston.

The Fairmont coal is shipped east and west both; some of it is reduced to coke; witness does not know about its coking qualities; it is more adapted to fuel purposes; it is a good quality of coal, known as the Pittsburg vein.

The unionizing of the Kanawha field has had no effect whatever upon the ability of the Kanawha people to compete with the Ohio people; it has not interfered with the development in that territory, nor with the marketing of the products from the mines in that district.

Witness remembers the unionizing of the Hitchman mine, but does not remember the exact date; does not think that the unionizing of that mine had anything to do with its ability to ship coal to the lake trade. Witness is acquainted with J. C. McKinley and has known him for several years, first met him in a conference with the miners. Mr. McKinley was an officer in the eastern Ohio association of coal operators, and took part in its deliberations.

The dues and assessments of the United Mine Workers' members, that they pay to the organization, are collected through the office and deducted from their pay and turned over to the officers of the local union, with some exceptions; in the Massillon District of Ohio and the block coal district of Indiana, they pay direct—the members do—to their own local union.

There are two funds, one called the regular monthly dues, and the other is the assessment. The monthly dues are paid for the purpose of defraying the running expenses of the organization, and the assessments are paid for the purpose of taking care of the members when they are idle, on account of a suspension of work or from other causes. They have no such fund collected by the national organization regularly; they collect a fund of that character by levying an assessment on the members to take care of men in some districts that are involved in a suspension or a strike; it is only periodically collected. There is one uniform assessment—apparently so—of one-half of one per cent. That is not a na-
612 tional affair. That is not a national affair. There is monthly dues of fifty cents per month that is collected by the local union, and of that twenty-five cents per month is paid by the local unions to the national secretary-treasurer, known as the per capita tax, to pay the current expenses connected with the conduct or running of the organization—office rent, stationery, printing, salaries and expenses of international officers, the executive board members, and international organizers who may be appointed to work in non-union districts or in union districts. The work of the international organizers is not alone a work of organization, but it is an educational work, or explaining to members, especially to our large foreign speaking mining population, why they should be members of the organization, and why they should be conversant with all the reasons for organizing in order to make better citizens of them—men of their own nationality. The railroad fare of the delegated from the local unions to the international convention is paid out of that fund; the international secretary-treasurer has charge of it; he is under a forty-five thousand dollar bond approved once a year; the president holds that bond; a certain sum of money, over a stipulated amount, is deposited in bank in the name of the international executive board members, that board is composed of a representative from each district.

The duties of the board are as they appear in article 2, section 5, of the international constitution:

"Sec. 5. The Executive Board shall constitute an International Board of Conciliation and Arbitration; shall execute the orders of the International Convention, and between conventions shall have full power to direct the workings of the organization, also to levy and collect assessments when necessary. It shall hold in trust for the United Mine Workers of America all moneys deposited in the name of the Executive Board by the Secretary-Treasurer, but under no circumstances shall said money be drawn upon except upon the written order of two thirds of the members of the International Executive Board."

"Sec. 6. The International Executive Board shall have power to order a general strike or suspension by a two-thirds vote at any time during the year that they deem necessary, and each member shall have one vote, and one additional vote for every two thousand members in good standing they represent, or a majority fraction thereof; provided, that as District Presidents, Vice-Presi-613 dents and Secretaries be called into joint conference for consideration before any general strike or suspension order be issued."

The international executive board has jurisdiction over international questions affecting the entire organization; the district branches and sub-district branches have certain jurisdictional rights and the executive boards of those districts have authority to act within their territory, subject to the approval of the international executive board. For illustration: The district board of district six fixes the rate of assessment for that district; the money is paid the district secretary-treasurer, who gives bond for the faithful accounting and application of the money; it is then under the control of the district executive board; the district board is made up somewhat differently in district six. In the smaller districts, a state that has five or six thousand mine workers of the organization, for instance, they have their board members elected from the entire membership. In some of the larger districts, in order to have a distribution of the executive board, there is one elected from each sub-district. In Ohio the president of the sub-district organization is a member of the district executive board, for the reason that the man who is president of the sub-district, being required to keep going around all the time to see that the members live up to the laws of the organization and the terms of the contract, is better able and more competent to pass judgment on questions coming up from the sub-district and enlighten the other members of the district board than a man who might be elected and is not required to go around and learn all these things. The executive board members of district six and the international board members are constantly employed.

When an agreement is made with an operator, it is usually signed by the officers of the district and the representatives of the operator; or when it is a sub-district agreement that has terms that the district organization will not deal with because of their peculiar local character, the officers of the sub-district and the representatives of the operator sign that agreement; in addition to that they have what is known as a scale committee that has taken part in all the deliberations during the time that this contract was being negoti-; ated; they are also called upon to sign this agreement. This shows the men at home that not only the officers have participated in the negotiations but also the men direct from the mines.

When a man seeks employment at a mine and is employed, it is generally understood, and used to be written in the con-

614 tracts made between the Mine Workers and the operators, that when a person accepts employment he agrees to conform to all the rules governing that mine, so far as the operator and the miner jointly are concerned; if the miner violates the constitution or the terms of the contract, the mine boss can dismiss him; then the representatives of the miners' organization will go there and investigate as to whether that was a personal matter that prompted the discharge, or whether there had really been a breach of the contract; when a man violates the contract the operator has the right to discharge him instantly; then the miner has the right to be heard for the purpose of ascertaining whether the cause of his discharge was just or not; if the mine boss who has direct charge of the mine, and the person who is discharged, are unable to agree or settle their points of difference, the mine committee is called in to investigate the causes that led to the discharge of that man. If it finds the man was justly discharged that is the end of it. If the mine boss and the mine committee are unable to agree, the mine committee takes the matter up with the superintendent, and upon their failure to agree the officers of the sub-district are called in. From them the dispute may go to the officers of the district and a representative of the employers, known as a commissioner, for final judgment. If they find after a thorough investigation, that the man was wrongfully discharged, he is reinstated; otherwise he is let go. In some districts they have a clause in their contract, agreed to and signed by the operators and the miners' representatives in joint conference, providing in the event the employe was wrongfully discharged, his reinstatement carries with it the payment of three or five days' wages for the time lost. In other words what is a penalty for the bad judgment of the mine foreman.

It is understood, and the contract requires that it be done, that when the United Mine Workers engage to work for an operator, they are to see that their men live up to their agreement; the organization must see that the men report for work on time, and that they attend to their work and perform it carefully and faithfully in every respect. They contract to work eight hours a day when a mine is in operation and are expected to be there, and any employe who does not perform his work faithfully, can be dismissed, subject to an investigation, as before states. If he does not demand an investigation nothing is done about it. It is the object of the organization to see that the members receive fair treatment, and that they also treat the operator fairly. The mine foreman 615 is selected by the superintendent, the United Mine Workers having nothing to do with that; witness has known instances, two or three, where the employee complained to the superintendent of the conduct of the mine foreman, but witness does not care to say anything about mine foremen as a general proposition, and charge them all up with the weaknesses of one man; as a rule they are good men and consider the welfare of their employes. Witness has frequently been brought in contact with them and worked under many of them of all nationalities.

Witness's attention being directed to the testimony of J. C. McKinley, a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, speaking with reference to the different organizations known as the international, district, and sub-district organizations, wherein he says that every one of these bodies, from the international down to the local, has power to levy assessments, says that the United Mine Workers is divided into four branches; that its organization is patterned somewhat after the United States government; the international organization, which was called the national until a part of Canada was organized, deals with international questions with the international officers; then there are the state or district organizations that are patterned after the states of the country; then the sub-district organizations, patterned to a greater or less extent on the county system within the states. Then there is the local union that in a sense might be compared to our township organizations. The local union gets its authority direct from the national organization, through a charter from Indianapolis, the headquarters, or wherever it may be. It is delegated with certain functions, and among them is the levying of monthly dues of fifty cents per month on the members; they have no authority to levy any dues outside of that, except where there is a desire to create a funeral, sick or benefit fund; that is not granted by the international organization, but is accepted, and a great majority of our local unions have a sick, accident and death benefit fund, kept up by the payment of fifty cents per month into that fund by the men, voluntarily; and in many cases the mine owners, aside from the provisions in the contract making an express agreement with the employes to collect the regular dues, also collect this sick and benefit dues and turn it over to the board of trustees and treasurer, who is placed under bond. Then, when there is a certain number of local unions organized within a given territory—take for instance an entire state—they form a state or district organization. In time, as the indus-616 trial development advances, more men are employed and they find it will best conserve the interests of the miners, they divide into sub-districts. The object of that is to keep in close touch with the membership, and to impress upon their minds the necessity of living up to the laws of the organization and comply with the terms of the contracts that may exist. In other words, it becomes more of an educational institution than otherwise, and they are able to put into effect their educational ideas as an organization, and create an understanding as to the rights of the employer to absolutely manage his own mine as he sees fit, and at the same time to try and adjust all differences without having any clash that would lead to a suspension of the operation of the mine. The assessments are all collected by the local union. They pay so much per month, to the international organization as a per capita tax; they pay so much per month to the district organization as a per capita tax. The per capita per member that they pay in Ohio is five cents a month per member, and that is paid to the district officers at Columbus. In Ohio, in addition to that, they pay one-half of one per cent of their earnings into a fund from which members who are forced to suspend work in order to require employers to comply with the contracts, are paid three dollars a week benefits. The amount to be distributed to the men who are idle is sent to the local officers by a representative, sometimes of the sub-district, or a committee selected by the district officers. A reliable and trustworthy man is selected to disburse those funds or dispense them. Then, in addition to that, the local men themselves give the name of every man and the number of his family to the persons who are distributing this relief, in order that they can see that it is equitably distributed. The amount that goes to the local depends on the membership; if there was a membership of one hundred there would be three hundred dollars per week paid.

As to the statement of Mr. McKinley that "they term a union mine as one over which they have absolute control and a non-union mine is one which is worked open shop, or one in which the United Mine Workers are not recognized," and that the term "non-union" is in a sense descriptive of contempt on the part of the United Mine Workers as applied to a man who is not connected with their organization, witness says he does not believe that statement is correct, and goes on as follows: "We have mines that we regard as union mines where all the men are not members of the organization. A non-union man is one who does not belong to a labor union and a union man is a man who does belong." There 617 isn't any such thing as a closed shop——there is no such thing as an open shop in the sense that some employers interpret that term— * *—and the reason for that is this: That when a mine is organized and the miners and employers agree to the terms of the wage contract, it is for the employes in that mine. When the mine owners kick against having the contract to include all of the men working in the mine, we say, 'If you are willing to make a contract only for the men who are members of our union, and we are now going to secure an advance of five cents a ton in the mining rate, we want you to stipulate in the contract that it is only union men who are going to secure this advance in wages, because we are negotiating only for the union men. They tell us very promptly, 'Why, that is absurd. All these men that don't belong to the union would immediately go on a strike or join your organization in order to get the advance.' Then you admit that we are negotiating for all the men in your mine? and as a matter of right we should negotiate for all of those men to see that they live up to the terms of the contract, and we cannot make them live up to the terms of the contract unless they are members of our organization; we cannot deal with them; then the other proposition is when they say they want to have an open shop agreement. I claim that there isn't any such thing, because if it is open to do as they please, they will gradually get rid of all the men that belong to the organization and it becomes an absolutely closed shop from a non-union standpoint. The only difference in the two situations is that we want a closed shop where we can jointly negotiate a wage contract for a stipulated time and be responsible for all of our men who are members, who work in that mine, and hold them responsible for their part of the contract that we negotiate. There is the whole situation. And coming back to the proposition of regarding a non-union man with contempt, there is nothing to that, because there isn't any of our men but would go to a non-union man and talk to him and try to induce these men to join with us; it is not likely that we would go and associate with them if they were men that we have the greatest contempt for, and for that reason I think that is an incorrect statement."

By the Court:

Q. What is the origin of these *o*pprob-ious epithets of 'scab' and 'black sheep' during labor troubles?

A. Your Honor, that arises from a condition where men take the places of other men who have quit work.

618 Q. Does it arise under a condition of this kind—that men refuse to work?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when they have been given an opportunity to work and refuse to do it, other men come in and are employed by the mine owner and then the men who refuse to work, but who are still there, apply these epithets?

A. Yes, sir; there is where the term arises. They are not called non-union men because they have taken the places of the men formerly employed there; and I might say that is not used as a general term. They use that in getting into discussions and arguments, when one word leads to another. They don't, for instance, ever talk in a slanderous way to the men. Say we were working there in a mine—four hundred of us—and all of us had suspended work on account of some complaint we had, and that we had taken the matter up, and other men had taken their places. We let them take our places—(interrupted)——

Q. Practically, doesn't it establish a 'dog in the manger' situation where one set of men won't work and won't let any one else do so?

A. It establishes this condition: That when the men who are idle endeavor to persuade the men who have come to work—men who have been induced to come to work—and who have been induced to come to work at a place where they don't know anything about the conditions, and if a union man can explain to them what the condition is, in ninety-nine times out of a hundred those men will quit work. They have come there to work because they have been misled and deceived in accepting employment. But some men will not do that; then when they get into a discussion and talk on the highways and in the saloons and a hundred and one places, they refer to them, or to that fellow, as a 'scab'—that he took a fellow's place down there. That is just how the term comes about, and it puts that stigma on a man who takes that job just just the same as anywhere, in any community, we find people who have a stigma on them. For instance, we would say, 'There is a notorious gambler going down the street.' 'How do you know that?' Everybody knows it, and yet if you undertook to prove it, it would be quite a difficult thing to do."

There are agencies established throughout the country who make it their business to furnish mine owners, or any other employers of labor, with strike-breakers at so much per day. For instance, they furnish those men for five dollars a day to the employer and the employer has those men t[illegible]ork for them at a rate of $2.50 or $3.00 per day, and the agency gets the difference. They 619 are established in New York, Chicago and Pittsburg as the witness knows personally. They gather up any kind of men that they can get hold of, not for the amount of labor they will perform, but for the irritation they can create in the community by going around among the men who are on a strike and breeding trouble and breaches of the peace, because when anything of that kind occurs it brings discredit on the men who are on a strike. It creates prejudice against the men who are on strike. These strike-breakers are English speaking foreigners, many of them—the riff-raff of the large cities; they make a business of going from one place to another, and just as soon as a strike is over these people are gone.

In answer to a question by the Court witness says that, speaking for himself, he has not heard of any good reason why the United Mine Workers of America should not be incorporated. It may have its advantages and it may have its disadvantages. Under the present system the mine owners realize they cannot sue for a violation of the contract any more than the men can; and witness believes it is just as much to the advantage of the operator not to have the organization incorporated, as it would be to have it incorporated. Witness has always believed that contracts should be complied with in every particular by every party to them, to the limit, and positively opposes strikes as the best method of settling difficulties.

The United Mine Workers had an organization in Alabama until 1903, when a difference arose in respect to the terms of the wage contract. This was submitted to a board of arbitration of which witness was a member, and on which Judge Gray was a member. A decision was handed down that was a compromise. After that the operators made war on the organization the following year and exterminated it in Alabama with the help of the Governor of the State. During the time the organization operated there, they held the usual joint conferences and negotiated contracts, but when this arbitration board handed down its decision that was the last contract the organization had in Alabama.

It is a provision of the contract made by the organization that members of other craft who work in and about the coal mines, who have their own peculiar organizations, must be members of the United Mine Workers, with certain exceptions. Originally the contract did not provide for the wages of the men working outside the mine, but in time the United Mine Workers learned that if they negotiated a contract with the mine owners, the engineers, 620 for instance, would come along and organize an engineers' union, and they would make demands and look to the miners to sustain them in their position, and in the middle of a contract period would cause a general suspension of the operation of the mine—just one or two or three men at each mine. In Illinois, before the United Mine Workers absorbed the engineers by contract arrangement, the engineers organized the Coal Hoisting Engineers Brotherhood. There were in that brotherhood probably five hundred men in the state, or maybe less, and in the midst of a contract period, when the mines were working steadily and everything going on smoothly, they made demands and caused a general suspension all over the state of Illinois, affecting sixty thousand people. The United Mine Workers resented it and told the operators that they would not stand for that kind of business, and told the engineers that they were wrong and that they should have negotiated their contract when the miners did; and from that the United Mine Workers absorbed the engineers, a number of them unwillingly, into the miners' organization. That arrangement has not interfered with the regular system of operation of the United Mine Workers. It is now provided in the contracts, in order to safeguard property, that the engineers and pumpers must continue to work even during a suspension or strike. In addition to that the contract provides for any other men necessary to protect the property; they are required to work during the strike. If they refused to work the union would supply their places. Witness would not keep a man in the union who refused to work under those circumstances, but there has never been a case of that kind. At first the operators were not inclined to believe in the system of including all these men in the contract relations and rather resented it; but after the experience referred to they wanted them all in the same organization, so that it has now become a part of the system with the operators and the coal miners, and the reason is that if they could organize the engineers into a separate organization, they could organize the blacksmiths into another, the electricians into another; the firemen into another; and the result would be that instead of having one organization about the coal mines, there would be as many as there are occupations. Now, instead of the mine owner harmonizing these elements composed of these different classes of employees, the miners' organization has got to do that, and the United Mine Workers fix their demands whether they like it or not, in the interest of the industry. The stationary steam engineers 621 have an organization with branches all over the United States; the carpenters have an organization with locals all over the country—two hundred and sixty or two hundred and seventy thousand members; the blacksmiths are organized and the electricians have their organization. Witness knows positively that they have labor unions, and are seeking from time to time to induce members of the United Mine Workers to join their organizations, but the United Mine Workers will not permit it. The object of that is to secure harmony in the mine among the employes. That is one of the agencies illustrative of the part of clause 11 of the preamble, which says: "To use all honorable means to maintain peace between ourselves and employers; adjusting all differences, so far as possible by arbitration and conciliation, that strikes may become unnecessary." If the United Mine Workers simply confined themselves to the men directly connected with the production of coal, the other fellows would organize and there might be a strike at any time. The United Mine Workers does not prevent these other men from becoming members of their own organizations, but the rules of those organizations are not permitted to interfere with contract; they must comply with the rules of the United Mine Workers so long as they stay in the mine.

As to the statement of Mr. McKinley: "Up until September 1, 1903, the United Mine Workers, although they had claimed it, were never given any jurisdiction over the firemen and engineers, but during the fall of 1903 the question was raised vigorously by the United Mine Workers. The late Senator Hanna was in politics at that time and quite influential in this coal district," (sub-district 5, district 6) "and he got the operators to give the control of the firemen and engineers, to a certain extent, to the United Mine Workers. After his death, the operators refused to allow the mine workers control of the firemen and engineers, and put the status of these two classes of labor to where it was before September 1, 1903;" witness says:

"A. Why, if that statement were not thoroughly understood it might be misleading. As a matter of fact the United Mine Workers, in the sense sought to be conveyed in that statement, never had control over the engineers, firemen and electricians, but we have always exercised control over these men wherever we could organize them, ever since we have been an organization. We have not always been able, as I stated a moment ago, to get the mine owners to make contracts that would incorporate in them the wages to be paid 622 those men, and we could not get that for the reason that the operator said, 'This class of men we will not surrender over to the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers.' In other words, they did not want the miners' organization to be placed in a position to tell the engineers, firemen, pumpers and electricians to suspend work in the event we disagreed and called a general strike. We recognized the force of that because if we took the position that we must have jurisdiction over those men, and our people (human nature is the same the world over and I want to say right now that the officers of the miners' organization are not any more perfect human beings than any other men in other walks of life)—I want to say that if we got men at the head of the organization who were injudicious enough or foolish enough to order these men out along with the body of the men when they stopped work, there would be danger of the property going to destruction, and that was the argument used by the operators. It was the strongest kind of an argument and one that could not very well be refuted by our representatives, of course. That argument was made year after year and several years until we had that experience in Illinois that I recited, and the same thing occurred in Indiana. Then when we made contracts and incorporated the wages of these men in it, we were not able to make it uniform, but we would provide in the contract that they would get the same advance as the other employees around the mine, with the stipulation that they were under the control of the mine owner in their work. * * *

"Q. I call your attention to Mr. Upstill's exhibit No. 1, at page 437, in which the following appears: 'It is further agreed that any interference on the part of any member of the U. M. W. of A. of a mine committee, or local officer, with the duties of engineer, fireman, electrician or machinist, shall subject such member or members of the U. M. W. of A., of a mine committee, or local officers, to suspension or dismissal by the operator, with the understanding that the engineers, firemen, electricians or machinists who are now members, shall remain members of the U. M. W. of A., and those who are not members shall not be compelled to join.' Is that a provision that relates to district six of the United Mine Workers of America?

A. That is a provision of the contract in what is known as subdistrict five of eastern Ohio. And I desire to say that there is also an implied contract, by understanding, that if there are any men who do not belong to the organization in any of the mines of east-
623 ern Ohio, named in this section, and they go on a strike, that they will not be responsible as an organization. In addition to that, if they import non-union men to take their places, we are not responsible for what transpires."

That is one of the internal matters which was referred to the particular parties interested in that sub-district, for the reason that we never made the engineers, or firemen or electricians contract in the international conventions.

As to the statement of the witness J. C. McKinley that he thinks probably the first method of promoting the growth of the United Mine Workers, is to ask the operator to compel the men to join the union, Mr. Lewis says he never heard of that before; that the organization has never in its history sought to compel men to join it; that its policy is to go into a community where there is a mine and get acquainted with some of the men who work there, and talk to them about the organization and get them interested in joining; and after a sufficient number could be gotten together to agree that it was a good thing to join the union, a meeting would be called to organize those men, just the same as any other fraternal society; and if ten are gotten—it requires ten to form a union—they elect a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, and they would be obligated—the obligation is an open book, because anybody can get it that wants it—they would be obligated to conform to the principles of the union. Then they would go ahead and endeavor to induce other men working in that mine to join the union, until they got all the men, if possible.

After the organization of the union, if the men believed that they were not being paid a proper rate of wages, or if there was anything in the condition of the ventilation that was wrong, or in the conditions of the employment surrounding those men, they might call a meeting and select a committee and go to the mine boss and talk to him, but they would not talk about the union, and they would not ask the operator if he had ever recognized the union; they would simply go there with their petition and grievances and take them up and try to adjust them. After the operator discovered that the men were unionized they might be discharged. Then they would have a meeting and the rest of the men would go on strike, possibly, if they cannot get the other men reinstated, and the cause of that strike would be in that case the discharge of those men for belonging to an organization, and denying to them what the union believes to be their rights.

624 "I might add to that that we have non-union districts where, if they would endeavor to go and talk to a man, the companies have men employed to assault our people with clubs or anything else they have got—in this state and other states. I might say that I could not go down to Fairmont and remain in that city. That is the situation and I am prepared to prove it. * * *

I was in Fairmont a few years ago when we had organizers there, two of our men were walking along the street and were assaulted on the main street. One of them had two ribs kicked in and the other had his face cut clean open. There was quite a lot of excitement there, and if had not been for—there was an Odd Fellows celebration there that day and one of these fellows belonged to the Odd Fellows—one of the two assaulted—and appealed to that society to protect him, or he would not have come out of it alive. I was telegraphed for and that is how I came to Fairmont. I was telegraphed for and went to that city and the moment I stepped off the train four or five fellows walked up street with me. I says: 'What do you want?' and they said: 'What are you doing here?' I says: 'I don't know as that is anybody's business but my own.' I had been warned what was going to take place and the first thing I did was to walk up to the mayor's office and I said to him: 'I want protection while I am in this city.' And he says: 'What do you mean?' I says: 'I am a representative of the United Mine Workers, and two of our men have been assaulted here on the main street and I don't propose to be hurt, and I will hold you personally responsible if anything happens to me while I am in this city.' He asked me if he should furnish a policeman to walk along with me, and I says: 'No, I don't want a policeman to walk along with me; I am no criminal; but,' I says, 'I hold you personally responsible for anything that happens to me while I am here, remember that.' I was in his office. I went down street and I noticed there was a policeman walking not very far behind me. I went over to where these fellows were laid up and took them away from there. There is a man in this building who was assaulted not so very long ago walking along the street, not in Fairmont, but in Clarksburg. And that is the situation. If anybody is even suspicioned of being a representative of the miners' organization in the Fairmont region, he is deliberately assaulted in broad daylight on the streets of that city.

I would consider that if I went into that region to talk to the miners at Monongah, Shinnston, or any of the mining towns
625 in that section of the state, that the moment I went to talk to anybody, either individually or collectively, I would be assaulted, and I would not consider that my life was worth five cents."

Practically the same state of affairs exists in the New River section of this State. It also prevails in the Norfolk and Western field, the Thacker field and the Holden field, that is a new section on Sandy River.

When representatives of the organization visit a non-union field it is their policy to see the men; they could not hope to organize them in any other way; they never try to do so in any other way.

The condition of the mines in Ohio that are operated union, with regard to ventilation and the safety of the men, are fairly good; they are very much better than they were before they were unionized; witness has not been in the mines of West Virginia except two or three in the Kanawha District; knows nothing personally of the physical condition of the non-union mines in the Fairmont district.

Witness says he helped organize the United Mine Workers in the first place; was president of the eastern Ohio sub-district in 1895; was afterward secretary of district six, was elected vice-president of the organization in 1900; was elected president April 1, 1908; but he never heard of the system of organizing known as "blocks of four," as described by the witness J. C. McKinley—knows that it does not exist, so far as the officials and representatives of the United Mine Workers are concerned.

Being asked if the men demand recognition by the operator immediately upon the organization of a local union the witness says:

"A. No, sir; the only way in which a mine foreman, if at all, would know that it was organized, would be by asking the mine committee by what authority they came to him to settle any grievance in the mine. The other method would be through talk from some friend of his that they permitted a local union there. We never think of going to a mine boss and saying to him: 'Now, we have organized and demand that you recognize us.' Why, the very fact that he had treated with the committee is a recognition of the union."

"I have believed and believe now that the mine owners of West Virginia would get better results if their mines were operated under the union system. My reason for that is that they would instill in the minds of the men who are now working in the mines 626 a desire for greater efficiency. It would give them better opportunities to educate the men, and the better a man is educated the better citizen he makes, and in my opinion it would raise the standard of efficiency of labor in this state. And I might add that with the natural conditions in West Virginia in the mining industry, they would always have among the best of the mine workers of this country, if they had their mines worked and operated under the union system. Now that is not sentiment at all. It could be borne out by things I could explain but I haven't any desire to do so. "When we had non-union conditions in the older mining districts there was no control—in the sense there is now—on the part of the mine management. Men who worked by the day had to be watched a great deal closer in performing their labor than in mines governed by joint contracts. In addition to that, in communities where men can associate together and have free speech and opportunity to discuss labor conditions, that raises the level of the people in that community; there is a community of interest that has a tendency to elevate those people and make the men more responsible in the performance of their work. In addition to that they contract to work a certain number of hours in a day when the mine is in operation, and a certain number of days in a week. They cannot go away whenever it suits their convenience; and I believe that in addition to that—and it is borne out by making comparisons between a non-union mining community and a union community—that the people take greater pride in their surroundings and home comforts and everything else that goes to make life better."

As to the state- of the witness McKinley that from a union standpoint, a union man is a fair man and a non-union is an unfair man, witness says:

"A. Well, not knowing what Mr. McKinley had in mind, I am not able to give an intelligent answer to that. But I might say this: That I know of non-union men working in the mines that are absolutely as fair as union men. They have not been convinced in discussing the matter that the organization is of any benefit to them. And we are all more or less selfish and prompted by selfish instincts. I am one of them who believes that we are prompted by selfish instincts in doing a great many things in life.

Q. He was asked then to explain and he said this: 'An unfair man is, just to put it in a polite word, a 'scab' or 'black sheep' stating as a fact that you regard a non-union man as a 'scab' or 'black sheep.' What have you to say about that?

627 A. Well, in my judgment, that is a mistake. The fact of the matter is that I do not regard some of the men who are called 'scabs' as being such. In order to thoroughly understand that, a 'scab' is a man who knowingly and deliberately goes to work and takes another man's place, knowing that he is doing wrong. He has been brought into the community from some outside community. They do not, understand, come in there seeking employment. He has been hired to come in there. That is the man who is looked upon by the representatives of labor unions as a 'scab.' And I want to say here that there are 'scabs' so called, who can be fair outside of that particular line they are engaged in. There are two kinds of scabs in union parlance; one is the fellow who is deceived into coming into that community, and the other is the professional. But so far as a non-union man being a scab is concerned, there is just as much variance between the non-union man and the scab as there is between black and white."

The word "scab" is not intended as an appellation to non-union men; it is not so applied by the organization; witness does not know of an occasion in all his experience where any one could apply that language to men.

There is nothing secret about the United Mine Workers, as was stated by Mr. McKinley. The only thing as to which there is any secret is what is called a joint meeting, when there is a joint scale committee meeting; then the operators request that the representatives of the press be kept out. That is for the purpose of keeping the representatives of the press from knowing their inside business. A stenographer takes the proceedings of the district and national conventions, and they are published, records of the meetings of the local unions are kept by the secretary; and any person wh is interested who desires may go and examine the records of a local union. (Witness used the expression "any gentleman here.")

The initiation of a member into a local is practically public, because the application is printed in the manual and everybody can get a copy. It simply goes through a form of complying with the laws of the organization. The obligation appears on pages seven and eight of "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 2," and any person in the United States, man, woman or child, can get a copy of it. It is not material where that obligation is administered; in fact, it is not really essential that it be administered at all, for there is a provision in the constitution that men whose dues are 628 checked off under joint contract relations, are regorded as members of the organization: affiliation with the organization and compliance with the regulations makes a man a member. The obligation witness considers a remnant or relic of the secret branch of which the organization was a part in the organizing. The miners of the country felt that the only way they could organize was secretly, and they finally organized what was known as the National Trade District Assembly 135, within the Knights of Labor with a membership extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean, wherever mining was done. Then came into existence the American Federation of Miners and Mine Laborers. A dispute arose as to which organization or society was the most effective in protecting the rights of the miners, and out of that dispute a quarrel developed that became very intense. Finally there was a conference called in Indianapolis on the 12th of December, 1889, and it continued between the 12th and 18th of the month. The ground work of the United Mine Workers was laid there, and in January, 1890, the United Mine Workers of America was formed in every mining community where there was a local of the National Protective Association and a local assembly of the Knights of Labor. It was agreed as a part of the consolidation that the work of the organization should be conducted in the open, but that the president, vice-president and secretary of the local union of the United Mine Workers should become the master workman, worthy foreman and secretary of the local assembly, in order that they could gradually assimilate these two unions. There had been such intense feeling created between the advocates of the open organization and those of the secret organization that it took time to wipe out that feeling and bring them together, and the result of that was this obligation was placed in the manual for the members to take—the Knights of Labor in secret and the United Mine Workers of America in the open—until gradually the Knights of Labor dropped out of existence, and it became the United Mine Workers of America.

As to the card system employed by the Mine Workers, as stated by the witness McKinley, the witness says it is provided for by the constitution and:

"A. The purpose of that card system is this: If I hold my membership in local No. 13—that is my number by the way, and I am working in the Wheeling Creek mine, and I desire to secure employment, say in Barton, Ohio, under our rules I am compelled to transfer my membership there. A card is made out by the presi-629 dent and financial secretary of my local union, in which my name is filled in giving a description of me. I take that card—it also certified that I am paid up in that local union—and I hand it to the local union at Barton, and they accept it and enter my name on the record book and I am a member of the organization—transferred membership." That is done to prevent men from imposing on the organization. A copy or fac simile of this card is found on pages 22 and 23 of Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 1, except that the card is printed on pink paper with the seal of the organization in blue printed in the center. When this card is deposited, the local secretary tears off a part of it and returns it to the local union issuing it; that is a further check on the matter.

A local strike may arise from any number of things; the failure to agree upon the cause of the discharge of an employe may lead to a local strike, but should not, under the contract; or a local strike may result from having an organization at a mine having no contract. A local strike cannot be instituted without the investigation and counsel of the district and sub-district officers. Such a srike might take place, but it would be in violation of the laws of the organization. The purposes and one of the objects of the organization is to avoid the necessity for strikes under any consideration.

Witness says there is no foundation in fact for the statement by the witness McKinley that it is the purpose of the United Mine Workers and the operators who meet with them in convention to so place the West Virginia non-union operators that their coal cannot come in competition in the same markets where they now compete in the west and northwest; that the miners' organization is not attempting to do this by organizing the mines of West Virginia. In conventions the operators of the central competitive field, including western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, have always urged against improving the condition of the miners and against advancing the wages of the mine workers from the standpoint of their unability to do so and earn a profit on their investments, taking into consideration the cost of producing coal and the selling price of coal. When that argument is met by the miners and they find that they are not able to defend their position, they then always bring up as a bugaboo the argument of coal being shipped from West Virginia, and that if they advance the wages of the men and add any more to the cost of producoion, it will simply drive the trade to West Virginia; and incidental to that, they say that we should organize the miners of West Virginia in order that 630 their trade will not be taken away from them. The reply of the miners to that is that if West Virginia is organized, they are as much entitled to their share of the general and northwestern markets as operators in Ohio and western Pennsylvania or anywhere else. Consequently there can be no foundation for any such statement.

All the coal from the Kanawha district is shipped either into the northern northwest or the southern northwest. Part of it goes by the Kanawha river to the southern market. There isn't any coal from the Kanawha district that goes east; it all goes west in competition with the coal produced in western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana; the Kanawha district is operated union under a contract agreed upon between the operators and miners in that district.

At this point the following questions were asked and answers given:

Q. Mr. Lewis, are you in any conspiracy or combination to organize the mine of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company against the consent of the owners of that mine?

Witness: Would that question apply to me individually or to the organization?

Mr. Hogg: To yourself individually and to the organization.

A. Personally I never was in such a conspiracy or in any such a movement, and to my knowledge the organization has never been in any conspiracy to organize the men employed in the Hitchman mine to take any advantage of the company. They have endeavored or would endeavor to organize those men, provided they could get the consent of the men themselves, but have refrained from doing so since, I believe, the injunction was issued against the employes and against the organization.

Q. Now, when you say you have tried to organize those men, do you mean that you sought to have them become members of the United Mine Workers?

A. I can only answer that question by saying I believe so, because I had nothing at all to do with attempting even to organize the men at the Hitchman mine and none of our national representatives have taken any part in the effort to organize it.

Q. Have you, as president of the United Mine Workers of America, directed or counseled the formation of any conspiracy 631 or combination having for its purpose the organization on a union basis and operating an a union basis of the Hitchman mine, against the consent of the owners of that mine?

A. No, sir; not at any time.

Q. Have you individually, or as a member of the United Mine Workers of America, done anything to get the employes of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company to quit and leave the employment of that company?

A. No, sir; not at any time.

Q. In seeking to get men to join the union, who are working at a non-union mine, is it the purpose or policy of the United Mine Workers' organization to get them to quit, either in attempting to organize them or after they have organized them?

A. It is a direct violation of the customs, the laws and the principles of the United Mine Workers to organize men to suspend work.

Q. Would that be of any advantage to the organization, to have them quit work at the mine after they had become members of the union, and do nothing more?

A. No, sir; it would be a distinct disadvantage, because it would create the impression immediately that we were a strike institution, and it would create an impression that we were doing that in order to favor some one else.

Q. One of the witnesses—I believe his name was James Stewart—stated in his testimony given in this case last week, that he, as a member of a committee representing the then local union at the Hitchman mine, visited you in your official capacity, at Bridgeport, and stated to you that the Hitchman mine was ready to sign up the scale of 1903, as proposed by the national convention of 1906, and that you refused to permit the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company to sign that scale. Is that true or not?

A. That statement is partly true and part of it is not true.

Q. State in what respect?

A. It may be that he was one of the men who visited my home; I do not know; I would not pretend to say who the committee were that came there. At that time I was vice-president of the organization, with no authority to direct the executive work of the organization, and my recollection of the statement made, either by that man who has testified or some one else there, is, that the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company were willing to sign an agreement, but that it was to be a temporary arrangement and for no fixed period of time; and I directed him to take the matter up with the president of the Ohio organization, or with the president of the na-
632 tional organizaion, both of these men having executive authority in the matter. In other words, the vice-president of the national organization of the United Mine Workers of America has no authority unless it is delegated to him direct by the president. He is simply an international organizer, and his work is confined to general organizing.

Q. Then, you could not refuse to let them sign the scale?

A. I did not refuse because I had no power to permit them to sign or to direct them to sign. That, in itself, was self-evident.

Q. Do you know whether or not District 6 of Sub-District 5 did permit the mine to resume operations upon signing the proposed scale?

A. I would not be able to say definitely as to that.

Q. You were not familiar with the locality there?

A. My recollection is that when I was at home it was on a Sunday, and I had dropped in the same as I always do when I have an opportunity to spend Sunday with the folks, and I probably left on that night or Monday. I am not positive of the date when these men came over there.

(End of direct examination.)

Cross-examination:

Upon cross-examination of the witness, T. L. Lewis, the following questions were asked, answers given and proceedings had:

Q. Where were you born, Mr. Lewis?

A. I was born in Wanamie, Lucerne county, Pennsylvania.

Q. Is that in the anthracite coal region?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you live many years in that region?
A. Nearly seven. That is not in Wanamie, but in that region.
Q. And from there where did you go?
A. Pardon me; I want to change that first answer. I want to say that I was born in Locust Gap, Northumberland county, Pennsylvania. I lived so long in Wanamie that I made a mistake in stating that I was born there. We lived in the anthracite region nearly seven years, and from there went to the Mahoning Valley, in Ohio, to a place called Mill Creek, outside of Youngstown.
Q. About how old were you at that time?
A. Between six and seven.
Q. You then never worked in the mines in the anthracite region?
A. No, sir; I worked in a breaker in the anthracite region.
633 Q. When you came to Mill Creek, in the Mahoning Valley, what did you do after that?
A. I did not do anything there; we did not live there very long.
Q. And from there where did you go?
A. To Church Hill, Ohio. That is on the other side of Youngstown. We did not live there very long.
Q. And from there where did you go?
A. To Midway, Washington county, Pennsylvania, on the Panhandle, west of Pittsburg.
Q. And how long did you live there?
A. About three years, to the best of my recollection.
Q. When you went there about how old were you?
Witness: To Midway.
Mr. Gilchrist: Yes, sir.
A. Between seven and eight.
Q. How old were you when you left the anthracite region?
A. Well, probably a few months past seven. As a family we migrated around a good deal, owing to the persecution by the operators of the mine workers on account of them having no union.
Q. You did not then reside long in any of those places?
A. No, sir.
Q. Were you a member of a union when you were in the anthracite region?
A. No, sir; but my father was.
Q. What was his business?
A. He was a coal miner.
Q. Had he lived long in the anthracite region?
A. Well, he lived in the anthracite region from the time that he came from the old country up to the time that we moved to Ohio.
Q. You say from the time he came from the old country. What country was that?
A. Wales.
Q. Now, at Midway you were seven or eight years of age and you lived there about three years?
A. Nearly three years, I think.
Q. And from there where did you go?
A. We went from Midway to Clearfield county, Pennsylvania.
Q. Still in the coal mining business?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long did you live at Clearfield, Pennsylvania?
A. To the best of my recollection about ten months.
Q. And from there where did you go?
A. We came back to western Pennsylvania.
Q. What part of western Pennsylvania?
A. Back on the Panhandle railroad. Well, wait just a moment.
We left the Panhandle to go to Clearfield in 1876 and we 634 came back from Clearfield in 1877, to the best of my recollection, and we lived at a little place called Snipesville in 1877; that was on the Panhandle railroad between Midway and McDonald. The reason I am so sure about it is, that that was when they had the great railroad strike and the railroad riots in Pittsburg.
Q. Now, from Snipesville you went where?
A. In 1878 we went to McDonald.
Q. And from there where?
A. In 1879 we moved to Shawnee, Perry county, in the Hocking district, in Ohio.
Q. About how old were you at that time?
A. I was just past fourteen.
Q. How long did you live in the Shawnee district, of Ohio?
A. We lived in Shawnee continuously until 1889, with the exception of nearly a year that we were out in Indiana at a place called Cannelburg, in Davies county, and then we moved from there to Bridgeport, Ohio.
Q. Wou removed from which place?
A. Shawnee. Of course, in the meantime I had worked at other places. I had worked at Redfield, near the Mahoning field, in northern Perry county. Well, I will not be sure whether it is in northern Perry, but we called it that anyhow; then at Maxahalo, on the Ohio Central road, or right above that, where there is a little place called North Paron. I also in the time that we lived in Shawnee worked at Gloucester, Ohio, in three different mines.
Q. What year did you move to Bridgeport, Ohio, was the question?
A. I came out there first in 1888; then I went back home, and after going back home I went to Lebanon, Ohio, and spent eight months in school; then I came back to Bridgeport in 1889, and after being out there a short time I moved the family out. I was the head of the family at that time.
Q. About how old were you when you moved to Bridgeport?
A. Well, the difference between '65 and '89 is about twenty-four years.
Q. And you have lived there continuously ever since?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was the first union you joined?
A. The Knights of Labor.
Q. When did you join the Knights of Labor?
A. In the early part of 1882.
Q. About what was your age then?
A. I was between sixteen and seventeen.

Q. What was your occupation during the time you were 635 a member of the Knights of Labor?

A. Coal miner, driver, tracklayer, timber man, and a dumper, as it is called.

Q. During the time you were a member of the Knights of Labor, the Knights of Labor was the union body which had control of mining operations, was it?

A. Principally. There was an organization along about the same time—while I was a member of the Knights of Labor they existed in Ohio—known as the Ohio Amalgamated Association of Miners. They were an open association, but it was practically governed by the Knights of Labor. It was not a national organization. Later it became a part of the National Federation of Miners and Mine Laborers. That only had a secretary; it did not have executive officers.

Q. Did you ever work in the non-union fields?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. About what times did you do that?

A. As regards union and non-union fields, now, we worked in a non-union field on the Panhandle, in Clearfield county, in the Hocking district, and, in fact, we worked in a non-union field in eastern Ohio.

Q. That is, when you say "we" you mean you?

A. I mean myself. Well, of course, I used the word "we" because my brothers were working there, too.

Q. Were the mines that you worked at in those fields non-union mines or were they union mines?

A. They were regarded as non-union mines. In some instances probably the majority of the men belonged to the organization, but if any man took an active part in the organization he was told that he must not show any activity, or if he did that he must take his tools out and leave.

Q. The closed shop union arrangement, as it is now applied by the Union Mine Workers of America, did not then exist at those mines where you worked?

A. No, sir; and did not exist until by contract arrangement it was established by the operators and miners.

Q. Between the operators and the miners. You mean in what are called the joint conventions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between the competitive districts and the United Mine Workers?

A. That is true.

Q. And that came to pass about what year, as nearly as you now recall?

A. Well, we established that system—it was first established in isolated cases on a small scale back as long ago as 1885-86, and what we call the present joint movement was established by contract arrangement in Chicago in January, 1898.

636 Q. When you were being interrogated by Dean Hogg in your examination in chief he asked you a question relative to some matter which I will not now take the time to look up, in your examination, because it has not yet been written up by the stenographer, but it was relative to some matter which he found in "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1," which purports to be the "Proceedings of Joint Conference of Coal Operators and Coal Miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, Cincinnati, Ohio, March 8-29, 1910," and in answering, you answered from a copy that you had in your hand at the time. Have you that copy with you, or a similar copy?

A. I have a copy of the same here; I haven't that copy, though.

Q. Look on page 472 of that duplicate copy of "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1;" on that page there is a contract headed, "Chicago Agreement, 1898." Is that the Chicago agreement you referred to just now?

A. Yes, sir; that is. This has the general terms of the contract as arranged there. The day-wage contract which afterwards became a part of this was arranged in Columbus at a later date and the details of the contract were arranged in the different districts.

Q. On page 474 I notice amongst those who signed in behalf of the miners that the name of T. L. Lewis is signed from Ohio. Is that your name and are you the T. L. Lewis?

A. Yes, sir; and I desire to say also right here that there is an omission in the print in this document because it has not got the operators' names printed in there.

Q. Let me understand you.

A. Well, here are two headings—one "In Behalf of the Operators" and the other "In Behalf of the Miners." When you come down here to Ohio you find that in behalf of the miners it is signed by W. E. Farms and T. L. Lewis, but there are no signatures in behalf of the operators.

Q. And immediately opposite those names of W. E. Farms and T. L. Lewis there are no names printed in behalf of the operators? That is what you are calling attention to, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hogg: That is an omission.

Witness: Yes, sir: an omission in printing.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Do you recollect who they were at that time?

A. No; but I am trying to discover them and I will see in a moment.

637 Q. Would they be J. S. Morton and J. L. Mullins?

A. I will not undertake to say because I think I have the record here.

(Witness here examines record.)

A. (continued). No, I haven't got that here and I would not care to say definitely who they were. It seems to me that Mr. Morton was one of the gentlemen and yet I could not say positively.

Q. Now, you said that at the time this agreement was entered into in Chicago in 1898 it was supplemented by another agreement or scale which was subsequently and shortly thereafter adopted at Columbus, Ohio?

A. That is true, and the scale adopted there had reference to establishing what is known as the day-wage and fixing it.

Q. On page 474 of the same book to which I asked your attention a moment ago, corresponding to "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1," I find printed what purports to be a day-wage scale, headed "Columbus Day-Wage Scale, Columbus, Ohio, March 10th, 1898." Is that the agreement you speak of?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that with the Chicago agreement of 1898 a movement was started which was a joint movement between the United Mine Workers of America, as a body, and the operators in the convention belonging to the central competitive states of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. Is that correct?

A. The meeting at Chicago re-established the joint movement that had gone out of existence in the latter part of the '80's. It was not entirely new.

Q. In the latter part of '80?

A. No; in the latter part of the '80's. I think it went out of existence in 1886 or '87.

Q. The United Mine Workers of America were formed in January, 1890?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So this agreement at Chicago in 1898 was simply an agreement between the United Mine Workers and the operators of the central competitive states named, and on the same line as an agreement which had at one time existed between the Knights of Labor and the operators of that district. Is that what you mean?

A. No; it was not known as the Knights of Labor. But the Knights of Labor were in existence. It was the Amalgamated Association in Ohio, and they went under different names in different states. As I stated it was under distinct organizations at that time practically controlled by the Knights of Labor in local as-638 semblies, but it was the re-establishment of the same methods for negotiating and agreeing upon wage-contracts.

Q. But that method went out of existence in about 1888, I believe you said?

A. Yes, sir; or probably in 1887; I won't be sure of the exact date.

Q. But while it did exist it was not between the Knights of Labor —which was the main body controlling the mining operations in that action of the country—and the operators, but it was between the operators of a particular state and some other organization which had more or less members in the territory in which the operators were doing business?

A. No; the joint movement that had been established in the '80's was established between the representatives of the operators of the central competitive field—that is, western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois—and the representatives of these miners' organizations. They called them the open organization because they held their meetings in the mines or near the mines. In reality for the first two or three years they were transacting business with the representatives of what was called the open organization, but the directing forces of the open organization were the Knights of Labor. Then before the movement broke up and passed out of existence they made contracts direct with the open organization and the Knights of Labor jointly. That is, there were some of the officers of the Knights of Labor signed the contracts. They did in 1886, sign the contract as representing the Knights of Labor.

Q. As to those contracts, were they contracts for the closed shop, as you now recall?

A. Yes, sir; as far as they could get the operators to agree to them. There were some places that did not agree to the closed shop and others that did; notably in the Hocking district—they had the closed shop there—but in other sections of Ohio, as far as I know, they did not have.

Q. Was this joint convention arrangement which went out of existence in 1887 in operation in sections of the state where you were working at non-union mines?

A. Yes, sir; the mines were non-union so far as the closed shop was concerned. We had an organization but we did not have the closed shop system and in that respect, of course, they were looked upon as non-union mines.

Q. The closed shop arrangement, then, was not strictly enforced by the Knights of Labor or the other bodies that were affiliated with them?

A. Only in sections; not as a general proposition.

639 Q. And at that time, then, as I gather from what you have said, the union miners might work in a non-union mine without hindrance, and they also might work in a union mine that was closed shop?

A. Not where there was a closed shop. If they were in closed shop mines they would be required to conform to the laws of the organization. They could take their choice and join either the secret or the open branch of the organization as represented by the Knights of Labor or the Ohio Amalgamated association in our state.

Q. To what branch of the Knights of Labor did you belong?

A. I belonged to the Local Assembly 169, claimed to be one of the most historical assemblies in the order.

Q. I will ask you to identify that further because it does not have any meaning to me.

Witness: In what way?

Mr. Gilchrist: I cannot identify it by the number.

A. Well, the charters issued by the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor began at No. 1, which was formed in Philadelphia, and then the numbers were given out consecutively after that. Of course if a local assembly passed out of existence that number would be given to a local assembly organized somewhere else.

The Court:

Q. Where was your local situated?

A. At Shawnee, Perry county, Ohio.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. You came to Bridgeport in 1889, I believe you said?

A. We moved there the first time in 1888, as I stated, and then I went to Lebanon and went to school and returned in 1889. Pardon me; I do not want to say that I moved there. I came to Bridgeport first in 1888 and then went back home; my home then was with my people in Shawnee; then I went to school and then I moved back—moving the family in 1889, to Bridgeport.

Q. When you did become finally established at Bridgeport, Ohio, were you engaged in mining?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were at that time then a member of the Knights of Labor?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of both branches?

A. I was a member of the Knights of Labor and I was also a member of a local union of the National Progressive Union that 640 had been organized. I described that here the other day. That was an open organization that existed. In other words, briefly, the National Progressive Union was in existence during the time that I came to Bridgeport. It was a consolidation of the Knights of Labor and the old National Federation of Miners. They failed to consolidate completely in 1888 but a completed consolidation took place in 1890 and that is what formed the United Mine Workers of America.

Q. Did the Knights of Labor go out of existence in 1890 upon the formation of the United Mine Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did they still retain any jurisdiction over the coal miners?

A. A number of local assemblies still maintained their existence and reported a per capita tax to the general assembly.

Q. Of the United Mine Workers?

A. No; of the Knights of Labor; but they owed their direct allegiance, so far as mining affairs were concerned, to the United Mine Workers of America.

Q. So their membership was subordinated to their membership in the United Mine Workers of America?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do any members of the Knights of Labor—if that organization still exists—belong to the United Mine Workers and yield paramount allegiance to the United Mine Workers instead of the Knights of Labor?

A. I do not know of any Knights of Labor that are now members of the United Mine Workers.

Q. Then the United Mine Workers have absorbed all other organizations for the mining of coal?

A. Yes, sir; as far as that is true, at least.

Q. Now, this joint convention that was had in Chicago where the joint movement originated so far as the United Mine Workers were concerned—that joint convention movement has been extended, has it, from time to time, or has it been curtailed?

A. In one sense it was extended. At the Chicago meeting western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and West Virginia miners were represented, and the operators of western Pennsylvania, Ohio,

Indiana and Illinois were represented, and I believe there was one operator at that meeting from the Kanawha district but I do not know as he took any part in the deliberations; and from time to time the movement was extended until they included in their inter-state joint movement in the southwest the states of Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. They have endeavored 641 to establish another inter-state movement in the Rocky Mountain mining district but have not succeeded, although they have joint movements in Washington, Montana, Wyoming and Northern Colorado.

Q. The formation of the joint inter-state convention system in the state of Missouri and the other states named by you, was along the same lines, was it, as the joint convention arrangement agreed upon at Chicago between the central competitive states?

A. Yes, sir; and for precisely or for practically the some purpose.

Q. And the purpose was to do what?

A. To arrange a wage agreement to govern mining rates, the day-wage scale and the conditions of employment; and the reason that there have been no efforts made to have one national joint convention was on account of the diversified conditions in the different mining states due to the different character of the veins of coal; and it would be a physical impossibility to work out all the details of wage agreements in a national joint convention. Eventually, if they establish it, they would have to deal with the national organization and still refer back for district or sub-district arrangement, all de-ails of any wage contract that might become effective.

Q. Now, the object in trying to organize a joint convention of the same character in Colorado, I believe you said—(interrupted.)

A. In the inter-mountain states.

Q. (continued). And other states in that section, was for the same purpose?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was it contemplated that these joint conventions when agreed upon should themselves constitute another higher or larger body?

A. No; the object was to try to establish—as near as the natural conditions of the veins would permit—uniformity within the district as between the mining districts.

Q. What was taken as generally the base of the wage scale—the scale of wages—that might be agreed upon between the operators of the central competitive states and the United Mine Workers in their joint conventions?

A. The basis of negotiating and agreeing upon contracts was taken from the physical condition of the mines, the selling price of the coal and the earning power of the mine. Those are the three elements that enter into the negotiations of wage contracts.

Q. But in a preliminary way the members of the United Mine Workers in national convention formulate scales which take into consideration these different peculiarities of districts or sections of country and conditions of coal?

A. Yes, sir.

642 Q. And then when the joint convention comes on to be held between the United Mine Workers and the joint convention, the scale agreed upon for that territory represented by the operators in that particular joint convention, is the one that is dealt with as between the parties who come together in the convention?

A. That is, as it applies to the particular territory that they represent; yes, sir.

Q. Now, you have said that there were two joint convention arrangements: One between the United Mine Workers and operators of the central competitive states growing immediately out of the original agreement at Chicago in 1898, and the other a joint convention arrangement between the United Mine Workers as a national body and the operators in Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas; inter-state you called it.

A. The one interstate convention in the southwest includes Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

Q. These two joint convention arrangements, then, for the sections you have described, constitute the only joint conventions that are now held?

A. No, sir; and I desire to correct your statement as it applies to my statement. I stated that at Chicago there was a convention held (naming the states) to agree upon a wage contract, which was supplemented by another joint convention of the same people at Columbus, Ohio, to arrange the day-wage scale that grew out of that. The joint movement had been extended into various states throughout the country and I stated that an inter-state joint movement had been established in the southwest and that an effort had been made to establish an inter-state joint movement in the Rocky Mountain states. We have joint conventions in Michigan and Iowa and Central Pennsylvania and Tennessee and Kentucky and down in Alabama and in the Kanawha district of West Virginia; so we have a large number of joint movements outside of these two that we have now under consideration.

Q. These other joint movements, then, are movements simply between the United Mine Workers of America as a national body and the operators of a particular state—not in the competitive states and not in the southwest joint movement?

A. No; they are joint movements between district organizations of the United Mine Workers and the operators in the states affected.

Q. Between the district organizations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those district organizations are part of the United Mine Workers as a national body, are they?

A. Yes, sir.

643 The Court:

Q. Do I understand you, Mr. Lewis, that you combine the states and hold these joint conventions, where that can be done, and make one contract, and if that is not convenient you hold conventions between the district organizations and the operators in local fields?

A. Yes, sir; your Honor, that is the purpose and the idea. In order to make it probably a little more clear we will take the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Western Pennsylvania and a part of West Virginia. They find markets for their coal in the northwest outside of what they sell for fuel purposes in a domestic way. Then in the southwest those states are competitive with each other and more so than they would be with the states in the central competitive field. The states in the Rocky Mountain region are competitive with each other and more so than they would be with Kansas or Oklahoma, or Ohio, Illinois, West Virginia, and Western Pennsylvania.

Q. You make a different contract in different sections?

A. That is the purpose of the movement. For instance, if we had a Maryland organization, and what is known as the Myersdale section of Pennsylvania, and central Pennsylvania, and in the Irwin field along with eastern West Virginia, we would have those operators and miners get together because their markets are on the eastern seaboard. Their markets are competitive and they would have a joint movement. Then, again, the southern states would have a joint movement—Tennessee, Alabama and Kentucky—if they were organized.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Now, in these joint conventions, such, for example, as the joint conventions you have held under the Chicago agreement down to date, has there been any regard paid to the markets to which the coal of these operators is sent with respect to the competition those operators might meet with from any other coal producing area in the United States?

A. I presume there is. In a general discussion of the matter the operators usually in joint convention—if the miners ask for an advance in wages, for instance—use—use the argument that they are not able to pay it on account of the price they receive for a ton of coal. The miners present the facts in connection with the matter and point out that they are able to pay the wages that the miners are asking for and still earn a profit—a fair profit—on their investment. Then the argument is very often used by the operators of the competition of some other states, and that is always brought in as their last argument and as a boogaboo to hold down the wages of the miners.

644 Q. As a matter of fact do you recall whether wages have been held down—take for example in the conventions which — been held pursuant to the Chicago agreement—in the central competitive states?

A. No; wages have been very materially advanced since the Chicago meeting was held, in the central competitive field. I might say the reason for that is this: that the Chicago joint convention grew out of the general suspension of work in 1897 when the miners were not able to live—even with working every day in the year—on the wages they received, and the operators were going into bankruptcy and hailed the entire movement as a Godsend to the industry.

Q. Between pages 374 and 375 of the "Proceedings of Joint Conference of Coal Operators and Coal Miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, Cincinnati, Ohio, March 8-29, 1910," otherwise "Upstill's exhibit No. 1," and a copy of which you have in your hand, there is a yellow sheet containing a tabulation headed "Twenty Years Record of Hocking Valley Mining," and in fifteen columns printed in larger and bold black type there are figures indicative of the mining price during the particular periods covered by the statement in the horizontal columns. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir; and in those columns beginning with the year 1892-'03 and up to 1894 the mining rate is 70c. per ton. It ran, farther down to 45c. per ton in 1896, during the panic, because of the passing out of existence of the miners' organization. That was the time when the Hocking operators as well as operators in many other sections of the country were going into bankruptcy and were not even able to raise the money to pay the wages of the men—what did they earn. At that period we had a system—agreed to by the miners—of accepting sixty days' script in payment of wages in order to meet the extraordinary condition that had developed in the industry; and further on, in the middle of 1897, on July 4th, out of pure desperation and with starving miners everywhere, they declared a general suspension and they secured a compromise in the fall of that year and out of that grew the joint movement of 1898. I desire to say that previous to 1893 or 1892 the miners in the Hocking district for a number of years received a mining rate of 80c. per ton in the winter and 70c. per ton in the summer. In the fall of 1879, in the Hocking district, the miners received a dollar a ton for mining coal.

The Court:

Q. Under this Chicago scale, now, which you say is practically the same, Mr. Lewis, what is the price that a miner gets in the Hocking district per ton?

645 A. For the items enumerated here, screened lump coal, pick mining, is 95c. a ton.

Q. Is that a long or a short ton?

A. It is a short ton—2,000 pounds.

Q. Is that subject to a reduction in any way or does he get that straight?

A. He gets that straight. The coal is run over an inch and a quarter screen.

Q. What proportion would be that rate for run-of-mine coal?

A. Under the pick mining system in the Hocking district it is recognized that two-sevenths off of the run-of-mine, which leaves five-sevenths—seven-sevenths being screened coal—it is two-sevenths for any coal over an inch and a quarter screen.

Q. You take two-sevenths off of 95, then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you state that to be for pick mining?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the effect of these cutting machines—mining with these cutting machines—upon the price of coal that the miner gets?

A. There is quite a difference, your Honor; that is, there is quite a reduction from that rate.

Q. Can you state what a miner would get for loading coal where the coal is cut by a machine?

A. For loading coal, where they receive the 95c. per ton for pick mining, screened coal, they receive for loading and hand drilling—that is, either drilling under the old churn drill process, of if a man buys his own power drill, by drilling that way, they receive 54.70 per ton. That is in what is known as room work which is just the same as where the 95c. rate is paid for pick mining.

Q. Can you give what would be the average cost of the production of a ton of coal in a machine mining mine, counting the cost of machine cutting and loading f. o. b.?

A. The cutting rate for coal in rooms where they pay 95c. is 10.30, making the total mining rate in what is known as wide or room work 65c. The difference between 65c. and 95c. of course is 30c. and that is the actual mining cost. I would not care to say what the actual cost of producing a ton of coal f. o. b. in a machine mine is, because I might say something that would not be absolutely accurate.

Q. It might depend on local conditions?

A. Largely. Take the Hocking district, for instance: There are part of the mines down there that are still being operated in a vein of coal that runs seven or eight feet thick. That, of course, has some impurities in it. Then, down in the southern or lower end of the Hocking district that vein is considerably thinner and 646 has more impurities in it than where the coal is thick. I would not like to venture my opinion about that.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. In this tabulation last referred to I find that 56c. was the rate from September 13th, 1897, to April 1st, 1898. That period covers the time in which the Chicago joint convention arrangement was gotten up?

A. That is correct. In September, 1897, is when the compromise was affected with the operators of the different states and the general resumption of work took place, and that was the rate paid in the Hocking district during the time the meeting was being held in Chicago.

Q. And that was the basing rate and has been ever since?

A. Yes, sir; Hocking is the basing district for Ohio.

Q. Is it the basing rate for all mines in the central competitive states?

A. No, sir; what is known as the thin vein section of the Pittsburg district is the basing rate for western Pennsylvania; (it is the same rate as the Hocking), and the bituminous field of Indiana is the basing rate for Indiana, because they have the block coal in that field. If we had a contract here, I think Fairmont would be one of the basing rates, New River another and Kanawha another. We would have to have several basing rates.

Q. Looking at that tabulation I find following the 56c. rate that the next rate established was 66c.; the next rate 80c.; the next rate 90c (that was from April 1, 1903, to April 1, 1904); then in the two-year scale from April 1, 1904, to April 1, 1906, it dropped to 85c.; then it next advanced to 90c. from April 1, 1906, to March 31, 1908; and then it advanced to 95c.; and at the head of that column appears this matter: "April 1, 1910, to March 31, 1912. Cincinnati convention demoralized but 5.55% advance forced on Ohio." Is that 95c. with or without the 5.55% advance?

A. Oh, that is with the advance.

Q. That is explanatory of the 95c.?

A. Yes, sir; but we did not accept that; that is not included in the official record; that is just the opinoin of Mr. F. S. Brooks who tabulated this yellow sheet. As a matter of fact the representatives of the Ohio Operators' Association, in the joint convention, before we broke up, proposed and endorsed an advance of 5c. a ton which would raise it to 95c. a ton. That is the reason we did not accept that scale.

Q. Then there is a difference of opinion between the United Mine Workers, or at least some of them, including yourself, and 647 members of the Joint convention who participated in this convention as to the result of the convention?

A. There is a difference of opinion between us and Mr. Brooks as to this statement appearing here. I might just as well have written my views out and had them put in the minutes, because this is no part of the official record. It was simply inserted by Mr. Brooks himself.

Q. The balance is the official record but this sheet is not?

A. It is a tabulation of the record of the mining rates in the Hocking district kept by Mr. Brooks. He was in their employ as its secretary, and probably in an advisory capacity is regarded as one of the best posted men in the Hocking district among the operators.

Q. So that that portion of the book is subject to—(interrupted)——

A. That portion of the book is not in the official record of the Cincinnati conference at all.

The Court:

Q. A thought has just come into my mind and I would like to ask you this question: In cases of this kind—for instance, here in this county there are three coal working veins—the Pittsburg vein, which is the Fairmont seam, and the Upper and Lower Freeport. As I understand it the Upper and Lower Freeport do not sell by possibly twenty-five or forty cents a ton in the market as high as the Fairmont seam. Over the river, in cases like that, do you require the same rate of mining in the Freeport veins that you do in the other? Do they have the same rate of mining that they do in the Pittsburg vein?

A. No, sir; that fact would be taken into consideration in negotiating a contract, and as in other states that is the best evidence we can offer.

Q. There would be a difference made in the mining rate in the Freeport vein from that paid in the Pittsburg vein in a county, or in a situation like this, where both of the veins come in and are mined?

A. That is true, but in order to explain another feature of that I will say this: Take, for instance, in western Pennsylvania, there is a peculiar condition existing over there in what is—. Well, I haven't any desire to take up the time of the court, but I think this information might possibly be of some value. There is in the Pittsburg district what is known as the thin and thick vein sections of the Pittsburg vein. The thin vein, it is claimed by geologists and by others, (I do not know whether it is a fact or not) that the thicker vein over there is not quite as good a quality of coal as the thinner vein. Mind you I am not saying that that is true. However, when they had the locks on the river and were paying toll for pass-648 ing cargoes through the locks of half a cent a bushel, I think from three and four,—the first and second pools—in consideration of that fact and as there were no railroads there, there was a thirteen-cent per ton differential between the coal in the upper pools and the lower pools. In other words, the miners mined the coal for 13c. a ton less. Of course it was practically a freight rate embargo. And notwithstanding the government has finally abolished that toll in passing the coal down, that differential in the mining rate still exists and the operator has changed his argument from a toll obstacle in the way to the fact that the coal was so much thicker, and a miner could mine so much more and consequently could mine it cheaper; and that is the reason assigned and that has existed all through our negotiations. The result is that we fixed the mining rate on what is called the thin vein; they always insisted upon that. As a matter of fact the basing rate ought to, seemingly at least, be the lowest rate, and if there are any conditions requiring a higher rate, then those conditions ought to be met; but in this instance the basing rate is higher than it is up in the thick vein section.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Between pages 288 and 289 of this same book there is another tabulation. Is that a part of the record which you recognize as a part of the proceedings, or is that like the yellow sheet referred to?

A. That was offered as evidence in the joint convention by Mr. Chapman, of Ohio, and is a part of the official record.

Q. So that the book is just subject to one exception—that yellow sheet?

A. That is the official record with the exception of that yellow sheet placed in there by Mr. Brooks, as a matter of information. I haven't looked the matter over carefully, but I say I think it is. I would have to look over it to see whether that is correct or not.

Q. If there is anything incorrect in it will you, call my attention to it before you leave the stand?

A. Yes, sir; if I have time to find it; it is quite a large volume.

Q. Mr. Lewis, you are acquainted with John Mitchell, are you?

A. Yes, sir. If you will pardon me I want to make this correction: All of these agreements that are in this book, beginning with page 366, are not a part of the official records that are incorporated in there. They are, so far as I have been able to determine by glancing hurriedly over them, the official contracts agreed to in the various districts, because we failed to reach any agreement in Cincinnati, and the miners outlined a general proposition to 649 guide them in negotiating contracts in the various districts, and these agreements from page 366 have been added to this book, or this volume, as a matter of information to show what the different contracts are. I want to make that clear. And while as to those districts, so far as I can tell by glancing over them hurriedly, they are the official records of these districts, and the negotiations of the operators and the miners in making the contracts, so far as I am able to determine by glancing hurriedly over them, they are not a part of the stenographer's record taken at Cincinnati, because the convention at Cincinnati adjourned sine die before these agreements were made up.

Q. But for the purpose of the United Mine Workers and the Operators for these particular districts covered by these particular documents, they are accepted as the correct statements of what they purport to be?

A. So far as I can determine by hurriedly glancing over them, subject to any typographical errors.

Q. And they are put in there, as you say, for the purpose of aiding the United Mine Workers' officials, and the operators in those districts, in coming to agreements?

A. Oh, no; they have their separate contracts; it is only as a matter of general information to anybody who wants to get a copy of these records. I say that for this reason: Whoever proof reads this may not have taken the same care that they would in proof reading the actual contracts that existed in these districts. I am assuming for that reason that these are correct, subject to any typographical errors.

Q. So far as you know, however, they are correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you have known John Mitchell for how long, or did you say?

A. I first became acquainted with John Mitchell in January, 1898, at Columbus, Ohio.

Q. What was he doing there?

A. He was a delegate from a local union of the miners in Illinois, attending the national convention of Mine Workers. I could not say what local he was a delegate from.

Q. What was the first position you held in the United Mine Workers?

A. I would not be positive whether it was secretary of the local union or vice-president of the local union.

Q. Do you know when you were elected and about how long you remained in office?

A. No, but I think I was elected secretary of Local Union 13 and served temporarily in 1890.

Q. Local Union 13? Where is that?

A. At Bridgeport, Ohio.

650 Q. Did you ever work in any mines at Bridgeport?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. What mines?

A. I worked at the Wheeling Creek mine and the Aetna Standard mine.

Q. Most of the time in what mine—I mean of those two?

A. Most of the time in the Wheling Creek mine.

Q. Is that the place you last worked in a mine?

A. No; the last place I worked in the Aetna Standard.

Q. The Aetna Standard mine is not a commercial mine, is it?

A. No, sir; it supplies coal to—at that time to the Aetna rolling mill; now the Aetna Standard. The same mining rates apply there, though, as at commercial mines.

Q. Are you acquainted with W. B. Wilson?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. I have known him longer than I have known Mr. Mitchell. I think my first acquaintance with Mr. Wilson was in 1886.

Q. And how did that acquaintance come about?

A. By meeting him in a convention of miners who were members of the Knights of Labor, at Columbus, Ohio, as near as I remember.

Q. Are you acquainted with William Green?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. I cannot just exactly say; I have known him a number of years; I cannot recall, though, just where I first met him, and that is the reason I say I am not positive.

Q. And in what connection have you had anything to do with him?

A. I have known him as president of the sub-District and I have known him as president of the United Mine Workers of Ohio. I have met him in conventions of the delegates in national conventions, and I have met him as a member of the scale committee and the joint committee, and have known him personally and intimately, I might say, for several years—I would not say how many.

Q. As to Mr. Sullivan, who is here—how long have you known him?

A. Oh, I have known him quite a number of years.

Q. And in what connection have you dealt with him, if at all?

A. I have known him as a delegate to conventions, as vice-president of the Ohio miners, as president of the Ohio miners, as a member of the scale committee and joint committee, and I have known him intimately for a number of years.

651 Q. You are acquainted with Mr. Savage, who is here?

A. Oh, yes; quite well.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. I have known him a great number of years, too,—intimately.

Q. And in what connection have you dealt with him?

A. I knew him as a delegate to the miners' conventions, as a member of the scale committee and as secretary-treasurer of the Ohio miners' organization known as District 6, and I have served with him as a delegate to conventions of the American Federation of Labor.

Q. You are acquainted with A. R. Watkins, are you, who is here?

A. Quite well.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. Well, for quite a number of years, also. I have known him as a delegate to conventions and I knew him as president of the Sub-District. I have also known him as a member of our international executive board and by serving on committees with him in joint conventions.

Q. You are acquainted with John Zelenka, are you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how long have you known him?

A. Well, I haven't known him as long as I have the other gentlemen mentioned, but I have known him for some time.

Q. What have you had to do with him, if anything?

A. Well, I have known him, also, as a delegate to conventions, as vice-president of the sub-district and as president of the sub-district, the position he now holds.

Q. Of Sub-District 5 of District 6?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with Lee Rankin?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. I have known him for quite a number of years.

Q. In what connection? As a member of the organization, as secretary-treasurer of the sub-district, as a delegate to conventions by serving on committees in joint conventions with him, and recently as a mine manager of the Y. & O. Coal Company. That means Youghiogheny and Ohio.

Q. Are you acquainted with Thomas Hughes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. I haven't known him for a great length of time—probably two or three years. I would not be positive about that; probably it might be a little longer or a little less.

Q. Well, in what connection have you had dealings with him?

A. I have known him as a delegate to the miners' con-
652 ventions, and to joint conventions of operators and miners in the sub-districts.

Q. These gentlemen who participated in this joint conference of coal operators and coal miners of western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, at Cincinnati, Ohio, March 8-29, 1910, about which we have been talking, and whose names appear on the different pages as taking part in the convention, are men that you have known and dealt with more or less since you have been connected with the United Mine Workers and have participated in conventions of that character?

A. Some of them are and some of them I do not know.

Q. Do you recall being acquainted with Mr. Maurer.
A. Yes, sir; I am acquainted with Mr. Maurer.
Q. You have met him in different years past, in conventions?
A. I have met him in joint conventions of the operators and miners and in outside conventions.
Q. When do you suppose you first met him in a joint convention?
A. Well, I would not be able to say positively; I met him, though, several years ago. I have met him in more than one joint convention, but to state the exact time, I would not care to do that, because I am not sure about it.
Q. Mr. Osborne, from Ohio: You have met him, I suppose?
A. Oh, yes; I have met him for a number of years; I met him in Chicago in 1898.
Q. And Mr. Zerbe?
A. Yes, sir; I met him in Chicago in 1898.
Q. And Mr. Chapman?
A. I have known Mr. Chapman, also, since 1898.
Q. He and you attended these conventions, did you, regularly?
A. Yes, sir; I have attended all of them.
Q. Is that true of Mr. Zerbe and Mr. Osborne?
A. I would not say for sure about Mr. Zerbe. It seems to me that he rather dropped out of the movement for some time and had somebody else, probably, represent him. Mr. Osborne, I believe, endeavors to attend all of them unless he is called away by business or laid up ill for some reason.
Q. Mr. Jones—how about him?
Witness: Which Jones?
Mr. Gilchrist: Was there more than one at that convention?
Witness: Well, I do not know. Yes; I think there was.
Q. I mean as an operator?
A. I think George M. Jones was a representative there from Ohio, and John H. Jones is a representative from western 653 Pennsylvania. As to George M. Jones, I cannot say that I am acquainted with him; I have met him, though.
Q. The Jones from Pennsylvania is the one I have in mind?
A. That is John H. Jones; I know him.
Q. And you have attended these joint conventions with him from time to time?
A. Oh, yes; and have served on scale committees with him.
Q. Mr. Schluederberg, from Pennsylvania: Do you know him?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you met him off and on in these joint conventions during past years?
A. Yes, sir; for a number of years.
Q. Are the United Mine Workers, as an organization, a part of the American Federation of Labor?
A. Yes, sir; we are affiliated.
Q. They have a representative in the American Federation of Labor then?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. The United Mine Workers of America have probably the largest voting power of any labor organization affiliated with the American Federation of Labor?

A. Yes, sir; it has the largest voting power; its delegation has the largest voting strength of any delegation from any other union, affiliated.

Q. The Western Federation of Miners, is now a part of the United Mine Workers of America, is it not?

A. No, sir.

Q. What has prevented that, if anything?

A. Well, I do not know that anything has prevented it outside of the fact that we have not endeavored to bring about any consolidation of the two unions.

Q. You attended the last convention, did you, of the United Mine Workers of America?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that held?

A. In January, 1911.

Q. Do you recall any action taken at that convention relative to the Western Federation of Miners?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?

A. Action was taken to have them granted a charter by the American Federation of Labor.

Q. Was it granted?

A. Subsequent to that time; yes, sir.

Q. What had been the reason why it had not been granted a charter?

A. There was a question of jurisdiction arose.

Q. Between whom or between what labor bodies?

A. Between the Western Federation and the machinists.

Q. And that question of jurisdiction related to what?

A. To the machinists employed in the metaliferous mines.

654 Q. Objection was made at that convention to the continued refusal theretofore of the American Federation of Labor to grant a charter to the Western Federation of Miners?

A. Yes, sir; and the United Mine Workers believed they were entitled to the charter to govern the jurisdiction that they wanted incorporated in the charter.

Q. The purpose of that was to give the Western Federation of Miners control of the machinists who might be employed about the mines, rather than to have that control remain in the hands of the machinists' union?

A. No; the purpose of that was to give the Western Federation jurisdiction over all men working in and around the mines without reference to whether they were machinists, blacksmiths, engineers, firemen, electricians or miners.

Q. And that was done so as to make the Western Federation of Miners occupy a position analogous to that occupied by the United Mine Workers with reference to men employed about a mine, about being required to belong to a particular union?

A. Yes, sir; not only so far as it applied to the United Mine Workers but so far as it applied to other organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Q. So as to make that body supreme in its own jurisdictional line?
A. Not exactly supreme, but to give it jurisdiction over the employes in and around a mine.
Q. All of them?
A. All of them; so that wherever there were any contracts existing, there would be no fear of those contracts being violated by one class of men going out on strike when the other men had a contract. It was to safeguard the employes.
Q. Now, to have an organization have control of all the labor about a mine, while ostensibly it may be, as you say, to provide for the fulfilling of contracts, yet that same condition brings about a result such that on occasions that power might be used to the destruction of an operator, might it not?
A. No, sir.
Q. A mine is injured more — less, is it not, by being shut down?
A. If all the men in the mine were taken out that might be true of some mines, but some mines you can close down for a period of years and never need to bother anything about them. They can start up immediately; it requires no attention to start.
Q. What kind of mines are those?
A. Coal mines and metal mines.

Q. Where would there be a mine that you could close 655 down for years and resume at once, without doing anything to it?

A. In the Hocking district.
Q. Any other place?
A. I think there might be a large number of places named.
Q. Can you name some more?
A. I think such would be the case in the Jackson district, and I know such would be the case on New River.
Q. Why is that?
—. Because of the peculiar natural conditions and the excellent roof that is not damaged by being idle; and there might be one hundred and one reasons. The damage to a mine is the possibility of a place caving in for want of being timbered, or because of bad roof or some other conditions, and where the natural conditions of the vein are not of that character, why, there is not so much danger of damage.
The Court: It never will apply to a shaft mine?
A. In some cases.
Q. Wouldn't the water flood them out?
A. Outside of the water; that would be the only exception; and that would not be the case there if there was no water.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. That would not be the case in a shaft mine if there was no water?
A. Yes.
Q. But in all shaft mines there is water, isn't there?
A. Not necessarily.
Q. Not necessarily?
A. No.

Q. Can you give the name of one?

A. As a general proposition there is some water in all shafts but there may be exceptions to that and I would not undertake to name them just now. I have worked in shafts where you could not get a barrel of water while working there. They may strike, though a vein of water in developing that shaft.

Q. There are in all large developments places in shaft mines where the coal is very dry, and then again there may be places where it would be very wet?

A. That is true.

Q. But generally speaking a shaft mine encounters water because there is lots of water in the earth and if it percolates through and into the openings caused by the mining of the coal?

A. Generally speaking shafts have water in them but I will not admit that they have lots of water. Of course some shafts are drowned out by water.

Q. But they have such an amou[illegible]f water that all shaft mines are equipped with pumping machinery or devices?

A. As a rule that is true.

656 Q. Now, if in a mine of that kind all of the employes were members if your organization, and if your organization choose to exert its power, could it not cause the mine to be flooded and ruined?

A. No; I think not.

Q. Why?

A. For the reason that if the members of our organization were to suspend work, it is none of our business who they put in our places. We would not undertake to prevent them from saving their property.

Q. Do you know whether, as a matter of fact, the question of the continued employment of pumpers to safeguard the mines does not often arise in cases where the United Mine Workers have general strikes on?

A. No, sir; it is not often; it is the exception if anything of that kind occurs.

Q. But that does occur sometimes, does it not?

A. I could not name an instance. I know of a threatened instance in Illinois.

Q. Threatened by whom?

A. By the men locally.

Q. Do you mean members of the United Mine Workers?

A. Yes, sir; the local men wanted to call the pumpers off and the organization would not permit it.

Q. Do you know whether that same condition was the subject of discussion during the time of the hearing of the anthracite strike in 1902-03?

A. I think it was.

Q. Do you know what position the commission took with reference to that feature of the United Mine Workers' organization?

A. My recollection is that the position of the commission was similar to the position of the United Mine Workers—that pumpers and engineers and men necessary to protect the property should remain at work even during a suspension. So in that respect they were no different from the organization.

Q. So that the fact is that the danger to an operator has been recognized by the United Mine Workers, as well as by the anthracite commission, when considering that feature of the organization of the United Mine Workers?

A. That is true; and it is likewise true that in every walk of life we must anticipate the possible dangers in committing any kind of an act.

Q. And your union, as a national body, you think, as a general proposition has refrained from enforcing its power in that respect?

A. Not as a general proposition but as an absolute certainty it has refrained from doing that. They have always discountenanced anything of that kind.

Q. But such acts have been done in different localities and under the jurisdiction of some branch of the United Mine Workers.
657 Is that not true?

A. I think not. If it has occurred locally in isolated cases the organization has promptly ordered the men back. I am not sure that it has occurred, however, even in isolated cases.

Q. Part of the money that is collected by the union is applied in the payment of salaries and other general running expenses of the organization, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you publish a newspaper?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that go to the different locals?

A. One copy goes to every local union under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers. That is a requirement of the law—of the constitution.

Q. That is a requirement of the constitution of the United Mine Workers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does the local subscribe for that or is that a publication that goes free and is authoritative?

A. The local is required to pay one dollar subscription annually for that paper and the United Mine Workers' organization, nationally, publishes the paper, and circulates it, and gets the income which is derived in part from the dollar subscription which each local is required to pay. In that way they extend their circulation in other directions wherever they can.

Q. In that paper you generally print the proceedings of your conventions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And matters of various kinds which are of interest to the organization as a whole and in some respects of interest to the different locals where the paper may be circulated?

A. Yes, sir; and also the financial accounts of the national organization and the districts, showing the receipts and expenditures of the funds.

Q. Are you in favor of strikes, Mr. Lewis?

A. No, sir; I believe that strikes can be done away with entirely if the operators and miners had a little more confidence in each other.

Q. That is, do you mean if the operators had more confidence in what the miners want to do?

A. No; I mean by that if the operators would go into a joint convention and tell the miners frankly what their position is, the miners would meet the situation just as frankly as the operators would present it. The operators then would consider the position of the miners and deal with facts, without seeming to cloud the issue in any way. I think that is the first thing necessary in order to have absolute confidence.

Q. If there is a lack of confidence on the part of the operator in dealing with the miner, is there a lack of confidence on the 658 part of the miner in dealing with the operator?

A. Oh, yes; it applies both ways. That is really the basis of all contentions that arise and that is really the cause even of local strikes.

Q. And when you have your conventions—these joint conventions that you have—difficulty arises amongst you owing to your believing that the operators are not frank with you and the operators thinking that you are not frank with them. Is that the situation?

A. No; the same difficulty is experienced there as in the case of a man going out to sell a lot or to sell a horse. The joint convention is a clean proposition of bargain and sale. We are there to sell our labor at the best possible rate we can get, and they are there for the purpose of buying it. We must consider the different elements that enter into that, and the operator, naturally, being human, is unwilling to tell what profit he is making on his investment and he will only concede that we are right in the presentation of our argument and the facts, when we furnish the proof. In other words, he is not going to furnish proof to us to support our contention. He will meet our argument by presenting such facts as he can. He retains such facts as might be detrimental to his own interests and presents such facts as will enable him to drive the best possible bargain.

Q. You said that the Chicago agreement was a case of bargain and sale, did you not?

A. No, sir.

Q. You never said that?

A. No, sir. What I did say—in order to facilitate this hearing—was that these joint conventions are conducted on that basis, but I made that statement just now. I haven't referred to it previously.

Q. On page 170 of this copy of "Proceedings of Joint Conference of Coal Operators and Coal Miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, Cincinnati, Ohio, March 8-29, 1910," a copy of which you have in your hand, I read from what purports to be the language of Mr. Lewis this sentence: "When I said that the outcome of the Chicago conference was a bargain and sale, I told the truth."

A. That is correct.

Q. Then you were mistaken a moment ago—(interrupted).

A. No; I will admit that but the question directed by you to me was that I had said that here.

Mr. Hogg: In the previous part of your deposition?
Witness: Yes, sir.
Mr. Gilchrist: No, I think not.
659 Witness (continuing): I have stated, as I have stated here, that these joint conventions were a system of bargain and sale, but those may not have been the words used. I have always so regarded it. You said that I said that here (referring to Chicago). It is true I said it at Cincinnati but I haven't said it in presenting any testimony heretofore here.

Q. I did not mean that you had. I said you said the Chicago agreement that it was an agreement of bargain and sale.

A. I am not going to undertake, if your Honor please, to carry in my mind, in giving testimony here, what may have been said in twenty-five or thirty joint conventions that I have attended throughout this country, and I am not going to deny anything that I ever said, and if I inadvertently make a statement here and it is called to my attention, I desire to correct it instantly, because I want to tell the truth here.

Q. That is the reason I called your attention to that language—because I believed you would correct yourself when your attention was called to it.

A. Certainly.

Q. Now, Mr. Lewis, how much money has your organization spent in strikes, well, say, since 1900?

A. Oh, probably eight, ten, twelve, fourteen or fifteen million dollars, since 1900.

Q. Some to pay for peace? Is that what it was for?

A. Yes, sir; for peace. It is not such a large sum when you stop to consider that it is distributed between half a million men and their families.

Q. How many members has the United Mine Workers now?

A. About three hundred thousand—maybe a little more or a little less.

Q. Do you recollect the membership of the organization during the different years, or can you give it from recollection?

A. No, I cannot; we had approximately somewhere in the neighborhood of twenty thousand men when we organized. The United Mine Workers' organization in the year 1897—which was seven years after it was organized—I think fell off to about ten thousand members, more or less; I think that was the membership we had when the national suspension took place on July 4, 1897—and from that time there has been a gradual increase in the membership up to the past year when, on an average, it had reached its highest average of paid membership. I might say also, as a matter of explanation and information, that when a man is idle one month—for instance during the month of February—he would not be required to pay any dues during that month, or assessments, if there were any 660 assessments levied; and we base our membership on the paying membership. That is the reason why I say we have practically three hundred thousand members more or less. We had on an average last year, I think, a paying membership of something like two hundred and sixty-five thousand men, but we have always got a large number who are idle.

The Court:

Q. It is not possible, therefore, for you to have an absolutely correct list of your membership?

A. No, sir; but I might say this: We received a per capita tax from, I believe, three hundred and eight or three hundred and ten thousand members one month last year.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Mr. Lewis, I have here and hand you a copy of the "United Mine Workers Journal," Indianapolis, Indiana, Thursday, January 19, 1911, pages one to eight. On page one is President Lewis's report and your picture appears on the page. On page three there is a statement headed, "Amount paid out Annually in Support of Strikes." I wish you would look at this paper I now hand you and say whether it is one of the copies of your publication and then tell me whether that statement on page three of the amount paid out annually in support of strikes is correct or not?

A. This is a copy of the official journal of the United Mine Workers and the statement on page three is correct, subject to any typographical errors that may appear.

Mr. Gilchrist: I will read these figures into the record:

"The Amount Paid Out Annually in Support of Strikes.

Year 1900	$144,462.50
" 1901	202,202.71

661 Q. Mr. Lewis, on the same page—page three of the same paper there is another list having a total of $8,089,986.16, which is headed this way, "Amount paid to each District for Strike Relief." Please look at that list and say whether those figures are correct?

A. They are; subject to any typographical errors.

Mr. Gilchrist: I will read this into the record:

"Amount Paid to Each District for Strike Relief.

District 2, Central Pennsylvania	497,987.48

Total	$8,089,986.16"

Q. Referring to District 3, Irwin Field, $329,900: When was that money expended?

A. Last year.

Q. And for what purpose?

A. To support men on strike, and men that were being evicted from their homes—to supply food.

Q. That strike is a strike for the recognition of the union, is it not?

A. No, sir.

662 Q. What is it?

A. For an increase in wages and a reduction in the hours of labor and to put checkweighman on the tipple in order that they may get honest weights.

Q. That was a non-union field, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before this strike?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was unionized by the district officers, was it?

A. Local unions were organized there by the district officers. We do not regard that the district is unionized yet; there is a conflict on that.

Q. Are the mines running there?

A. As far as I know they are. I have not been over there and consequently cannot say. They may all be idle, too, so far as I know.

Q. Have you visited that section since that strike was inaugurated?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you visited Pittsburg since that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you taken up the work of organization with the district officials in that district?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have not met Mr. Fehan in connection with that strike?

A. I have met Mr. Fehan but not in connection with that strike.

Q. Haven't you discussed that with him there?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you approve of that strike?

A. I cannot say that I did.

Q. Why, not?

A. Oh, I do not know. In a general way—so far as my opinion is concerned—I think it was ill advised and I think possibly it could have been avoided. That is only my opinion, however, and my judgment may be in error about it.

Q. By whom was that strike called?

A. As far as I know, by Mr. Fehan and his executive board, but I could not say positively; I would not say positively that it was; not being a party to it I am not in position to say positively who called that strike.

Q. You said, did you not, during the proceedings of your last convention, that that strike never would be won, or words conveying that impression?

A. No; I do not think I used those words, and I would not be sure what I did say, as we had a stenographer present and a stenographer's record taken in regard to what we did say. I do not believe, however, to the best of my recollection, that I used that language. I might say that my reason for believing that I did not use the language is, that I would not take a positive stand of that kind in the convention unless I had all the facts to justify me in taking 663 that stand. I may have said something that would convey that impression, but I do not remember it.

Q. On page three in your report to the convention as it appears in the United Mine Workers' Journal of January 19, 1911, I find this language with reference to the Irwin strike: "Those men have been misled and deceived long enough and the international organization has contributed to their support without authority to settle the strike." Does that represent your views?

A. I think, in order to get my views on that entire situation, that all of that ought to be read. I decline to state that that represents my views because it is not a complete statement.

Q. Well, you did use that language?

A. In connection with other language; yes, sir.

Q. Now, to be entirely fair to you, Mr. Lewis, I would read, if I had time, your entire report into this record, but in order that you may be fairly represented, I will offer all of this report as it appears in this paper in evidence and will ask to have it marked "Lewis's Exhibit No. 1."

(The paper is marked accordingly.)

Mr. Hogg: If your Honor please, that report is rather a voluminous one and the only part that Mr. Gilchrist is concerned in is that part relating to the Irwin strike, because he has only interrogated as to that. There are many things in the report that would not be of interest to the Court and I will kindly ask Mr. Gilchrist—unless the witness desires all the report in—that only so much of it as relates to the Irwin strike be inserted in the record.

Mr. Gilchrist: Have you seen this paper?

Mr. Hogg: No, I have not, but I am assuming that there are other things in the report besides the Irwin strike.

Mr. Gilchrist: I would say that the Irwin strike figures largely throughout the entire report, and I do not see how I can accept your suggestion. I would be perfectly willing to do so if I could.

Mr. Hogg: My suggestion is that so much may be copied by the stenographer from the report as pertains to what the president said in regard to the Irwin strike.

Mr. Gilchrist: To cut that short I will ask that the report go in.

664 The Court: It can go into the record and be marked as an exhibit, and when you come to making up your record for another court you can agree upon what is to go in. I do not see how we can stop to pick it out now. Mr. Gilchrist is going to file it as an exhibit.

Mr. Hogg: You just simply file that as Exhibit 1, with Mr. Lewis's evidence?

Mr. Gilchrist: I introduce that, as I have stated, as Exhibit No. 1, with Mr. Lewis's testimony.

Q. What were your total receipts reported for the year at that convention held in January, 1911?

A. I am not able to determine that.

Q. About what were they?

A. I am not sure of that and I would not put my answer up against the records because the records are there somewhere.

Q. Look at another copy of the United Mine Workers' Journal, Thursday, January 6th, 1911, on the front page of which appears the picture of John Mitchell, ex-president, and say what the expenditures for the year 1910 amounted to, so far as they are shown by the tabulation appearing on that page?

A. Subject to any errors that might be here, typographically, the total reading here is $1,979,661.64.

Mr. Gilchrist: I will not take the time to read it but I will introduce this tabulation marked "Expenditures," and have it marked "Lewis's Exhibit No. 2."

(The paper is marked accordingly.)

Q. How long has the Nova Scotia territory been organized under the United Mine Workers?

A. I am not positive of the date but they were organized in 1907; it seems to me they were; there may have been locals instituted there in 1906; I won't be sure about that.

Q. What caused that expenditure of nearly a million dollars in that district?

A. The strike; the most of it was taken up in feeding people who were evicted from their homes.

Q. And why was there a strike?

A. Because the men had asked for an increase in wages and it was denied by the operators, and they suspended work in order to try to secure the increase in wages.

Q. Was there not a miners' organization there when the United Mine Workers undertook to bring them under the control 665 of your body?

A. I might say yes and no. There was supposed to be a miners' organization there but it developed afterwards that it was a part of the operators' organization.

Q. That is, it was not a part of the United Mine Workers?

A. No, sir.

Q. And following that your organization called the men out on strike, and are you still on strike there?

A. No; the organization did not call the men out on strike; the men struck without being called out.

Q. Then did they get any benefits?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You approved of the strike, then, did you?

A. Later, yes, sir; after an investigation of the merits of the claims of the miners, which is always done before there are any strike benefits paid to anybody.

Q. Now, the miners are still on strike there, are they?

A. Not in Nova Scotia—that is, in the Cape Breton end of Nova Scotia; there is in Spring Hill. Cape Breton was the strike where all the money was spent.

Q. And the strike at Spring Hill, Cape Breton, is still on?

A. I am not sure that Spring Hill is in Cape Breton. Spring Hill is out from the main land—that is, where the mines are—but the strike at Spring Hill is not regarded as a part of the Cape Breton section of the mining district.

Q. You say the Spring Hill strike is still on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are the mines there working?

A. No, sir.

Q. What became of your Cape Breton strike?

A. It was settled.

—. How?

A. By representatives of the miners' organization, and representatives of the coal company, indirectly, and representatives of the business interests in that section.

Q. Did you visit that section?

A. I visited that section previous to the strike.

Q. And afterwards?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is that section now under the control of the United Mine Workers?

A. We have local unions.

Q. I mean in practice—in dealing with the operators, is that section unionized?

A. It is not unionized in the same sense that it is in Ohio. In other words, they have not got what they call the joint contract signed up by both parties?

Q. Then that strike has not been entirely successful, as I understand you?

A. Well, now, that depends entirely on the view point. If the men continue to organize there and finally secure a joint 666 wage agreement there without any further suspension of work, we would regard that strike as having been a complete success. If they do not, we would not regard it as having been a complete success.

Q. Passing to Alabama where you spent $1,286,031.32. Is that the state that you say your people were run out of by the state militia and the governor?

A. Well, I do not know as I said that they were run out of that state.

Mr. Gilchrist: Well, substantially so; we will not quibble about the exact meaning of the word.

A. (continued). That is the state in which the executive authority of the state was used, and all the troops in Alabama to destroy the property of the miners—and they were told—I mean the miners' representatives—that they would have to leave Alabama, and if necessary they would drive the miners back into the mines at the point of the bayonet. The governor of Alabama told me that himself.

Q. Mr. Lewis, on page 21 of the United Mine Workers' Journal of January 19, 1911, I find this matter: "Card Invalid.

Peru, Illinois, January 11, 1911.

Editor Mine Workers' Journal:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: We, the undersigned, would like to have you publish in the journal the name of Frank Steinbach, who has a transfer card which is not in good standing. He has paid the ten dollars for card but not the fifty dollar fine which is attached to it for working in the Hegler scab mine in La Salle, Illinois, Local No. 2741. After working four months there drew his card and tried to get in with it in Local 649, Peru, Illinois.

Hoping you will attend to this matter, I remain,

Yours truly,

M. N. LOEBACH,

1368 Chartress Street, La Salle, Illinois.

Secretary Local 649.

I believe you said in your direct examination that a non-union mine was not called a scab mine?

A. That is true.

Q. What is a scab mine, if it is not one not under the 667 jurisdiction and control of the United Mine Workers? It is either under or not under, and according as it is, it is union or not union, and according as it is it is fair or unfair.

A. It may be a union or non-union mine and not a scab mine.

Q. And might it be a fair or unfair mine?

A. And not a scab mine.

Q. Where does it cease to become a scab mine?

A. I do not know; I never heard tell of a scab mine.

Q. This, then, is the first card of that kind that you ever saw, is it? I will hand it to you to look at.

A. Yes, sir; that is the first time I have ever heard a mine called a scab mine, in that sense. I desire to say, in addition to that, that a transfer card when issued by a local union cannot have attached to it anything that there is printed in this statement, to be collected by a local union somewhere else, under the laws of the United Mine Workers.

Q. Then it would seem there is either a misunderstanding on your part about the union or there is a misunderstanding on the part of this secretary of Local Union 649?

A. I would certainly say it was a misunderstanding on his part.

Q. Do those misunderstandings often arise?

A. No; I do not think they do often—not any more than they do in any other business institution, considering the fact that we have in our organization every nationality of men including Japs and Chinamen.

The Court:

Q. Is there any authority for assessing a fine against a man for working in a non-union mine, where it is not unionized, when he is out of employment?

A. No, sir; we never attempt to do that. They do it locally but there isn't anything in the national constitution or district constitution authorizing it. There are local unions that have attempted to assess a fine against a man for taking another man's job when there is a strike existing. In fact, local unions have gone so far as to attempt to impose fines when there would not be very much hope of collecting them, in order to have the individual leave rather than pay the fine. Local unions have attempted to impose fines on men who have absconded with funds of the local union, rather than go to work and say to the operators that they have got to dispense with those men. The higher author-ties of the organization on the appeal of any individual would investigate the case, and if the local union was wrong, they would discipline the local union for exceeding its authority.

668 Q. In one of these local union constitutions—in the sub-district constitutions, if I remember rightly—attention was called to the fact that by their by-laws they provided for a fine for a union member who worked outside. Don't your supreme organization have to approve all their by-laws before they before they become operative?

A. No, sir; they do not do that except when brought to their attention that they have gone out of the way and violated the law. In other words, local unions have authority to make their local laws and as quick as it is called to the attention of the higher authorities of the national organization, they have got to set any of their local laws aside that are in conflict with those of the national organization. Section 2 of article 14 of the constitution of the international union, reads as follows: "All locals shall be under the jurisdiction of the International, District and Sub-District Unions, and may make such laws for their government as they deem necessary, provided they do not conflict with the International, District and Sub-District Constitutions or agreement entered into. Any Local Union or members thereof violating this section shall be subject to a fine of not less than $5.00." As I said a moment ago when the local unions make their local laws they are not passed up to the higher authority for approval, but the moment anything develops that is in conflict with the law, then, of course, it is brought to the higher officials to investigate it.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. I believe you said, Mr. Lewis, that some locals might undertake to penalize a man for working at a non-union mine, but that that was not authorized by the constitution?

A. No; what I believe I said was that local unions would undertake to penalize a man for taking another man's job when he was out on strike.

Q. Well, getting back to the subject of your exhibit No. 2, which showed that that man Steinbach had been fined fifty dollars for working at a scab mine, you said, I believe, that there was no such regulation and no authority on the part of the local union to make any such fine?

A. I would like to have the stenographer read my answer on that.

Q. I hand you "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 2," and will call your attention to section 17 of article 9 which reads this way: "That a fine of $10.00 in each individual case where it can be proven that a member of the union leaves his district for West Virginia, or any other unfair mines, and remains there one month or more without having deposited his transfer card, and returns without giving a satisfactory account of why he has not 669 deposited his transfer card; and a fine to be collected by the local union where he works." What have you to say about that section of that article in the light of your statement a moment ago that under the provisions of the contitution of District 6 there is no penalty attaching to a man for working in a non-union or an unfair mine?

A. I understand that section in the constitution to impose a fine upon a man because he does not take his transfer card away to the mine where he is going. It so reads; it says: "A fine of $10.00 in each individual case where it can be proven that a member of the union leaves his district for West Virginia, or any other unfair mines, and remains there one month or more without having deposited his transfer card, and returns without giving a satisfactory account of why he has not deposited his transfer card; and a fine to be collected by the local union where he works." A fine is not imposed even if he gives a satisfactory reason why he did not conform to the first part of this section?

Q. Where is he supposed to deposit his transfer card?

A. He may deposit it anywhere in the State of West Virginia.

Q. At a non-union mine?

A. At a non-union mine. We have local unions in non-union mines, even in this state. In other words, a mine is not unionized, your Honor, under our understanding of the organization, unless it is completely unionized and recognized as such by the mine owner. We have unions in West Virginia where they can deposit their transfer card. The mine foreman does not recognize that there is a union there. We recognize there is a union there but it is looked upon as an unfair or non-union mine.

Q. As an unfair or non-union mine?

A. Yes, sir; unfair in the general acceptation of the term.

Q. What is the meaning of that?

A. Because it is not unionized it is unfair. Because the mine foreman refuses to recognize the representatives of the members of the union who want to continue to work there. He permits them to work there only when he cannot get men that do not belong to the organization.

Q. Mr. Lewis, you are in the prime of life, are you?

A. I think so.

Q. And a well read man?

A. Well, I do not know; that would depend entirely on what interpretation you would place on that; I consider that I am pretty well read so far as the mining industry is concerned.

Q. Well, generally, on all subjects, you have endeavored to make yourself a well read man?

A. Reasonably so.

670 Q. You have, I suppose, read the history of industrialism throughout the world's history?

A. No; I cannot say that I have.

Q. To a greater or less extent you have, I suppose?

A. No, sir; but I know a good deal about it. We come in contact with men, probably, from different countries and talk to them about their conditions and have endeavored to learn from them as much as we could.

tact with men, probably, from different countries and talk to them

Q. Is it not owing to the fact that you have been recognized as an able man, and well informed, that you have succeeded in your life in rising from a boy working on the breakers, I believe you said—(interrupted).

A. First I was in the breakers in the anthracite coal field.

Q. (continued). And up and up and up until finally you have reached and have occupied with a successful administration of your office, the position of president of the United Mine Workers of America?

A. Well, I would not care to say that. It would be too much like tooting a fellow's own horn. I presume that is probably what the miners had in mind.

Q. If I were to say that I believe that to be a fact, you would not resent it as being impertinent on my part?

A. No, I think not; although on the other hand, I believe there are other men who could fill the position just as well as I have. In fact, I am one of those people who believe there was never a man occupied a position but what there was another man who would be just as good if he had the opportunity.

Q. I do not mean to disparage any other man, at all, but simply to express my belief that it is owing to your energy and your ability that you have risen from the ranks to the head of this organization?

A. I think that has had something to do with it.

Mr. Gilchrist: I agree with you that in this world there is no man who cannot be duplicated many times over.

Q. Now, this organization, I believe you said had a membership of over three hundred thousand men?

A. About three hundred thousand more or less; I believe that is what I stated; yes, sir.

Q. And I believe you said in your direct examination that you had occupied this position as president of the United Mine Workers since 1900?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Since when?

A. Since April 1st, 1908.

Q. And that you were to retire on April 1st, 1911?

A. Yes, sir; and I expect to go back to digging coal.

671 Q. You expect to go back to digging coal. That is certainly very much to your credit.

A. There are some things I want to learn about it.

Q. Were you a candidate for re-election as president?

A. Yes, sir; but I didn't get enough votes.

Q. Who is to take your place?

A. Mr. John P. White, of Oskaloosa, Iowa; a very fine fellow.

Q. Is your labor organization the largest labor organization in the world?

A. As far as we know it is. It has the largest membership of any single national organization in the world. There may be organizations that are regarded as labor unions in China, or some part of it, composed of laboring men, that have a larger membership and that we do not know anything about, but so far as we know the miners' organization in this country is the largest organization in the world.

Q. And it aims, does it not, to control the mining industry of the country?

A. No; I think not. We aim to organize every mine on the American continent; at least that is one of my aims, and I believe that that is the ultimate object of all of those who are familiar and have endeavored to acquaint themselves with and to study the mining situation of this country.

Q. You stated during the course of your examination here, I believe, that there was a difference in organizing the men at a mine and in organizing a mine. I wish you would explain to me that difference, as nearly as you can.

A. I desire to state, first, that to the best of my recollection I made no reference to that feature of the organization; I think it was another witness; however, I am willing to explain my opinion in regard to the matter; when we organize the men in a mine we may organize a dozen, where there are two or three hundred employed, or we may organize fifty or we may organize a majority or we may organize all of the men in that mine, and if they become members of our union—membership in the union in itself does not constitute organizing the men. To have the men organized thoroughly they must understand all the purposes for which they have become members of the union. In organizing the men we take them in as members and then we seek to educate them in regard to what their duties are not only as members of our union, but their duties to the government under which they live, as citizens of the country, and those who are not citizens as to what is necessary for them to become good citizens, when they take out their papers. That phase of the situation is not discussed in all local unions, but the well organized 672 local carries into effect all of those ideas. An organized mine is a mine which is organized and worked under a mutual contract between the mine owner and the representative of the men in that mine. In other words, they do not sign a contract with each individual working there. There is a committee, or the representatives of the sub-district or district, or the national organization that treat with the mine owners' representative. All of the operators, for instance, in the district, don't necessarily take part or participate in the negotiating of the contract. They have their associations the same as we have ours only they are probably more perfect, because there is a less number of them and there are fewer men take charge of and look after their interests and there are not so many individual opinions to harmonize. When we have an organized mine that means that all the men in that mine are governed by the contracts under which the mine is operated, and the men are paid their wages and governed by the laws of the organization. The operators understand what our laws are when they make contracts with our people.

Q. When you speak of the operators, what operators do you mean, those who join with you in the interstate convention arrangement that you have?

A. No; I have reference there to any mine owners—and operators and mine owners are synonymous terms—to any mine owners and operators that will negotiate, agree upon and sign up the terms of the contract to govern the organization of the mine. I might explain further by saying that there is not any operators' association and there is not an association of operators even governing, for instance, the central competitive field which includes western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and West Virginia if it were participating in those negotiations. We always consider that those operators in West Virginia that ship coal west should be a part of our central competitive field, and the fact that we have not got in our organization the operators controlling those states, or representing all the operators within those four states. * * * They come into the interstate meeting and they participate in the deliberations; they hold their meetings during the sessions and may before and after that, so far as we know. We are not aware whether they hold preliminary meetings or not, but if they do they hold those meetings merely to outline their plan of action in negotiating with the miners' representatives. They haven't got an organization, although there are efforts being made now and efforts have been made to form organizations of operators to include all the operators within 673 certain competitive territory. I hope myself that the time will come when they will be organized.

The Court:

Q. I want to ask you this question: If you were tendered the superintendence or management of a mine would you be required to withdraw from the union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why is that?

A. The reason for that is that there was a time when they believed that if a mine foreman, for instance, retained his membership in our organization, that there was not that community of interest that should exist, and that mine foreman would come into the miners' meetings—not because of any secrecy but because of their influence with the men—and would govern the organization. On the other hand, members of the miners' organization had no right to become members of the operators' organization. They believed that the two interests in a sense being diametrically opposed to each other—the one the employer and the other the employe—that the man who had charge of directing affairs in working men in and around the mine—that he would use his influence in the interest of certain classes of men, probably to the detriment of the miners' organization, and in the long run they would show favoritism to some men who would do certain things, and necessarily create friction, and it would be up to the miners' organization to establish that discipline necessary so that everybody should be treated alike.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. You spoke yesterday as knowing Mr. Rankin as a mine superintendent?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He has withdrawn from the association, has he?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was currently reported in the newspapers that your organization had required Mr. Mitchell to withdraw from the Civic Federation. What reason was there for that, under your laws?

A. Well, that is a mistake; our international convention did not require Mr. Mitchell to withdraw from the Civid Federation. Our international convention amended the constitution and specified that members of the National Civic Federation could not retain membership in the United Mine Workers' organization. They had already amended their constitution so that mine foremen and company weighmen—top bosses, as they are called in some places—could not retain membership in our organization. They had also amended the constitution that any one engaged in the sale of intoxicants of any kind could not retain membership in our 674 organization: and that carries with it this idea: If we had a picnic or celebration there is not one of our members—even though he had a temporary license that could go out to the picnic ground and sell intoxicants without forfeiting his membership. The purpose of that is to try and confine our membership to the men who are actually working in or around the mines, engaged in the production of coal, and the officials and representatives directly connected with the organization. In other words, to divorce the organization from any outside influence. I want to say also, in order to make it clear, that as a result of the amending of the constitution with reference to membership in the National Civic Federation and the United Mine Workers, Mr. Mitchell being one of the men who is a member of the Civic Federation would be required to withdraw his membership from our organization. We did not say to him that he had to withdraw from the Civic Federation, but he could not hold membership in both. It was optional with him, then, to decide what he would do. I will say frankly, that if it were me, and I was in his place, and I honestly believed that I could do the labor people of this country any good and do anything to bring about a better feeling between the employers of labor and the laboring men, I would have given up my membership in the United Mine Workers and staid with the Civic Federation, to prove my belief. Of course I do not know what he will do in that respect, outside of what the newspapers say.

Q. As a matter of fact, was not that action at that convention—which was the last convention you had—taken with direct reference to Mitchell?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure of it?

A. The matter had been up in previous conventions.

Q. And also in direct reference to Mitchell, was it not?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was Mitchell's membership in the Civic Federation not the principal subject of comment in the passing of that resolution amending the constitution, at your last convention?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was he the subject of discussion at all?

A. He may have been, but only as an incident.

Q. Can you tell me what other man in your organization was mentioned during your convention proceedings, during the discussion of that proposed amendment, that belong to your organization and was connected with the Civic Federation?

A. I do not know that there was any. I desire to state in that connection that there was less discussion of individuals than 675 there was of the organization itself. There was more discussion of the men who composed the Civic Federation, and who were its supporters and who contributed to it—a great deal more that there was of Mr. Mitchell. The fact of the matter is that the records will show that practically all the discussion had reference to the failure of the Civic Federation to carry out its declared purposes, and that had especial reference to the trade agreement department. We know, and I know myself, that the men who can, if they would, bring about a better understanding between employers and employes in our industries in this country, and who are the principal officers of the National Civic Federation who contribute to it and keep it in existence, have done practically nothing to put into effect the declared purposes of the National Civic Federation. It is results we want and—not talk; and as a matter of fact the leaders of the Civic Federation in every industry in which they are interested have wiped the labor organizations out of existence.

Q. Is it not true that John Mitchell in all of his actions relative to the adjustment of disputes since he has been one of the officers of the Civic Federation, has decided in favor of union labor?

A. No; for the reason that he never has decided any question in dispute since he has been with the Civic Federation—not one—and the reason he has not decided any, I presume, is because he has not been permitted to.

Q. Has he not performed any service for the Civic Federation in the adjustment of disputes between employers and employes?

A. Not to our knowledge; we do not know of any.

Q. From personal knowledge, therefore, you are not able to say whether he has or has not decided with labor as against capital when in controversy?

A. No; we are not prepared to say that because we haven't any information where he has, and he has not made known that fact if he has.

Q. John Mitchell has severed his connection with the Civic Federation, has he not?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure of that?

A. Positive.

Q. And from personal knowledge?

A. I am positive of that.

Q. And he is still a member of the United Mine Workers, is he?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court:

Q. Then the report in the newspaper that he had withdrawn from the Civic Federation is incorrect?

A. In explanation of my answer to those questions I would say that he has resigned as chairman of the Trades Agreement 676 Department, to take effect the last of this month; consequently he has not left it; and it does not state in that resignation that he is withdrawing from the Civic Federation, but the presumption is that he will. We do not know what may transpire between now and the first day of March to bring about a change in that whole situation. That is the reason I made those statements in the manner that I did. In other words, he has up to the first of April to decide what to do. He may be prevailed upon to withdraw his resignation.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Mr. Lewis, I gathered from your direct examination that the real object of the formation of the United Mine Workers of America, and the real object of its existence, is, to benefit the men employed in the mining industry by raising their wages and surrounding them with such influences in life as will conduce to the better citizenship of this country. Is that true?

A. That is true.

Q. Do you know of any other reasons why the United Mine Workers exist today, than that humanitarian reason?

A. I do not know as I exactly understand your question.

(The question is read by the stenographer.)

A. (continued). Well, that would depend on what you would include in the word "humanitarian." The reasons for the existence of the United Mine Workers is, as has been stated, to raise the standard of wages to such a point that it will provide the miners and their families not only with the necessaries but with some of the comforts of life to reduce the hours of labor to that point where they are not required to work any longer than necessary to produce all the coal that will meet the requirements of the nation; and to improve the working conditions of the men in the mines to the highest possible standard that artificial means can make those conditions good; to educate the mine workers in order that they may understand their own wants and requirements, so that they will know how to secure what belongs to them, by intelligent methods, and to do everything that will make of them better citizens and help, of course, to make of the nation a better nation of people.

Q. Taking the objects of the organization to be those you have set out in your last answer, it would seem that the object of the organization is a most laudable one, would it not?

A. We think it is.

Q. Has it ever occurred to you that with an organization of the magnitude of your organization and with an organization 677 seeking only to do such things as you have described in your last answer, that it is strange why there is such opposition manifested by employers in the coal mining industry, to your organizing methods and to coming under control and jurisdiction in the operation of their mines?

A. It is not in the least strange to me, and for this reason: The mine workers of this country, in my opinion, have been the most misrepresented people on the American continent. Naturally, when the miners are organizing to establish the things that we have explained, the mine owners, being human and more or less selfish the same as the rest of us, believe that every improvement secured by the miners either in the way of better wages or less hours of work, will add to the cost of producing a ton of coal, and without going into the matter thoroughly, they figure incidentally that the added cost to produce a ton of coal means decreasing their op-ortunity to earn large profits on their investment. That is one phase of it. The other phase of it is that operators in the different states have either deceived themselves into the belief, or have been led to believe by the enemies of our organization, that the organization is not built on as broad a standard as we claim, and that we are seeking to organize the mining industry of the country in order that we may discriminate against operators in some states and in favor of operators in other states. The mine owners who are not thoroughly familiar with our purposes, or at least have not got confidence in the real intention of our movement, and being governed by their own selfish instincts to a greater or less extent, made war on the organization. As we have grown older—as we have extended the organization and the operators have become better acquainted with our methods—that position is becoming less intense and in its place is a greater desire to get together and understand each other. Now, in that connection, I want to be perfectly frank and say this: That with all of the different nationalities of men that we have within the ranks of our organization, made up of every religious belief and every political belief—and, as I stated, I believe, yesterday, or at one time during the giving of my testimony, we have every kind of men, including Japanese and Chinamen, as members of our union, and it is a tremendous work to educate these men to understand the real purpose of the organization. We do not claim to be perfect and we never will be; we do not claim but what we have er-atic men within our ranks—men who do things they should not do and men who commit offenses that are in violation of the law. While there is no excuse for me doing that, the fact is that it is done. That is 678 true of men that belong to no organization; that is true of business men—; that is true of men in every walk of life. They do those same things; they violate the laws and we have laws to punish them; and we want our people punished when they vio-ate the law. That is the feeling of the leaders; that is the feeling of the men within our organization who are looked upon as the best educated men and the most thoroughly acquainted with the principles of the organization and the purposes for which we are organized.

Q. You and the other defendants in this suit, with the exception of Thomas Hughes, are the leaders of the United Mine Workers, are you not?

A. Yes, sir; we are looked upon as the leaders of this organization—or some of them, at least.

Q. Now, Mr. Lewis, the operators have had a good long while, have they not, to become acquainted with the objects of your organization?

A. Some of them have and some of them haven't.

Q. Your organization has been in existence since 1890, has it not?

A. That is true; but there are a number of men in the mining business right now that were not in the mining business five years ago.

Q. Naturally so. The Chicago agreement of 1898 between the operators of the central competitive states and the United Mine Workers of America, as a national body was gotten up, was it not, for the purpose of securing to those operators—members of that operators' convention and in the joint movement as it was called—security of markets for their products?

A. No, sir.

Q. Not in any sense?

A. No, sir; not for any special markets. The Chicago joint convention was the outgrowth of a condition. Previous to 1897 and after the old interstate joint movement had passed out of existence, the operators, with no organization, started out to sell coal everywhere they could, and in their keen competition with each other they discovered that on the one hand they were earning nothing on their investments, and turning to the point of least resistance, the only thing was to reduce the wages of the men. They succeeded in doing that—because of the very little organization that existed—until they reached the point where the miners in the state in which I lived were not able to meet their obligations with the business men where they purchased the necessaries of life—where they were not able to live, it didn't matter how many days they worked; and the mine owners themselves discovered that they were not even earning any money under that condition, because one operator was 679 competing against another and they were practically giving their coal away, making no profit and starving their men; and that condition brought on—as I stated, I believe, yesterday, or one other day when I was on the stand—a request from the operators of the Hocking district, where we had the best part of our organization at that time, to give them an opportunity to pay the men in script or sixty-day notes. They had no method of raising the means—of raising the money—for what little they did owe them, but in those sixty days the leaders got together and they agreed that under the conditions that existed—which was also intensified because of the panic existing throughout the country at the time which made it a great deal worse everywhere—they agreed to accept those sixty-day notes, and when they used those notes in the business houses throughout the Hocking District, they had to discount the notes again, even though it amounted to very little in the way of wages, and after that period had passed away and conditions were no better, they finally got back where they could raise the necessary amount of money to pay what little money the men earned; but there were a number of companies on the verge of bankruptcy and some that had gone into bankruptcy. That condition continued until July—or rather the summer of 1897—when out of pure desperation the miners of the country decided that they might just as well starve in idleness as starve by work; and I do not know, but there was probably some sentiment connected with the movement of declaring a general strike on July 4th.

Q. Of what year?

A. Of 1897; and we had, I think, less than ten thousand men in the organization. The meeting that declared that strike appealed to the men in the mines throughout the country to respond in their own behalf, and I think there were over a hundred and fifty thousand men engaged in that struggle. It is true in some places it became very bitter and we discovered that where the men were unorganized was where the clashes were the bitterest; but out of that contest came a conference that was held in Columbus, Ohio, in September of that year. A compromise was effected and an advance of five cents a ton in the mining rate was granted, and at the same time it was agreed that there should be a joint convention of the operators and miners of the country—not of the central competitive field and the operators of Pennsylvania—not of the western part but all of Pennsylvania—and they were invited there and the operators everywhere else were invited. It was an open invitation. That convention organized with operators from western Pennsylvania, Ohio, 680 Indiana and Illinois, and West Virginia, which was recognized as a part of that central competitive field because of the shipping of the coal from West Virginia into the northwest. However, there was, as I stated the other day, only one operator from West Virginia and I think he was from down in the lower part of the state. I have no recollection of his taking any part in the deliberations. We had no stenographer at that convention and consequently haven't a complete record of the proceedings.

Q. What convention was that?

A. In Chicago in 1898—the first convention that restored the joint movement that went out of existence in the eighties.

Q. Who brought about the holding of that joint conference in Chicago in 1898—the miners or the operators?

A. Both; both the miners and the operators.

Q. It was not, then, done at the instance of the miners' organization?

A. No; that was the outgrowth of this meeting held between the operators and the miners' representatives at Columbus, in September, 1897.

Q. Was that agreement which was entered into in Chicago in 1898, at this joint conference, in any sense a co-operative partnership between the miners' organization and the operators of the central competitive states consisting of western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois?

A. Well, it was co-operative in the sense that they finally agreed upon the terms of the wage contract in the preliminary proceedings of that convention. If a person were to go into their meetings you would naturally conclude that they would never get together on any common basis. The discussions at times were very acrimonious and bitter; then they would quiet down again and present each side intelligently as the respective representatives there could present it.

Q. There was nothing done there, was there, that had for its purpose the securing of the operators of the central competitive states referred to, against competition against unfair mines?

A. No; I have no recollection that that feature of the discussion came up. I think, possibly, when they were discussing the uniform day-wage scale and the eight-hour day, that the operators argued that their competitors in other states should be required to conform to the condition that would not drive the operators in the central competitive field entirely out of the market. I am not sure that that was the trend of the discussion and yet I believe that that took place either at Chicago, in the general discussion, or at Columbus when the uniform day-wage scale was established. I might say 681 so far as the day-wage scale is concerned—so you will understand it—that at the time of the Chicago meeting we had in the Massillon district of Ohio an eight and one-half hour day; we had in eastern Ohio a ten hour day; in Indiana a nine hour day in the Hocking district of Ohio a nine hour day; in Western Pennsylvania a ten hour day; and in arriving at the wages of the drivers, which is the largest body of any single class of day labor in the mine, we took the wages in western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and struck an average, because there were different prices paid everywhere, and then the uniform rate of $1.75 a day for an eight hour day was the rate fixed for the driver. That is my recollection. The records, of course, will show what the rate is, and I think it is $1.75.

The Court:

Q. Mr. Lewis, I would like to ask you for an explanation of the justifying causes of what is commonly called a sympathetic strike, which is calling out as I understand it, the men in the mines where they are complying with your rules and under your control, in other to compel other sections and other mine operators to sign the scale or become members of the union, or to perform their obligations under their contract with you?

A. I do not think, your Honor, that there is any justification that can raise for a sympathetic strike. That is my position.

The Court: That is a very frank and nice statement of it and really I think that is one of the main reasons why there is a prejudice against your order in the mind of the public, possibly.

Witness: I believe that you are correct in that. In fact, I know you are, because there have been instances where sympathe-ic strikes have been declared—there is a difference of opinion among some of the leaders of labor unions on that particular question. Some of the leaders believe that a sympathetic strike is justified if it is necessary to prevent the annihilation of the union. Of course, that is an extreme contingency and if that were admitted to be a justification (and I do not admit that it is a justification), if that were admitted to be a justification then it would be quite an easy matter for representatives of labor unions to justify, in their own minds, the conclusion that their organizations were going to be wiped out of existence, and that is the reason why they order a sympathetic strike. But I do not agree even on that phase of it. Anyhow, as I stated, there is a difference of opinion among the leaders of labor unions on that question.

682 Q. Mr. Lewis, on page 473 of "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1," being the "Proceedings of Joint Conference of Coal Operators and Coal Miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana, Cincinnati, Ohio, March 8-29, 1910," in the eighth section or item of the Chicago agreement of 1898, there is the following language: "That the United Mine Workers' organization, a party to this contract, do hereby further agree to afford all possible protection to the trade, and to the other parties hereto, against any unfair competition resulting from a failure to maintain scale rates." Do you recall that provision as being a part of the contract that was made between the United Mine Workers, as a national body, and the operators of the central competitive states who met you in joint convention at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Yesterday evening, Mr. Lewis, I asked you about section 17 of article 9 of the constitution of District No. 6 of the United Mine Workers of America—"Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 2"—and you gave an explanation stating your understanding of what that provision meant. I will ask you to look at section 2 of article 9 of the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America for Sub-District 5 of District 6, "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 3," which section reads as follows: "That a fine of $10.00 in each individual case where it can be proven that a member of our union leaves his district for West Virginia, or any other unfair mine, and remains one month or more without depositing his transfer card and returns without giving a satisfactory account of why he has not deposited his transfer card; and a fine to be collected by the local union where he works." Is your explanation which you gave to my question relating to section 17 of article 9 of the constitution of District No. 6, the same for the meaning of section 2 of article 9 of the constitution of Sub-District 5 of District 6?

A. I think they are both precisely the same sections and for that reason the explanation is just exactly the same.

Q. How do you figure that that sort of a provision aids in the accomplishment of the general purposes of your organization as outlined to me a while ago?

A. For the reason that it is necessary for us to have control over our members and when a man leaves Ohio and leaves his transfer card or his membership in a local union in Ohio, we do not know where he goes nor what he does, and the purpose of that clause in addition to the explanation made, is, that when a man leaves a mine he must take his transfer card with him—that is another provision of the international constitution—and whenever 683 he goes to West Virginia or any other mining district that is not thoroughly organized, by depositing his card in the local union where he goes, it helps to strengthen that particular local union, and his failure to do that must be followed by an explanation when he comes back to the local union, and if a satisfactory explanation is given, there is not any fine imposed.

Q. Then that section has application to instances where a man goes to a locality and works at a mine where there is a local of your order, but which mine at which he works is not operated by contract between the operator and your organization?

A. It may apply to that and it may apply to other mines.

Q. Now, if applied to a union mine you would aim to keep tab on the man, would you, by that procedure?

A. We would endeavor to do so; yes, sir.

Q. But suppose there were no union men there, and suppose there was no local of your order there, what would the man do?

A. The man could go to work in that mine, if he desired. Suppose, for instance, a man came from an Ohio local to West Virginia (say down to Fairmont), and went to work, and he worked there two months—he can carry his transfer card with him for three months before the card becomes void, and he came back to Ohio with his card, if he were disposed to or wanted to misrepresent the facts he could say that he had not secured any employment while — had been away from his home; but if it was learned afterwards that he had misrepresented the facts and that he had been working in Fairmont, why, they would impose a fine of ten dollars on him. And for what? For misrepresenting the facts without any explanation. If he had come back home and stated that he had been working in the mines in the Fairmont region, the men in that local might want to know what the conditions were over here and he would explain to them. They would ask him, "Well, did you make any effort to organize the mine?" and he may have made an effort to organize the mine and that would have caused his discharge, and he then would go back over into Ohio with a satisfactory explanation and there would not be any fine imposed, notwithstanding he had worked in a mine where there wasn't any union at all.

Q. But if his explanation was not satisfactory?

A. There would be a fine imposed.

Q. Suppose he had been working there and had not sought to unionize the men that were there working with him?

684 A. If he gave no satisfactory explanation, why, then, a fine would more than likely be imposed.

Q. So that a man, then, is fined for working in a non-union mine?

A. He may be, without giving proper explanation.

Q. Now, will you point out to me the same provision in the international constitution?

A. No; I did not say there was any.

Q. It is not in the international constitution?

A. No, sir.

Q. If that is an important provision for the advancement of your order, and if it appears, as it does, in the constitution of District 6 and in the constitution of Sub-District 5 of District 6, how do you account for the fact that that important provision does not appear in the constitution of the international union?

A. For the reason that I don't consider it an important provision for the advancement of the organization, and that clause is in those constitutions because they have certain—I do not just remember the word they use—but they have certain rights over their membership that are not in conflict with the international law. In other words, the same as a state government would have certain prerogatives in the enacting or making of certain laws as long as they were not in conflict with the national government. I haven't admitted that those clauses in those constitutions read, are an important factor for the advancement of the United Mine Workers of America or the extension of the organization. In fact, I do not believe that they are.

Q. You said, I believe, in answer to one of my questions yesterday, that you did not believe in strikes?

A. I do not believe in strikes.

Q. Have you called any strikes recently?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What one did you call?

A. There was a strike ordered over in eastern Ohio not very long ago.

Q. You remember the time you called it, don't you?

A. Oh, it was just a few days ago.

Q. Well, what day?

A. I am not prepared to say.

Q. Take time and refresh your recollection and answer.

A. I could not do it.

Q. Do you mean you won't?

A. No, sir; I won't answer a question under oath that I am not positive about.

Q. To the best of your recollection what date did you call that strike.

A. I do not know.

Q. Have you no recollection at all?

A. No; not of that particular date.

685 Q. To the best of your recollection about what date did you call that strike?

A. I think it was week before last.

Q. Was that when you called it or when you said you were going to call it?

A. No; that was when it was called or decided to be called.

Q. Which is it—called or determined to be called.

A. Determined to be called.

Q. Then, when was it called in point of fact?

A. Practically at the same time or as near to it as preparation could be made.

Q. Is it not a fact that that strike was called by you within the last two or three days?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether that strike is being obeyed?

A. I do not.

Q. Have you any information on that subject?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Lewis, I have in my hand a copy of the Fairmont Times, a paper printed in Fairmont, West Virginia, Tuesday, March 21, 1911, and on the front page I find an article purporting to be a dispatch from Wheeling, W. Va. The article is headed "More than Nine Thousand Miners Obey Lewis's Strike Order. Wheeling, W. Va., March 20. More than nine thousand men went on strike in the eastern Ohio and Pittsburg district coal fields today in response to an order issued by President Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America. All but eight hundred of the ten thousand ordered out obeyed the order, though meetings held at various points in the field yesterday resulted in a vote of more than three to one again- striking. National officers threaten to revoke charter of the locals refusing to obey." Please look at that article. (The paper is here handed witness.) Is that the first information you have had about whether that strike has been obeyed or disobeyed?

A. The information contained in that article is not true, in the beginning.

Q. Neither in whole nor in part?

A. Part of it may be.

Q. What is the part that is true?

A. I do not know: I did not carry that all in my mind.

Q. What is the part that is not true?

A. The part that is not true is where it says that Lewis ordered the strike.

The Court:

Q. Just explain. How was the strike called.

A. The strike was called by the orders of international convention of the United Mine Workers, last January, by its authority and by its instruction.

Q. You mean to say that you were simply carrying out the instructions of your miners' convention?

A. Yes, sir.

686 Q. Regardless of your own views as to the advisability of it?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. What is the contention over that strike, Mr. Lewis?

Witness: I would like to ask the Court if it is necessary to go into details.

The Court: I think the question is proper for the reason that this investigation in a measure involves the principles, procedure and practices of your organization, under the charge that they are illegal. I think under the circumstances you ought to answer the question in detail, so far, at least, as they may throw light upon the practices and principles of your organization.

A. When we adjourned the conference at Cincinnati without reaching any agreement between the operators and the miners, the central competitive joint movement was dissolved; it went out of existence this year on March 29th. "On a roll call of the representatives of the operators and miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana the convention by a unanimous vote adjourned sine die." That action carried with it the dissolution of the central competitive field joint movement of operators and miners. After the joint conference had adjourned the miners met in separate convention and outlined a policy to govern them in negotiating wage contracts throughout the country. On the 5th and 6th days of April the operators of Ohio met the representatives of the Ohio

United Mine Workers at Columbus and signed agreement of which the following is a copy:

Columbus, Ohio, April 5th, 1910.

Agreement for Hocking District.

It is hereby agreed by and between the United Mine Workers of America and the Coal Operators of Hocking District of Ohio:

That for a period of two (2) years, viz., from April 1st, 1910, until April 1st, 1912, the price of mining be increased five cents per ton, viz., from ninety to ninety-five cents, pick mining, and four cents per ton on machine mined coal; 1¼ (inch and quarter) screened lump coal.

The inside day wage scale shall be increased 5.55% with the conditions of the Columbus day wage scale of 1898.

687 That all narrow and dead work, room turning and outside day labor shall be paid a proportionate advance with the pick mining rate.

That internal difference both as to prices and conditions shall be referred for adjustment to a joint convention of Hocking Miners and Operators to be held at the earliest date possible.

Signed this fifth day of April, 1910, at Columbus, O.

On behalf of Hocking Operators:

W. K. FIELD, President.
F. S. BROOKS, Secretary.

On behalf of U. M. W. A., District 6:

D. H. SULLIVAN, President.
JOHN MOORE, Vice-President.
G. W. SAVAGE, Secretary.
T. L. LEWIS, President.

A. (continued.) This copy was signed by myself and the next day the operators of the Tuscarawas and Sherrodsville districts met the representatives of the Ohio miners. They signed an agreement precisely the same as this one, changing the names of the districts. The mines resumed operation over there, as they resumed practically all over Ohio. The operators and the miners' representatives in the Tuscarawas district met in conference to adjust their internal matters that we have described here several times. The operators proposed a reduction of six and a half cents per ton in the screened coal mining price; nothing was said about reducing the pick mining rate. In addition to that they proposed other propositions that carried with them a reduction in the wages of the miners. The miners refused to accept the reduction and among their claims, was, as I understand (I was not present at this meeting, but this matter was reported to me) that a contract had been signed to pay an advance of four cents a ton in the mach-ne mining rate and that they would not accept a reduction of six and a half cents in the same machine mining rate, which would be equivalent to a reduction of two and a half cents per ton less than the mining rates they had received the previous year. In other words, in our opinion the operators repudiated their own contract and the mines sus-

688 pended work on the 11th of June, in the Tuscarawas district, and they have continued idle until the present time. The main issue involved is the machine mining rate. Efforts have been made to have those operators comply with the terms of the contract they signed last April. Conferences were held and the matter was taken up to the Ohio district convention, in January, and explained, and the position of the Tuscarawas miners received the endorsement of the miners of Ohio. The matter was then taken up to the international convention, and after explanations were made, again the position of the Tuscarawas miners was endorsed. Their position had also been endorsed last August in a special convention of the United Mine Workers of the entire country. The matter was then taken up by the representatives of the Ohio miners' organization before the international board after the adjournment of our international convention, in the early part of February. The matter was gone over and in order to try to get a settlement two of the international board members and myself were instructed by that board, in conformity with the action of the convention to take the matter up with the Ohio officials and endeavor to get a settlement, and in the event of failure we were authorized and instructed to order on strike the employes of the same companies operating mines in other parts of the district, for the reason that those companies after having signed an agreement repudiated the contract for a part of their mines. We consider that they have repudiated their contract with the United Mine Workers' organization. The mines were permitted to continue working with the hope that a settlement would be reached. We arranged a conference with the operators of the Tuscarawas district who were the same men that owned the mines that have recently become involved in the strike. We failed to reach an agreement there. Then we asked for another conference, which was held at Columbus, Ohio, and there was some prospect, at least, it seemed to me, that we might be able to settle that controversy without extending that strike, but that hope vanished on account of subsequent developments; and in order that the miners themselves again might understand the situation, a convention was called of the mines that would become directly involved. Three of them are in western Pennsylvania. That convention was called and the representatives of the miners were throughly apprised of the situation; and after that convention another effort was made with the operators to bring about a settlement, and failing to induce them to comply with the terms of the contract that they had already 689 signed last April and repudiated subsequently, a circular was issued to their employes at the other mines asking them to suspend work. That is the history of it.

The Court: Mr. Lewis, I will instruct the stenographer and clerk to see to it that none of your statements made here are given out to the press and made public, if you desire me to do so.

Witness: I will appreciate that very much.

The Court: We haven't any newspaper reporters here and the matter will be kept within the limits of this record.

Witness: I want to say frankly that I do not understand the methods of procedure in court and especially in regard to the taking of testimony of this character, and that is the reason I asked the question of the court, in the first place. I haven't any desire to withhold any information from you; any information I have will be freely given. I want to say now to the attorney conducting the examination, that a moment ago that I stated positively (and probably I sometimes get emphatic if I think there is doubt in the mind of the man to whom I am giving the information) that I could not swear at this moment the very day we decided to have this circular drawn up, and I meant this: It was drawn up one day, printed another day, and mailed another day; so it was not all done in one day. It was simply a part of the arrangement that was being carried through all the day. I would like to be able to remember the date on that circular, but I cannot do it. Have you got a copy of it, Mr. Savage?

Mr. Savage: Yes.

(Hands circular to the witness.)

Witness (continuing): March 13th is the date of the circular issued.

Mr. Gilchrist: Have you any objection to me seeing that?

Witness: Not if you hand it back to Mr. Savage.

Mr. Gilchrist: I will hand it back of course.

690 Q. Mr. Lewis, in the official notice for the call for this strike, a copy of which has been handed to you by Mr. Savage, and which you permit me to read, I find this language: "Failing to induce the operators to comply with the demands of the Cincinnati convention, we are authorized and instructed to request the employes of those operators in other mines to suspend work. Acting by authority and instruction of the international and district executive boards and the instruction of the international and district conventions, you are advised and instructed to suspend work on Monday, March 20th, 1911, and remain idle until such time as you are further advised and instructed by your international and district officers." That notice is signed by the following: "T. L. Lewis, President; A. R. Watkins, Thomas Cairns, International Board Members; D. H. Sullivan, President; John Moore, Vice-president; G. W. Savage, Secretary District No. 6." The T. L. Lewis is yourself?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The A. R. Watkins mentioned is the Mr. Watkins who is here?

A. I think so.

Q. The D. H. Sullivan, President, is the Mr. Sullivan who sits here?

A. I think so.

Q. And the G. W. Savage, Secretary, is the Mr. Savage who is here?

A. I think so.

Q. Now, Mr. Lewis, you were one of the three men to execute this order and you were depending upon what the op-rators concluded to do. Is that correct?

A. No; we were given instructions that under certain developments and certain conditions—if they were not done—then we were to act.

Q. But if those operators in the Tuscarawas field had come to your terms, you would not have called the strike?

A. Not to our terms; if they had complied with the terms of their own contract that they had agreed to and signed, there would not have been any suspension of work.

Q. In other words, your organization came to the conclusion that the operators in the Tuscarawas field hadn't lived up to the contract, as you understood it?

A. They hadn't lived up to the contract that they had signed.

Q. As you understood it?

A. No; not as we understood it. The document was there. They had agreed to pay an advance in wages and then refused to continue to pay it, and they had agreed to pay it for a period of two years.

Q. That is your contention?

A. That is the document itself; I am not contending that; I am merely stating that that is the document to which they attached their signatures.

691 Q. Passing that point for a moment and assuming that you and your organization are correct in claiming that those operators have dealt with you in bad faith, this strike then, as I understand it, is called by your organization so as to affect the same operators, but who have different employes and who are doing business in another and entirely different section of the country. Is that true?

A. That is true.

Q. Then that action is in a sense punitive, is it not?

A. I do not understand what you mean by that.

Q. By that action you mean to punish those operators, do you not?

A. No; I do not regard it in that sense unless you regard it as punishing a man for violating a law. If we accept it in that manner, why, then, it is punishment; it is rather the means of punishment for violating a law that they mutually and without any coercion helped to create.

Q. All punishment is supposed to be corrective in its nature, is — not?

A. It is not always.

Q. But it is supposed to be, is it not?

A. That may be; I am not sure about that.

Q. In this instance do you mean the calling out of these men at these mines in other sections of the country is intended as a punishment or coercive measure applied to those operators who broke their contracts with you, or not?

A. No; we consider that those men are working for the same companies and those same companies signed their agreements for all their mines at the same time. When they repudiated their contract for a part of their mines they practically repudiated their contract for all of their mines; but the men have been permitted to work during all these months at their other mines with the hope that they would be able to settle their business without asking their other men to join their fellow miners in a joint suspension.

Q. Have you ever heard this sort of an expression used among the men who are prominent in the control of your organization: Substantially this: that the concern of one is the concern of all?

A. That sentence used to be a part of the doctrine of the Knights of Labor and I believe used to be written on many of the letter heads. That not only applies to a labor organization but to governments as well. That applies to the United States governments—the concern of one in this country, as a general principle, is the concern of the nation. If you will permit me we had that amply verified recently by the Secretary of State making inquiry as to why two men were arrested, who were Americans, and claiming to have been arrested on American soil. That is a dispute, now, to 692 be settled, and it is the concern of the nation whether those two men are going to be deprived of their liberty or not.

Q. Getting down to the application of that proposition by your organization, is this strike now called not an application of that very principle?

A. I think it is.

Q. This is a sympathetic strike, is it?

A. No, sir; not in my opinion.

Q. Tell me why it is not a sympathetic strike?

A. It is a strike to require the operators to respect a contract to which they were a party.

Q. It is sympathetic so far as the employes who go out under that call for a strike is concerned, is it not?

A. I think not.

Q. Have they any disagreement with the operators they are working for?

A. No; I think not

Q. Then they go out in sympathy, do they not?

A. I think not.

Q. Do they go out under order, then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they have been ordered out of work, then, in order that your organization may coerce certain operators into doing what you claim they ought to do?

A. No, sir.

Q. If not, why not?

A. They have been ordered out for the reason that those operators are parties to an agreement with the United Mine Workers' organization, and when those same operators repudiated a contract to which they were parties, at a part of their mines, they practically nullified the entire contract with the organization. The opposite of that would be that if any of our members were to suspend work at any of the mines of the companies while they were in operation, the operators would not look to the men themselves to return to work but they would look to the organization to see that they did return to work; and we are looking to those operators to comply with the contract that they made for all their mines; not any part of them, but to comply with their contract for all of their mines where they made it.

Q. Then I understand that the operators on the one hand furnish employment for your members and on the other hand you furnish employes for the operators?

A. No, sir.

Q. If not, why not?

A. The operators furnish employment to members of the United Mine Workers or to any one else who seeks employment at their mine, and we do not furnish men for them.

Q. But you do take from the operator his employes, provided that operator in any other place fails to live up to contracts which may have been made by him, with you, with respect to coal operations in some other section of the country?

693

A. No; in this particular instance under discussion those men have been requested to suspend work until further advised.

Q. Is a formal request equivalent to an order?

A. Practically; yes, sir.

Q. In order to enforce obedience of that order on the part of men who are working in the regoin to be affected by this new strike would you under any circumstances threaten to revoke their charters if they fail to obey the order?

A. I think not.

Q. Aside from your reply that you think not, would you or would you not, as a matter of fact, revoke the charter where a local organization of your body failed to obey?

A. I am not in a position to answer that question.

Q. Why are you not in a position to answer it?

A. For the reason that I am only one of twenty-seven members of the national executive board.

Q. Have you never known that method to be resorted to in your organization?

A. No; the only time that I know of that charters have been revoked was when miners refused to comply with the terms of a contract when they were directed to do so.

Q. So you use that method under certain circumstances but you think that you would not use that method under the present circumstances with respect to the strike which has just now been called?

A. That is my position.

Q. Whether or not that method would be adopted would depend, as I understand you, upon the action of the international board?

—. No; I did not say that.

Q. What board did you say?

A. I did not refer to any board.

Q. Well, what body, then?

A. None.

Q. What collection of men?

A. None.

Q. You said that you could not answer my question on that point, when first asked, because you were simply one of twenty-six or twenty-seven members. I will ask you what you meant by that?

A. I have no right to anticipate what this board may do.

Q. Well, then it is in the hands of a board, is it?

A. That board can revoke charters.

Q. That is what I thought! and then it is a matter that that board may take up and may act upon?

A. I do not know that they will. You have asked the question that they may, and if they may, that is equivalent that they will.

694 The Court: I think the question as asked is equivalent to asking if they have the power.

Witness (continuing): Oh, yes; I have stated that they have the power.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Provided a majority of that board is it the international board?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Provided the international board finds it expedient to compel the members of the United Mine Workers employed by these operators in this strike district, affected by this new strike order, would it be likely that revoking the charters of the particular locals would be effective to compel the employes at these mines affected, to obey the order and strike?

A. That I could not answer because I do not know what the temperament of the men themselves might be.

Q. As a general proposition when that authority is exercised and that matter of revocation is really indulged in on the part of your organization, what is the effect as to the men?

A. It has had different effects. Sometimes the men have obeyed the strikes and at other times they have refused. That depends a great deal on the character of the men themselves, and their intemper-ment; and in addition to that it depends upon their knowledge of the organization and the necessity on their part of obeying any laws — either of that organization or the laws of the country.

Q. You have said in your examination that you have different classes and conditions of men, of different temper-ments and of divers nationalities, and you have an incongruous crowd, in — way, and that it is difficult to compel them to live up to the rules of the organization?

A. No, sir; I do not think I said that.

Q. You do not?

A. I stated, if my memory serves me right, that it is more difficult to control some men than others. For instance, if we were organizing a body of men in a non-union mining district, giving to them all the rights of membership, and that being recognized by the mine owner, and even the negotiating of a wage contract to govern their employment, we find it more difficult in holding those men in line with the laws of our organization and the terms of the contract, than we do where men have been organizaed for a period of time. I might add, too, that that does not apply alone to any particular nationality of men. I imagine that there are some men who come from southern Europe who are of a more fiery temperament than those from other parts of Europe, and are more 695 difficult to handle; but as they become educated you find even these people can be handled with very little difficulty. We find among our Americans—we call them Americans—native born—take for instance some sections of West Virginia there are men who have lived in mountain communities all their lives, and they open up mines there and those men become miners and join the organization. Because of their natural environment during their whole lives they resent restraint being thrown around them to keep them down to certain specified laws and the terms of contracts negotiated and agreed upon by the organization. That has come under my personal observation.

Q. When you negotiate a wage contract in joint convention, do I understand you that the wage scale and conditions that go with it are those which govern all mines which may be run union in such portions of the United States as, under the theories of your organization have the same working conditions?

A. No; in our joint conventions we endeavor to negotiate the terms of the contract covering a specified territory. It does not include the entire country.

Q. I do not mean to imply that you include the entire country but simply such portion of it as you consider ought to be subject to the same rate of wages under the same mining conditions.

A. Well, that may not apply, for the reason that we may have in the state of Iowa the same price and mining rate that we have some place in Ohio or western Pennsylvania, and yet a contract in that state is negotiated between the miners and operators of that state, and not in the central competitive joint convention or by the national organization. Pardon me and I will explain that further and help to enlighten you on that subject. The international convention of miners, when they formulate a proposition either to renew the terms of a contract or to ask for an advance in wages so far as the general advance is concerned would affect and has affected what are known as the basing districts; then they work from those to all the other mining districts in the country.

Q. In the central competitive states you have a joint convention and you agree upon a scale of wages and the other conditions which go with it. Those conditions and that scale are the things that must enter into the contract between your organization and the operator, are they not?

A. Conditions become a part of the agreement in the various districts provided that the operators and miners in those districts can agree to them.

696 Q. Assuming that they have agreed, then, when a union mine is signed up—by which term I have understood is meant the arrangement between the operator and the union whereby the mine is to be operated under the rules and regulations of the United Mine Workers—is it a fact that the terms of that agreement between the operators, in convention and your organization, are applied to contracts not only between the members of the joint convention who are operators, but between operators who are not members of the joint conference but who operate coal mines within the district represented by the operators who join with the United Mine Workers in holding the joint convention?

A. I am not sure that I understand your question.

(The question was read by the stenographer.)

A. Any contract agreed upon by the operators and miners represented in the convention, applies to mines not represented, only upon the consent of the operators who own those mines.

Q. Do you in any instance consent that an operator not a member of the joint conference but having his mine within the territory represented by that conference, may operate his mine on terms different from what you have agreed as to those mines that are represented in the conference?

A. If it is the same vein and the same conditions, that operator can operate his mines, if he desires, without any interference from us, but the men who are working for him as members of our organization reserve the right to quit or to require him to comply with the same terms that other operators have to comply with provided he wants their services.

Q. I understand then from that, that as a matter of practice the operator must consent to these terms agreed upon or else he don't operate under the United Mine Workers?

A. If the mine is the same—the same vein and the same conditions—that is correct.

Q. And yet under such an instance that operator would not have had a hand in arriving at the terms?

A. Oh, yes; he would.

Q. Except that he consented to them afterwards?

A. Well, there would be a committee, or there would be representatives of the organization wait upon him to get his consent to comply with the terms.

Q. Yes; I understand.

A. And for that reason he would have an opportunity; and in addition to that he had the opportunity of attending the joint convention if he desired, and it was his fault if he did not take 697 part in the proceedings, because there is not any operator who is excluded from those joint conventions.

Q. Then, so far as the fixing of the scale is concerned, in joint convention, if the operator don't embrace his opportunity and join in holding that convention that you join, and he has only himself to blame. Is that true?

A. I think he is placed in precisely the same position as I would be if I failed to go to the polls on election day and cast my ballot. I have got to abide by the results of that election.

Q. Well, the analogy is not complete, I rather imagine, because one is governmental and the other is not.

A. The other is governmental so far as our organization is concerned.

Q. Assuming, of course, then, that your organization has the right by its rules and regulations to compel every man who wants to operate a coal mine, to operate it either under your jurisdiction and control or not at all. Is that true?

A. No; the other feature is that we haven't got the same power as the government to enforce our own laws.

Q. And if you had the power you would enforce them?

A. But we haven't got it and we are not discussing something we haven't got.

Q. So far as you have that power you exert it to enforce them?

A. But we haven't got it at all.

Q. So far as you have any power you exert your power to enforce them?

A. We exert our influence before the members of our organization, respecting the laws of the organization.

Q. Mr. Lewis, on page 61 of "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 4," which purports to be the "Proceedings of the Eighteenth Annual Convention of the United Mine Workers held in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana, January 15-22, inclusive, 1907," I find a statement made by you in which you say: "To clear the minds of all the mine workers of the country and to strangle many falsehoods that are being circulated in regard to my position on the policy of the United Mine Workers of America, I desire to make clear at this time that I favor, first, one organization of the mine workers of the American continent; second, I favor the establishment of a national eight-hour day for every person employed in and around the mines; third, I favor a complete recognition of our right to organize in every mining district in the country; fourth, I recognize that there are certain local markets that naturally belong to certain coal producing districts; fifth, I favor giving every operator an equal opportunity to secure his share of the general mar-698 kets." Do those statements made by you to that convention embody your present purposes and policy? Yes, sir; and in connection with the statement appears the following: "I am opposed to placing an embargo on the development of the resources of any coal producing state, in the interests of other states, and this cannot be done if every operator is given an equal opportunity of entering the general market." And I believe in that yet.

Q. Now, in extending the power of your organization you have organizers who are sent out into the various districts where you are not in control?

A. Yes, sir; we have organizers sometimes appointed for that work, and we have organizers in the best organized districts, in order to explain to the men their duty as members of the organization.

Q. Relatively speaking the number of men that you have employed in organizing is greater in districts where you are not represented than in districts where you are represented, is it not?

A. Oh, no; no, sir.

Q. Of the amount of money that you have spent in strikes, what percentage of that has arisen from attempts to organize?

A. I am not in a position to give you a definite answer, but I might say this; that there has been more money spent in strikes to prevent mine owners from wiping the organization out of existence than there has been in extending the organization—three times over.

Q. When a mine owner fails to do what the union wants him to do, and undertakes to run a scab mine, he is assumed to be trying to exterminate the union, is he?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. Leaving off the qualifying words, can't you come closer to answering my question?

A. I think not.

Q. That is as near as you care to answer it?

A. Yes, sir; for the reason, to be perfectly plain, that it is not true, but I do not want to make it that plain.

Q. Then you have a very pronounced opinion on it?

A. Certainly.

Q. That is what I wanted to get. Now, what was the Alabama strike about, Mr. Lewis?

A. The Alabama strike was against a reduction in wages, first, but it developed into a contest whether or not the organization would be exterminated from the state. Every strike, or nearly every strike of any proportions that is mentioned, for which relief was made as shown by that statement read the other day, has been a contest involving wages first, and as the primary cause, and not the recognition of the union.

6995 Q. But the strike nearly always results in a contest on your part as an official of the union, based upon the idea that the operator is trying to exterminate the union?

A. Not at all.

Q. Is it not?

A. No, sir.

Q. The Irwin field was organized, it being non-union, wasn't it?

A. It was non-union but it was not organized.

Q. I mean the men were organized?

A. No, sir.

Q. By your organizers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are the men in the Irwin field not now organized?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you not had national organizers in that field?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you call the Irwin field the same as the Greensburg?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there a strike on there now?

A. Some people say there is and some people say there isn't; it depends on who you see. If you see certain people in the Pittsburg district they would say there was; if you see operators of the Greensburg field, they would say there isn't any strike there.

Q. Mr. Lewis, you are broad gauge in thought. Don't you really think that you are evading that series of inquiries?

A. Not at all, and I will tell you frankly why I am not going into details; I do not care to express opinions here on some things that will possibly be used against the men who are involved in that struggle.

Q. Then you are conscious that you have been evading?

A. No; only to that extent. I will say this, your Honor: Every question that has been put to me I have answered frankly, honestly and truthfully, but I am not supposed to make explanations unless I desire to, or the court requires me to.

Q. What was the anthracite strike for, Mr. Lewis?

A. Wages.

Q. Did it involve a recognition of the union?

A. No, sir; I desire to say in that connection, for your information, that if the miners themselves who are members of the United Mine Workers, and the representatives of the United Mine Workers' organization in the anthracite field, had directly with the operators negotiated the terms of a settlement, that would have carried with it a recognition of the organization. The question of the recognition of the organization seems to mislead many people in the country who do not understand what that term means. A great many people get the impression that we go out, for instance, into a non-union mining district—and our interpretation of a non-union mining district is a district where there are no members of the United Mine Workers or any labor union—that we go out into such a district and organize the men. We never ask a mine owner to recognize as a union the men in the mine; we never go to a mine foreman or superintendent, through the representatives of the miners and ask them and the operator to recognize us an organized body of men. As I stated here the other day, the only time the recognizing of the union would probably come up, is when the mine committee or some one representing the men in the mine and employed in that mine should go to the mine boss or mine superintendent to investigate the possible cause of the discharge of an employee. The mine boss would say, "Why are you investigating the case? Why don't he come himself?" "Well, he has been to see you and can get no satisfaction." What authority have you to come and see me?" the mine boss will say. "We are a committee and he is a member of our union and we feel that we have a common interest in each other. If this man has been unjustly discharged we want to know it and we will have nothing more to say about it. If he has been unjustly discharged then we would like to know that and we would like to talk with you and see if we cannot get him reinstated." The mine boss instantly states to these men—if he is not inclined to permit the organization to be there—"You people go and take your tools out; we do not allow any organization around here;" and if any others come along he does the same thing. If there is enough men in that mine organized and they feel that they can suspend work and get all of the other men who are not members of the union to join with them and endeavor to get this first man's trouble adjusted, they then suspend work. In other words they strike. But the other phase of it is this: If a mine foreman states to these men who are acting as a committee, "Well, what is the trouble?" they proceed to recite what this man who has been discharged has told them. The mine foreman will say, "Well, that it not correct; bring that man here;" and they bring the discharged man there and they talk the matter over. There is nothing said about an organization but they talk the matter over and they find that the cause of the discharge of this man has been a misrepresentation to the mine foreman. Some one must have told him about what this man did or he saw it himself. They go over the entire matter and they find that the man was justly discharged—that he had committed some offense that justified the mine foreman in discharging him instantly. That ends it. But if they find out that he has been unjustly discharged, the mine foreman may become convinced of that fact and say, "Well the thing has not been 701 represented to me correctly; go back to your work." Now, in that instance, there is nothing said about the union, and yet the union is recognized by that transaction.

Q. And if the man should not be convinced then there would be a strike?

A. If the man was not convinced, as I stated a moment ago, and these men who represented the organized body there felt that they could induce all the other men and convince them that the proper thing to do was to suspend work, there would be a strike, but the question of the recognition of the union has not been a factor in that at all. It is the question of dealing with the proposition of a discharged employe.

Q. But it arises out of the acts of your organization in organizing the men, in the first instance?

A. It develops from that, although this man may not have been a member of that organization.

Q. Now, when that mine is shut down, if the operator employs other men, those men become scabs, do they?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. Well, can't you answer without qualification?

A. They are non-union men taking the place, probably, of other non-union men.

Q. So far as taking the place of a union man is concerned, they would be scabs, would they?

A. Well, I do not know whether they would or not; I can only speak for myself; I never called these men scabs for the reason that some of them are deceived into taking these positions; and yet there are others who are professional strike breakers. If I knew that one was a professional strike breaker I would say that he was a scab.

Q. But if a man was not a professional strike breaker and if he did not know at the time he entered the employment that he was taking the place of a union man, but if he was afterwards advised that he had the place of a union man but still persisted in working, would you call him a scab?

A. No, sir.

Q. What would you call him?

A. I would call him a mine worker; I would call him a non-union man if he was one.

Q. Would you call him fair or unfair?

A. No, I would not, because I am not in the habit of using those terms.

Q. Laying aside your own personal feelings, in union parlance would that man be called a scab?

A. I am not able to say; I haven't any right to speak for the few men in the labor movement who might use that term, when I know that the great majority of them don't use it.

702 Q. Some of them would call him a scab?

A. I do not know positively. I try to be as frank as I can in these answers and I want to add to that that I am not going to answer a question that would imply and include all the members of the labor union when I know that that question answered in that manner would be incorrect, because the great mass of the members of the labor unions in this country are not in the habit of using those terms. It is the erratic and sometimes the irresponsible in our union —whom it is even very difficult for us to control—who make use of those terms.

Q. So your men are difficult to control?

A. A few only, and a very small minority compared with the mass of the membership, just the same as if we were referring to our government affairs in our country. Law does not prevent crime; it is the act that will punish criminals.

Q. In the report of the Anthracite Strike Commission, on page 61, I find this language: "From the correspondence which passed between the coal operators and the officers of the United Mine Workers prior to the strike and which has been cited under the heading, 'History and Causes of the Strike,' from voluminous testimony presented during the hearings before the commission and from the arguments of counsel and others with which the public hearings closed, the commission is led to the conviction that the question of the recognition of the union and of dealing with the mine workers through their union was considered by both operators and miners to be one of the most important involved in the controversy which culminated in the strike." That conclusion of the commission is at variance with your understanding, as you answered me a little while ago, is it not?

A. No; because you were not dealing with the anthracite situation when you asked me the question.

Q. Is that the only explanation you have to give?

A. The only other explanation I can give is that in the anthracite field the question of wages was the direct cause of the strike, along with the persecution, on the part of the mine owners, of their employes who joined the United Mine Workers and became active members to organize the anthracite men. Those are the facts. And that is why, in my opinion, this clause in the commission's report reads as it does. They have not brought out the feature and the particular conditions in the anthracite region—I mean they have not brought out the facts that those men were discharged, victimized, and driven from place to place and out of the anthracite region because of their membership in the organization. A condition

703 such as that would not deal with all those minute details of the question; they have drawn their conclusions from that fact; and yet it is not the declaration of the miners that we must be recognized that led up to the general contest that took place, but in the submitting of the testimony before that commission all of those details were brought out and the wage feature was made subordinate to the other for the reason that the mine owners of the anthracite region would have granted 25% advance without recognition of the union sooner than give no advance and a recognition to the union. That is true not only of the mine owners in the anthracite but that is true of mine owners in every mining district in the country.

Q. Now, Mr. Lewis, taking your statement on that subject as to what the operator would do with regard to wages rather than recognize the union, does it occur to you that it is strange why—with the objects that you have—a sensible man should prefer to give such an enormous increase in wages, as you have suggested, rather than do the simple act of recognizing a union run in the best method and with non-interference with the employers' business?

A. That is not strange at all to me, and it is not strange to me for this reason: That the anthracite operators who absolutely control the production of every pound of coal that is mined over there, and fix the price at tidewater on every pound of anthracite coal that is mined, realize that as long as their employes can be kept separated that they, representing the large interests that they do, can deal individually with their employes and that they can require them to work for wages that should not be permitted to be paid in a civilized country. You may be surprised when I tell you that there are men in the anthracite today who are working for as low as $1.37 and $1.40 a day for nine hours. You know that no man can keep a family on that wage in a thickly populated community where there isn't a possible chance of even raising a peck of potatoes in a year. And that is the reason why they are unwilling for their employes to be organized and to treat with them as an organized body of men. When you ask them to come into an open conference and discuss their ability to pay our men better wages and still earn a reasonable profit on their investments, they decline to do it. There isn't anybody in reality knows what the anthracite companies are earning on their actual investments in those properties, because the railroad earnings and the coal property earnings are so mixed up. That is the real situation. And even now here is a peculiar situation: While the anthracite representatives of the operators refuse to technically recognize the United Mine 704 Workers' organization, and refuse to deal with the officers of our union as officers of the United Mine Workers, yet they take the commission's award as the basis for their contention that the three presidents of the three districts of the anthracite miners' organizations, must continue to serve as a conciliation board to settle disputes that come up. There is the situation. In my experience over there I met all of those gentlemen and found them to be very clever and very intelligent men, and yet they looked upon the executive officers of the United Mine Workers as the authority to bring about a conference between them and the representatives of the anthracite men, notwithstanding they said they would not deal with bituminous men—to bring these persons together for the purpose of agreeing upon the terms of wages that should continue in the anthracite field for a fixed period. The United Mine Workers' organization is now required to discipline the men in the anthracite and yet they will not recognize us as an organized body of men. For instance, the Pennsylvania company's collieries suspended work. I think it was a year ago this spring. Those men to the number of several thousand said they were not members of the United Mine Workers, which was true. They said they were going to demand their rights. And what was the outcome? That company appealed to the officials of the United Mine Workers and they appealed to me to send Italian, Hungarian and Polish speaking international organizers into that community to get those men to return to work, and it was done; and yet they will not recognize us technically as an organized body. Sooner or later they will recognize the miners of that country, because if not, all of the men will drop out of the United Mine Workers. They will naturally say, "Why, what is the use being in an organization if the mine owners are going to continue to refuse to recognize us. We will organize another union and we will fight this thing over again." Now, that is what is coming just as sure as night follows the day, and then the United Mine Workers will be charged, probably, with involving all those men in a strike with all the attendant hardships that necessarily follow in connection with strikes of that kind.

Q. So to avoid that result all men should go into the organization?

A. I think so; I think it is a good business proposition.

Q. On page 36 of the report of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission I find with reference to engineers, firemen and pumpmen this statement: "These demands not having been granted June 2nd, the majority of the engineers, firemen and pumpmen stop-705 ped work." I think you said in answer to a question of mine yesterday that in the anthracite there might have been some few instances of the mines being left without pumpers or provision to take care of the water.

A. I think not; no. Did we discuss anthracite yesterday at all?

Mr. Gilchrist: I think so.

Witness: Before I will admit it I will have to have that answer read.

Mr. Hogg: I do not remember it either.

Witness: Pardon me; we discussed firemen, pumpers and engineers as a general proposition, in the bituminous fields.

The Court: I think Mr. Lewis is right about that. I think it was the condition of the firemen and engineers generally in the field, but I do not think it was mentioned specifically as to the anthracite region. At least that is my recollection of it.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. I am under the impression that I asked you whether that subject had not been considered by the anthracite commission and whether the commission had not condemned the shutting down of mines so as to not allow the water to be taken care of, and you said you believed that the commission had condemned that. If you do not recall that the record will show.

A. I will not say positively that I did, and I have no recollection of it. I would like to have that answer read if I said it.

The Court:

Q. How is the fact? Just answer it now, with regard to the anthracite situation?

A. As I remember, your Honor, when those firemen and pumpers stopped in the anthracite, that feature of the strike was critised by the commission but the fact was not brought out that the United Mine Workers had ordered these men to stop. Of course I was not on the ground during that strike and I am not able to answer as to the details except as they were brought to my attention.

Q. You were not president then?

A. No, sir; not at all; I was not in the anthracite field during the entire controversy. In the minutes of the executive council meeting of the American Federation of Labor as printed in the "American Federationist" of March 11, 1911, I find this matter printed. The following telegram was received:

7065

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 20, 1911.

Mr. Samuel Gompers:

The following resolution was adopted by the twenty-second convention of the United Mine Workers of America:

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 19, 1911.

Whereas, the U. M. W. of A. in convention assembled one year ago recommended to W. F. M. certain steps to bring about closer relation between the men employed in the Coal and Metaliferous Mining Industry, to-wit, procuring a charter from the A. F. of L. that should concede to the metal miners the same complete jurisdiction of that industry which has been and is now enjoyed by the U. M. W. of A., and whereas the W. F. M. has complied with these suggestions following the course of the application for a charter from the E. C. of the A. F. of L. to the convention of that body and back again to the council. Thwarted at every turn by the jurisdiction claims of craft organizations; and, whereas, we believe that the best interests of not only of the men engaged in the mining industry, but of labor in general would be advanced by the addition of the W. F. of M. to the American labor movements as presented by the A. F. of L.; and whereas every objection raised against the issuance of a charter on jurisdictional lines applies with equal force to the U. M. W. of A. and is a covert menace to that complete control of the industry which we believe essential to our organization and the protection of the workers in general; therefore, be it Resolved, By the U. M. W. of A., in convention assembled, that we protest against any further delay in the issuance of said charter or imposing any restrictions upon the jurisdiction now enjoyed by the W. F. of M. as being inimical to our interests as well as theirs.

We further pledge to the W. F. of M. our hearty support and announce to all labor organizations that we are determined to form a closer compact with the Western Federation of Miners.

We trust that it may be within the A. F. of L., but if the Western Federation of Miners is denied a charter or granted one with unsatisfactory restrictions, be it further 707 Resolved, That the U. M. W. of A., in convention assembled, join with the Western Federation of Miners in a movement that will insure that unity and co-operation in action, which has been sought in the A. F. of L.

Secretary-Treasurer."

It was moved and adopted that President Gompers be authorized to communicate with Secretary-Treasurer Perry, of the United Mine Workers of America, acknowledging receipt of their telegram communicating the decision of the E. C. on the application of the Western Federation of Miners, and extending greetings to the delegates in the miners' convention."

"The following telegram was ordered sent to the convention of the United Mine Workers of America:

"January 20, 1911.

Mr. Edwin Perry, Secretary, United Mine Workers of America, care of Miners' Convention, Columbus, Ohio:

Your telegram delivered this afternoon. We take pleasure in advising convention of mine workers that at this morning's session of the E. C. it was decided 'that a charter be issued to the Western Federation of Miners on the basis of the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America,' the only reservation being in respect to a few local unions of machinists in mining camps which have been in existence for many years, and which have worked in harmony with the locals of the Western Federation of Miners. The reservation in respect to these few machinists' locals can in no way affect the control of the mining industry by the Western Federation of 708 Miners, as President O'Connell of the machinists has assured President Moyer of the miners that a working agreement may be entered into whereby machinists will co-operate in every way in protecting the interests of the Western Federation of Miners.

The E. C. extends to the convention of the United Mine Workers of America its best wishes for a harmonious and successful convention.

SAMUEL GOMPERS."

Q. (continued). Do you know, Mr. Lewis, whether that telegram was sent by your convention to Mr. Gompers, as stated there, and whether your convention received a telegram from Mr. Gompers as stated there?

A. I think that telegram or one similar to it was sent. I would not be positive whether it was in those exact words. I believe also, that that reply was received from Mr. Gompers—either that reply or one similar to it. I would not be positive that it is the exact language, but I think it is the same language.

Q. Did you upon the adjournment of the special international convention at Cincinnati send to the president of the various districts where the wage contracts expired on April 1st, 1910, a letter in which this language appears: "In accordance with the policy of the United Mine workers, any of the operators that desire to have pumpers and such other men employed as may be necessary to take care and protect the property, such men should be permitted to work providing they receive the advance in wages provided for in the enclosed proposition?"

A. On the first page of this paper—the "United Mine Workers Journal" of January 19th, 1911, which is marked "Lewis Exhibit No. 1"—in the third double column, in the paragraph before which the figure "1" is, the following is the beginning of the reading of the document: "After several weeks' deliberation the interstate joint convention in Cincinnati adjourned without reaching an agreement. The special international convention at Cincinnati adopted as the basis upon which wage contracts could be negotiated the following proposition.

"1. That the following is the terms on which agreements can be negotiated:" And if this in its entirety can go in with my reply, it will save the trouble of reading it all, here. I want it all in or I will read it all before I make my explanation.

The Court: I will have to read it sometime. Will it take you very long to read it?

709 Mr. Lewis: Not a great deal of time, and yet there is a lot of matter here. I do not have any desire to impose upon the time of the court in reading it. That is the reason I wanted it considered in.

Mr. Hogg: If it won't take long you had better read it: The witness here resumed reading as follows:

"After several weeks' deliberation the interstate joint convention in Cincinnati adjourned without reaching an agreement. The special international convention at Cincinnati adopted as the basis upon which wage contracts could be negotiated the following proposition:

1. That the following is the terms on which agreements can be negotiated:

"That the agreement of the present year be continued for the scale year beginning April, 1910, and ending March 31, 1912, with the exceptions of the mining prices and day wages.

That the price for mining be increased five (5) cents per ton on inch-a-quarter screen lump coal, pick mining in western Pennsylvania thin vein, the Hocking the basing district of Ohio, and both block and bituminous districts of Indiana; three cents per ton on mine-run coal pick mining in the bituminous district of Indiana.

That the price for the machine mines be increased four (4) cents per ton on screen lump coal in Western Pennsylvania, thin vein, in the Hocking, the basing district of Ohio; four (4) cents per ton on screen lump coal in the block and bituminous district of Indiana, and three (3) cents per ton on mine-run coal in the bituminous district of Indiana.

That internal differences both as to prices and conditions be referred for adjustment to the various districts affected, it being understood that in the adjustment of such differences there shall be no modification of the advance of wages provided for in the proposition.

The inside day wage scale shall be advanced 5.55 per cent, with the conditions of the Columbus day wage scale agreement of 1898.

That all narrow, dead work and room turning and outside day labor shall be paid a proportionate advance with the pick mining rate.

2. That contracts may be negotiated and agreed upon by states, districts or groups of districts.

710 3. That where all the operators within one district fail to sign the terms of the proposed contract that the operators of any sub-district may agree upon the general terms of the contract.

4. That where the operators of an entire State, district of sub-district agree to pay the general advance demanded their mines may continue in operation pending the final negotiations and agreement upon the details of the wage contract in the State, district or sub-district affected.

5. That details not herein specified are referred to the International Executive Board with full power to act, except the Board is not empowered to modify in any respect the terms of the demand for an advance in wages as it applies to mining, day labor—inside and out—narrow and dead work.

6. All coal Companies shall be required to sign the contract for all the mines that operate in one or more districts, unless permission is given district officials to do otherwise by the International Executive Board.

7. That any district where new explosives are used the mines affected shall operate on a run-of-mine basis and the company shall furnish the miners with new explosives at the same relative cost as black powder.

Immediately upon the adjournment of the Special International Convention at Cincinnati, Ohio, the following letter was sent to the presidents of the various districts where wage contracts expired on April 1, 1910:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 30, 1910.

Dear Sir and Brother:

You will find enclosed a copy of the proposition adopted at the special convention at Cincinnati yesterday evening.

You can see by this proposition that the first thing necessary to be done is to get the operators of your district together and have them agree to sign the general terms of the contract providing they want the mines to continue in operation after April 1.

According to the rules laid down by the special convention at Cincinnati, no contracts can be signed up by individual operators. This rule should be adhered to as well as the other rules embodied in the proposition adopted by the special convention.

711

In accordance with the policy of the United Mine Workers, any of the operators that desire to have pumpers and such other men employed as may be necessary to take care and protect the property, such men should be permitted to work providing they receive the advance in wages provided for in the enclosed proposition.

With the hope that you will be able to arrange a conference of the operators of the district immediately, I remain.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) T. L. LEWIS,
President U. M. W. of A.

Q. Mr. Lewis, that clause in your letter of March 31, 1910, embraced in my question, was in the letter as I have read it, from this newspaper?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, by that you conveyed a covert threat, did you not, that unless the operator yielded and paid the advance, his mine might be shut down and might be flooded?

A. No, sir; and the reason for that is that the operators had agreed in Cincinnati to pay the advance in wages but they could not agree upon the conditions upon which the advance should be paid; and the further reason that the operators understood under our joint convention method of doing business, that even though we had disagreed and failed to reach a contract there was an advance proposed and they had offered to pay that without incidentally paying the advance to these people, and it was in order to inform our members as to that condition. That is why that was put in the letter. I might add to that also, that the delegates were going from Cincinnati to all local unions where this was being sent out.

Q. What is District No. 1?

A. District No. 1 is the anthracite—what is known as the Upper Anthracite.

Q. It has a membership, as shown by the report of W. D. Ryan to the twentieth annual convention of the United Mine Workers, of 15,968.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. District No. 2 is what?

A. Central Pennsylvania.

Q. It is shown to have a membership of 35,799.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. District No. 5 is what?

A. I do not know as I should answer those questions.

712 Q. Don't you know what District No. 5 is?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hogg: Well we will get along more rapidly, possibly, if you will answer.

A. Well, if it will help the thing along will tell you what all of them are if you will give me the book.

Mr. Gilchrist: If you will just read the number of the districts, and the membership, and the State, where indicated, if I have it wrong I can correct it.

Witness: Certainly; to save time—I will do anything to do that.

A. This book that Mr. Gilchrist has handed me is the report of the secretary, W. D. Ryan.

District No. 1 is anthracite and it has 15,968 members according to this statement.

Q. That is Pennsylvania, you say?

A. Anthracite, I said. District No. 2 is in central Pennsylvania and has 35,799 members.

District No. 5 is western Pennsylvania and it has 27,700.

District No. 6 is Ohio and part of West Virginia and one section in western Pennsylvania, over on the Fort Wayne Road; it has 38,064 members.

District No. 7 is the middle anthracite district known as Lehigh and Panther Creek around Hazleton. It has 4,517 members.

District No. 8 is the block coal district of Indiana; 1,974 members.

District No. 9 is also anthracite, around Lykens Valley, Mt. Carmel and Shenandoah; 10,366 members.

District No. 10 is the State of Washington with 3,239 members.

District No. 11 is the bituminous district of Indiana; 16,191.

District No. 12 is Illinois; 68,262.

District No. 13 is Iowa; 11,308.

District No. 14 is Kansas and a small section of Missouri close to the Kansas line; 10,166.

District No. 15 is Colorado; 1,839.

District No. 16 is Maryland and the Myersdale section of Pennsylvania; 66.

District No. 17 is West Virginia and a small strip of land down on the West Virginia border—down next to the Big Sandy; 2,081.

District No. 18 is western Canada; 2,471.

District No. 19 is Tennessee and a part of Kentucky on the Tennessee border; 1,483.

713 District No. 20 is Alabama; 762.

District No. 21 is Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas, 16,005.

District No. 22, under this book was Wyoming and Montana; that has got here 9,300.

District No. 23 is Kentucky; 5,690.

District No. 24 is Michigan; 3,474.

District No. 25 is Missouri and I think one mine in Iowa, or else there is one mine of Missouri in Iowa; I am not sure which it is; it is on the border; 7,975.

The total is 294,746.

Q. Mr. Lewis, in a copy of the United Mine Workers' Journal for Thursday, January 26, 1911, I find a tabulation showing the income of your organization for the year 1910. Please look at it and say whether it is correct or not.

A. So far as I know the income given here by months for December, 1909, and the first eleven months of 1910, under the captions "Tax," "Supplies," "Journal," "Assessments," and "Miscellaneous," giving a grand total of $1,669,634.72 is correct, so far as I know, subject to any typographical errors.

Mr. Gilchrist: I offer this statement in evidence—I mean this statement as to income—to be marked "Lewis's Exhibit No. 3."

Q. Mr. Lewis, in a copy of the United Mine Workers' Journal of Thursday, January 26, 1911, I find a short report headed "Annual Report of International Auditors," in which the income and expenditures and a recapitulation for the year 1910 are given, covering the money received and the money paid out by the association. I wish you would look at that and state whether that is correct.

A. So far as I know it is correct.

Mr. Gilchrist: I offer that in evidence to be marked "Lewis's Exhibit No. 4."

Q. In the "United Mine Workers' Journal" of Thursday, January 12, 1911, I find this notice:

Stay Away.

Pontiac, Ill., January 2, 1911.

Stay away from Pontiac, Ill., as we have been on strike here for nearly three years and miners come here from time to time 714 saying that they did not know we were on strike, as soon as this trouble is settled I will inform you at once. For information you may consult our district officers at Springfield, Illinois.

Yours for the cause of the union,

ALFRED TOON, President,
F. BIGG.

Q. (Continued). And on the same Page I find an article headed—

A Scab Mine in Missouri.

To All Union Miners: Stay away from Mapleton, Mo. The union is not recognized and the operators are running a scab mine. All locals look out for those men listed below, as they have been scab-ing at the Mapleton mine:

George Veach, Rodney Veach, Posey Veach, Maryland West, Eric Hillman, Aaron Sparks, Ray Hurley, Allie Healy, John Hanley, Hurley Hagus, Emery Morrow, Roy Cain, Simon Oliver, James Branscomb, Ernest Robbins, Elmer Veach, Manuel Richman, P. J. Richman, J. R. Richman, Jessie Richman, J. P. Hays, Andy Hays, Billy Millford, Frefrom Veach, Billy Wilson.

By order of members of Local Union No. 594, Mapleton, Mo.

W. J. MFARLAND, President.
ALBERT JOHNSON, R. S.
HARVEY MORGAN, F. S.

Q. (Continued): And on the same page I find another notice headed:

Stay Away.

All miners, mine laborers and other laborers are hereby notified that 17,500 men have been on a strike in the Latrobe Greensburg and Irwin coal fields of Westmoreland County since last March.

The coal barons have agents in New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland and Chicago, as well as Altoona, Johnstown, Connellsville and Uniontown.

715 These agents are informing the men that the strike is over, while to the contrary the strike is on in full force.

Anyone desiring information can secure the same by addressing

JOHN MCARTNEY,
U. M. W. Headquarters.
THOMAS HAGGERTY,
Member Int. Ex. Board.
VAN BITTNER,
Vice-Pres. Dist. 5, U. M. W. A.

Q. (Continued:) And on Page 4 of the same paper there is another notice as follows:

Suspended.

Claridge, Pa., Jan. 3, 1911.

Editor Mine Workers' Journal: Will you please publish in our journal the names of Antonio Chiazza, Antonio Barboro, Stefano Busini, Vinzenzo Stella, Borgo Poteco, Antonio Lovato and Lorenzo Prato, all Italians, who have been suspended from membership in our organization for a period of two years, according to our constitution, for going back to work for companies having coal mines in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, where we are on strike since April 1, 1910.

Also publish the names of Louis Jenich and Anton Mahkowitz, who have been suspended from our membership in our organization for a period of two years, according to our constitution, for going back to work for the Manor Gas Coal Company at Claridge, Pa., Westmoreland county, where we are on strike since April 1, 1910.

Mine Workers of the United States and Canada will please remember them if they apply for work in or about the mines.

ANDY SHUSTER, President.
JOHN GRUBER, Rec. Sec.
JOHN BATITCH, Fin. Sec.

Q. (Continued:) I hand you this paper with these advertisements in them and ask you whether those notices comport with the 716 general design and purposes of your organization?

A. No; I think not. I might say in connection with this matter we have articles of this kind sent in and I presume the manager or the editor of the Journal believes that he is required to publish such matter on account of the paper being sent to the local. We have investigated some matters of this kind and have found out they were not telling the truth—some of these men. I won't say that is the case here, because I do not know anything about it. It is fair also to say that if a member violates the laws of the organization he is suspended from the organization; otherwise we would have no discipline at all within the ranks and could not control anything.

Mr. Hogg:

Q. I wish you would state whether these strikes are being carried on where they purport to be?

A. I do not know whether that strike is on in Missouri or not, and so far as that Illinois reference there is concerned, I do not know anything about that; in fact, I do not know anything about either one of those. In regard to the Irwin district, we had that matter up a while ago. I have my opinion as to whether there is a strike there or not, but I said I declined to discuss it because of the situation, unless it was desired that I should explain it here to the court and that would end it.

Mr. Gilchrist: I will say to you that I do not press it, because I do not wish to embarrass you, Mr. Lewis.

Witness: Well, I appreciate that. If I were to continue as president of this organization after the first of April, with reference to that particular phase of the situation in Pennsylvania I would talk a great deal more freely and speak frankly my opinion in regard to the whole situation; but I do not want to be placed in the position—if I can avoid it and still be within the requirements of the proceedings here—of saying something that my successor in office would comment on by saying that I had gone to Philippi and gone before the court and said things or done things to embarrass his administration.

The Court: I understand Mr. Gilchrist does not ask that.

717 Q. On page 13 of the issue of the "United Mine Workers' Journal" for Thursday, January 19th, 1911, I find an advertisement reading this way:

Mines Crowded, Turn Slow.

Sanford, Ind., Jan. 9, 1911.

Editor Mine Workers' Journal: By direction of Local Union 1054, located at Sanford, Ind., I am requested to notify miners (through the Journal) to stay away from the Sanford mine at present, as the mine is so full and the turn so slow that we consider it only justice to notify men to stay away.

Respectfully yours,

WM. OLIVER, Rec. Sec.

Q. (Continued:) Why would a notice of that kind be published?

A. Why, the reason for sending a notice of that kind is, because men may come to a community seeking employment, and if it is not given to them, then they are sent somewhere else, and this information is sent to the miners as a matter merely of information that that particular mine is crowded; just the same as the mine owners have notices published in the "Journal" that they can put men on if they can get them.

Q. And it is not then published for the purpose of curtailing the supply of labor at that particular mine?

A. No; I think that idea is brought out fully when they say that the mine is so crowded. I might say that the phraseology of the notice itself might convey a different meaning, but that is really the intention of the notice and it is very seldom that they put them in the Journal.

Q. Mr. Lewis, do you know whether in the separation of the Illinois operators from the balance of the operators in the central competitive states' convention there was anything said about the Illinois operators not being fairly treated by the joint convention and Illinois being subject to discrimination?

A. I do not know whether that was one of the reasons why they separated, but it is true that in our joint conventions of operators of each State, these operators complain that they are unfairly dealt with as compared with the operators of another State; and then we tell them, "Frankly tell us your troubles; open them up; 718 present them and let us get at them"; and then they refuse to do that.

Q. Do you know wether objection was urged in the dealings between your organization and the operators representing the joint convention of the Illinois Coal Operators' Association, at Springfield, Illinois, May 17 to June 1, 1905, that no distinction was made between the operators who were members of the operators' association in that State and operators who were within that State but were not members of the operators' association, in making contracts?

A. There never was any distinction made between one operator and another because an operator was not a member of the joint conference, to my knowledge, at least. I do not have any recollection of anything of that kind occurring. That is, if I catch the question, the idea is that the operators who took part in the deliberations of the joint convention and the operators who did not take part—that there was no distinction on our part between those operators.

Q. I understood you to say there was not on your part?

A. Not so far as I know.

Q. But was objection made?

Witness: By whom?

Mr. Gilchrist: By the Illinois operators?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. That you did deal with other persons who are not members of the operators' association on the same terms that you dealt with those who were members of the operators' association dealing with you?

A. I have no recollection of that matter coming up in our interstate convention.

Q. It might have been and you would not remember it?

A. It might have been, and yet I hardly think so, because that is such a striking and peculiar incident that I believe that I would know something about it.

Q. I have here a copy of the "Proceedings of the Joint Convention of the Illinois Coal Operators' Association, United Mine Workers of America, District 12, held at Springfield, Illinois, May 17 to June 1, 1906." If that appears to have been the case by the proceedings of that convention, you have forgotten it?

A. No; I have not forgotten that—that is an entirely different proposition. We have been discussing interstate joint conventions and you now take up a district convention.

719 Q. This is a joint convention?

A. Yes, sir; and it is a district joint convention as applied to Illinois—an entirely different proposition from the one you are asking questions about.

Q. Now, answer my question, but apply it to this joint convention.

A. I shall ask that that question be rewritten in there. I shall decline to answer that question as originally put unless I am ordered to by the court. I decline to answer it until I get the question direct.

The Court: Well, put the question in proper shape.

Witness: I shall decline to answer that question unless the gentleman repeats it now, unless ordered by the court. There is a whole lot of language between your question and the matters we have been discussing.

The Court: Now, Mr. Harris, read the question.

(The question appearing on page 291, as originally propounded by Mr. Gilchrist was as follows: "Do you know whether objection was urged in the dealings between your organization and the operators represented in the joint convention of the central competitive States that no distinction was made between operators who were members of the operators' association in those States and operators who were within that section of country, but were not members of the operators' association in making contracts?" Pending a discussion of this question the stenographer was ordered to correct it and it appears in its corrected form on page 291 as if it had been originally asked in that form.)

Witness: Now, your honor, if it is permissible I would like to add one word or two to make the question complete. It says "joint convention of operators"; it could not be a joint convention without you had miners and operators.

A. I have no knowledge of any such thing occurring in Illinois, because I was not there at that particular time.

Q. In this same book, which is marked, "McKinley's Exhibit No. 2," purporting to be the "Proceedings of the Joint Convention of the Illinois Coal Operators' Association and the United Mine Workers, District 12, held at Springfield, Illinois, May 17 to June 1, 1906," I find on page 13 what purports to be the report of a speech of Mr. John Mitchell, in which he says: "Some of you gentlemen here, and Mr. Bush in particular, will remember that in 720 the southwest we did compel operators to join your association and you in turn compelled miners to come into our organization." What, if anything, do you know about that?

A. I do not know a thing about it.

Q. If Mr. Mitchell stated that in that way would you say his statement was true or not true?

A. I could not say either, because I do not know.

Q. I did not ask you if you knew; I asked you what you would say?

A. Well, I desire to say that I decline to answer the question as stated, because I would have no knowledge of what Mr. Mitchell said in Springfield, and I am not going to put myself in a position to answer questions in relation to matters concerning which I have no knowledge whatever. If I am directed to do so by the court I will answer them as best I can, but it won't be a clear-cut answer by any means. I would like to say right at this time, in order that my position may be plainly understood, that neither as an officer nor as an individual am I responsible for the statements of other men.

Q. Mr. Lewis, in "McKinley's Exhibit No. 1," which purports to be the record of the "Proceedings of the Joint Conferences of Coal Miners and Operators of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, Indianapolis, Indiana, January 25 to February 2, and March 20-29, 1906," I find on page 10 a statement by Mr. H. L. Chapman, to whom you referred yesterday as having been in attendance at the "Joint Convention of the Coal Operators and Coal Miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, Cincinnati, Ohio, March 8-29, 1910," which statement reads this way: "It has now been twenty years since I started out with John McBryde and Chris Evans, both of whom are here, I believe, although many of the others have passed over the river, to attempt to organize, carry and perpetuate the interstate agreement for the benefit of the operators and miners of the four competitive States"; and on page 11 in the same book I find this language by the same gentleman: "We are a close corporation, so far as these four States are concerned, between the miners and operators." Do you know whether that statement comports with the action of the union to which you belong?

A. I believe that this is the statement—in fact I feel satisfied it is the statement of Mr. Chapman as read by Mr. Gilchrist; but in addition to that, in reading parts of statements from records, always the things that lead up to the statements and what might be said after and before should be considered in order to have a clear 721 understanding of why sentences are picked out or why they have been made use of. In 1906 the interstate movement was threatened with dissolution. In 1906 the miners desired to extend the territory included in the central competitive coal field and to include other States than western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. Mr. Chapman, in making the statement just read to the court, added to that the following:

"We have met here this year, after two years' recess, for the purpose of again seeing if we can, in this competitive field, establish and retain the present relations that have existed between us for so many years. Each of you operators and each of you miners who have participated in these conventions know full well the difficulties

t have attended this movement. On several occasions it has l-nigh gone. It has required the patience, the conservatism and arguments of the level-headed operators and miners to perpetuate It will require the same in the future to perpetuate it. As you know, it has been demonstrated in the past that whenever you another State to the movement it makes it that much more icult for the four States to get an agreement. While I have been nected with the movement for a great many years, I am today familiar with all the conditions even in my own State, nor am miliar with all the conditions in Pennsylvania, Illinois or Ina; much less do I know the conditions that exist in any of those ying districts. What does an Ohio operator or an Ohio miner, pt those who have been in those outlying districts, know con- ing the matters there? What business have we to attempt to a scale of wages for men a thousand miles away from us, and operators a thousand miles away from us? The conditions are rely different; the markets are entirely different. We in Ohio ot come into competition to any extent with any of the districts ed. If the miners would bring in our sister States of Virginia West Virginia, we would admit them. We have tried to bring e operators, but have failed. Let us look at the conditions there. 1903 the State of West Virginia produced 26,882,000 tons of ; in 1904, 30,222,000 tons, and the estimated production for 5 is 35,000,000 tons. In Ohio in 1903 we produced 24,573,000 ; in 1904 we produced 24,583,000 tons, an increase of 10,000 in one year. Although the statistics for 1905 are not out yet, not think Ohio will show an increase of anything in 1905. t does this argue? That this State of West Virginia is taking away steadily the trade of the miners and operators in Ohio. Our people undoubtedly would be in better condition today, so far as the operators are concerned, if they had a free rein nst West Virginia, with the cheap labor they have over there, we do not want it. We want the conditions of our people in State to be just as good as we can make them, and we are willing and by the movement, and trust in the future that something occur to bring those people in, or to prevent their taking away more of our trade.

ou miners want to consider this proposition carefully and usly; consider whether or not you are not, by increasing this tory, bringing about a condition of things that will eventually the movement that has done so much good for all in the con- ive field. These people in the southwest that you are seeking ke in have an organization with which you meet and fix a scale. have your organization there. We have no objection to it. We od-speed in your movement in the southwest, but do not make thing so big and difficult to handle that you destroy it. That at the operators fear, to say nothing about the business proposi- connected with it."

itness (continuing): And following that the argument was against the extension of the interstate joint movement to de the southwestern and all districts of the country. That was the position of the operators because of the unwieldly nature of it and because of the difference of opinion, and the operators in making that argument, as read from Mr. Chapman's statement, did as the operators always did in our joint convention—oppose the extension of the joint movement in any direction unless the operators of the central competitive field could induce the West Virginia operators to take part, and the miners of the central competitive field could induce the West Virginia miners to take part in the joint movement. The reason for that was that the coal going west from West Virginia entered into the same general market as the coal from Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, and they sought to benefit the industry, and not some individuals, by securing a better price for fuel from all those States, and that is why the operators wanted the West Virginia operators to be a part of the inter-state movement.

Q. Mr. Lewis, all of the non-union fields are not—so far as the mines and the men are concerned—in the deplorable condition that you have figured when you have talked about the non-union fields being a disgrace to civilization, are they?

723 A. I do not know whether I made that statement.

Q. Well, if you made anything substantially like it. I am not quibbling about the exact words?

A. Your honor, I am not going to be placed in the position of having a statement of that kind made and placed in the record and then make answer implying that I did say it.

Q. Do you believe in obeying the laws of the land?

A. I certainly do.

Q. Mr. Lewis, in this convention held in Cincinnati, March 8-29, 1910, about which we have talked more or less, the proceedings being reported in what is known as "Upstill's Exhibit No. 1," of which you have a copy, was not the contention broadly made—without going now into detail—on the part of the miners that wages ought to be increased and that the union ought to have the right without limit to make deductions from the men's wages, and wasn't the reply of the operators that there was a partnership between your union and the operators who went into that joint convention movement at Chicago in 1898 by which the markets were to be preserved by your organization to the operators who entered that joint movement with you?

A. I do not know what any individual operator may have said in Cincinnati and I won't attempt to try to remember what was said in Chicago. It has not been the purpose of the joint movement to control markets at any time or under any circumstances, so far as I know.

Q. Was it not also said during that Cincinnati convention, by you yourself, that in order to fulfill the pledge of the Chicago convention that the United Mine Workers were willing to go ahead and organize West Virginia, but you wanted the operators to assist?

—. I may have said that in Cincinnati. I believe, in fact, that I have said it in more than one convention, and in doing that I have always insisted upon the operators of those fields doing what they could to bring about conferences between the operators of West Virginia and themselves, and to make my personal acquaintance with the operators of West Virginia, in order that we could explain to them the object of the joint movement, as I believed that the West Virginia operators had a wrong idea of why we had the joint movement; and as a matter of fact I have met some of the largest operators in West Virginia, and the only obstacle in the way of them taking part in the joint movement was the doubt as to whether my ideas of the policies of our joint movement would be carried into effect.

724 Q. Mr. Lewis, when the operators at that convention manifested a disposition not to increase the wages of your men, did you suggest that the operators should combine and raise the price of coal and give you increased wages by reason of that?

A. I may have suggested that, and I believe that the operators of this country should receive for coal a higher price per ton than they are now getting. In order that you may understand another phase of this situation, I believe in endeavoring to establish a minimum selling price for coal at the mines of $1.25 per ton. I believe in that because mining is the most hazardous occupation in the country outside of the powder mill; I believe that coal is the most valuable commodity we have outside of grain; I believe that the natural resources of our country should be conserved wherever it can be done; I believe it is almost a criminal waste of fuel to permit of thirty to fifty-five per cent of the coal acreage to remain in the ground in developing it, beyond any hope of ever getting it out; I believe in a higher standard of civilization, and to secure it, so far as the miners are concerned, they must receive better wages; I believe that if the railroads and the manufacturers of this country were required to pay $1.25 per ton as a minimum for fuel coal that the mine owners could afford to sell coal a great deal cheaper than they are now selling it to the domestic consumers of our country. In other words, the masses of the people, who are less able to pay, are compelled to pay the highest price for coal. That is the reason why I believe in all of these things and every statement along that line that I make in these conventions is incidental to that one general idea.

Q. On page 187 of that particular book which you now have in your hand—"Upstill's Exhibit No. 1"—I find this language: "I think the time is coming in the development of the coal industry of this country when we will be able to agree upon a minimum basis for mining and make it a perpetual contract. That is the kind of plan I have in mind. I do not know how soon it will come. There is only one thing in the way, and that is the lack of such an organization among the operators and the miners as we ought to have to govern the industry. I think if our friends on the other side could have a national organization and we could have a complete national organization on our side the time will come when we will establish the relative mining prices in the different districts, and we can afford to fix a minimum basis as a wage scale and make it a perpetual contract. We could go from that up, but not below it. If anybody tried to get below it we would attempt to find out who was trying 25 to injure the trade." Did you say that?

A. Yes, sir; and I said that for the reason that I gave just a moment ago.

Q. Now, in discussing the question of raising the price of coal and suggesting that the operators combine and raise the price, you were answered, were you not, by one of the members of the convention that if the operators undertook to do that they would probably land in the penitentiary?

A. An operator may have said that.

Q. And did you not also say when you came to reply to that operator—when you came to speaking of that feature of it—didn't you say that it might be that the miners (that is, "we") might also go there?

A. No; I do not know whether I said that or not. I may have said that and—(interrupted)

Q. If it is there in the report you said it?

A. If it is there over my signature or in connection with my name I presume I said it; but there are lots of things given in a report that I didn't say. And I might say this, your honor, in that connection: In taking the reports by the stenographer everything that is said in a convention is taken, and the circumstances and conditions that exist when the statements are made should be taken into consideration. I might banteringly say to an operator, "We may all go there," and probably that convention would consider it more of a jest than anything else, and yet at the same time in reading it in cold type it conveys an entirely different meaning.

Q. On page 18, commencing in the last paragraph near the bottom of the page, you say: "Mr. Maurer has very well said—and I am glad he has brought the subject up—that we say to the operators, 'Get a better price for your coal in order that you can pay us a better price for our labor.' Then he supplements that statement, and very properly, by the statement that if they were to organize to get a better price for their coal they would be haled into court under the provisions of the Valentine law of Ohio and possibly sent to the penitentiary. Probably we would, too."

A. Yes, sir; I said that, and in addition to that I also said this: "He supplements that statement by asking us to tell them how to get a better price for their coal. I am going to tell you. First, stop making war on the railroads. The poor fellows need help. And this proposition is going to be no joke. I recognize what the mining industry is; I recognize that it is more important than transportation." (This is Lewis talking now.) "I recognize that the Valentine law of the State of Ohio was put on the statute books by a lot of political demagogues who believed that they were working 726 in the interest of the dear people—and they did it once for the dear people and about twenty times for themselves. I recognize that this industry does not occupy the plane among the industries of the country that it ought to occupy, because we have met in joint conventions year after year and discussed our wage relations instead of devoting some of our time to going out and telling certain people to keep their hands off our business.

The railroad companies of this country say to the mine owners, 'We want our fuel at a certain rate.' The mine owners, in order to get a part of the fuel trade of the railroads, put down the prices in some instances to cost, not because of competition, but because of your desire to get a part of that trade. Then after securing a part of that trade the official representatives of the railroads are in so close touch with the leaders of the manufacturing industries of the country that the steam trade, as we call it, buys fuel almost at as cheap a price as the railroad company. Then in order to make ends meet somebody must pay a better price, and it is usually the domestic consumers, the masses of the people. And that is where the political demagogues get their work in, because they are the people who have votes, and that is why they have anti-conspiracy laws placed on the statute books.

That is not the only phase of it that hurts us. In order to crowd out somebody or in order to get a better price for coal going into the markets our friends on the other side, finding that the miners' contract is signed on this end, that the railroads are insisting on a lower price on the other side, seek to get a readjustment of the freight rates in order that they may increase their returns on their investment. What is the result? They haul the railroads before the Railroad Commission or before the Interstate Commerce Commission and secure a readjustment of freight rates, as was done in Ohio recently, when the rate was 20 cents a ton lower than it was last year. Of course, that makes a railroad feel good! The railroads, like the rest of us, have more or less resistance in their makeup against what they call unreasonable demands. They go into courts, and the operators will probably say that while they have a decision from the Ohio Railroad Commission, the chances are it will not become operative for a year or two because the railroads will fight it in the courts, the operators will do the same, and they will all spend money in legal fees that should go to paying our wages and go to giving you returns on your investment. It is true that that is what is transpiring, because you men deluded yourself into the be-727 lief that the railroads are going to hold a dividing line along the Ohio river. Don't you think they will readjust the rates going over to West Virginia? Certainly. There is a well-founded suspicion in the minds of most men that the railroads have an indirect interest in the mines, not only in West Virginia, but in a great many other coal producing States. The railroads in Illinois have advanced freight rates 10 cents a ton on all of the coal to be handled there the coming year. The Illinois operators will probably meet us in conference, and they will say, 'We must get relief, because the railroads have put on an increased rate of 10 cents, and you must meet the issue.' Of course, we must meet the issue, no matter what we get. We are going to meet it. We are going to insist upon an advance in wages. We are going any length to enable you to get a better price for coal than you have been receiving; but we do not want so much competition in your own ranks." Because the argument of competition is always used as the principal argument to reduce wages. "You should not come in here until you come, as they say in court, with clean hands on your own proposition."

Q. In your report to the convention of the United Mine Workers, held on January 11th, did you refer to the Sherman anti-trust law?

A. I think I did; I believe I expressed the opinion that I was in favor of repealing it or modifying it, and I am.

Q. This language I will read from the United Mine Workers' Journal of January 19th, 1911, page 5, top of middle column, two paragraphs, and ask you if it is correct: "In my opinion the Sherman anti-trust law, and every other law of a similar character, should be either amended or *a*ppealed, and instead of attempting to regulate corporations and trusts in the manner provided by the Sherman law, the national and State governments should enact laws providing for a method of taxation that would remove any incentive for large corporations to accumulate wealth by illegitimate methods.

"As laboring men, and especially as mine workers, we should lend every influence we possess to repeal those provisions of the Sherman law that deprive us of our right to organize and establish the object for which we are united. Now is the time to act, as we may at any time be made the victims of a law that was enacted to control trusts, but which is being diverted to destroy organized labor." Did you say that in your report?

A. Subject to any typographic errors, yes, sir; I think that is about the language.

Q. Is that the position of your organization on that sub-728 ject?

A. No; that is my position; that is an expression of opinion.

Q. And do you not know whether your organization is in favor of the continuance or of the repeal or of a modification of that law?

A. No; I am not positive whether the committee on officers' reports reported on that particular clause favorably or not, without going over the records to see, and that is the reason I say it is an expression of an opinion of mine to the convention.

Q. The federal anti-trust law is held by the courts to be simply an embodiment in the federal statutes of the common law. If your organization aims to have the anti-trust law abolished or amended so as not to apply to your organization, would you say that your organization would be equally opposed to the enforcement of the common law if it contained the same matter substantially as the anti-trust law does?

A. I haven't any right to say what the organization will do; I haven't any right to anticipate what action it may take after an investigation of the subject.

Q. You suspended organizing work, didn't you, after the disastrous strike of 1906, to a very large extent?

A. No; I think not. They may have called in a number of the organizers, but I do not remember that at any time we suspended organizing work except the temporary organizing work of a part of last year.

Q. Were you not short of funds after the strike of 1906?

A. No; I think not—not to that extent, anyhow. I would not be sure whether Mr. Mitchell, who was then the president, discontinued the temporary organizing force or not, but it seems to me he did not, and for this reason: Because in 1906 a number of the operators signed up agreements immediately in different sections of the country. The strike seemed to be that year, I think, confined for some time to a part of Ohio and for some time in central Pennsylvania, and I believe they had quite a strike in some sections of Illinois that year, and the revenue from our membership—that is, the membership whose contracts did not expire in the spring of the year in the northwest and different sections—I think would obviate the necessity of suspending the entire organizing force. However, that is an opinion and I am not positive or clear about it, but that could be learned by an examination of the record.

Q. At that convention wasn't a resolution adopted which said: "Your committee recommend that this convention heartily approve of the board's action in withdrawing a part of our organizing 729 force from the service as a result of the debilitated treasury, but we further recommend that the force be increased whenever in the discretion of the board our funds would warrant."?

A. That is in line with what I said—that I believe possibly a part of the force might have been discontinued, although I had forgotten about that incident you read.

Q. And along in the spring of 1907 the organizing work was again taken up when the funds became better?

A. Oh, I think they were continued immediately. The international executive board has authority, without the action of the convention, to place organizers in the field, and the international president appoints organizers with the consent of the international executive board.

Q. At that time you were the vice-president, weren't you—in 1906 and 1907?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had charge of the organizing, especially, hadn't you?

A. Under the direction of the president. In other words, the organizers reported to him and to myself. I looked over their report and reported to him—made a monthly condensed report to him of the situation.

Q. Now, where a mine is run non-union and wages are not being paid equivalent to the wages paid under a union organization, you claim that you are doing a man good by organizing the mine and thus procuring for him more compensation for his labor. Is that your claim?

A. I do not think I made any such claim as that, sir.

Q. Well, do you claim that?

A. I think that we are doing the men and the industry and the community and the country a benefit.

Q. Where a mine is running non-union, but is paying wages substantially the same as would be paid provided the mine was running union under your rules and regulations, what would be your object in unionizing that mine?

Witness: In organizing the men at a non-union mine?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes, where the wages that were paid were substantially the same as the wages paid at a union mine?

A. Well, we believe they ought to be members of the organization because they have received those wages that they would not have received if it was not for the work of the organization. That can be clearly brought out—and I believe it was stated the other day—that when we had a joint conference with the operators who were employing men, part union and part non-union, that this led 730 up to what is known as the so-called closed shop contract arrangement; but when we secured the advance in the wages for the men we were rather embarrassed to find that the only men we could and that we had a right to exercise control over were members of the union. When we asked the operators to make a contract for all of the men, and that those men should all be in our organization in order that we could discipline and control them, the operators said: "No; we will not do that, but we will make a contract for the union men." We immediately took up that phase of the situation and said: "All right; we will make a contract with you for the union men—to advance their wages—the stipulation to be in this contract that this is only for union men, and the non-union men are not to receive any advance, but are to continue at the present wages." The operators very promptly said: "That is foolish; every man in our employ would go into the union before night to get the benefit of the advance for the union men." And that is true. They further said: "We might just as well have a contract for all the men." That is what led up to the so-called closed shop agreement.

Q. How many men have you in closed-shop wage agreements now?

A. All the men in Ohio with the possible exception of a few small isolated cases; all the men in Indiana; all the men in Michigan; all the men in Illinois (well, I must qualify that statement by saying, unless the statement in the Journal with reference to that locality in Illinois that was called non-union, or a scab mine, or something like that, is true, and I do not know a thing about that); approximately all the men in Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma and Texas, and all the men in Arkansas with the exception of some local places in the Spadra field; a part of Kentucky; a part of British Columbia; a part of Washington, and I believe approximately all of Wyoming and Montana, but I will not be so positive about that; and this was true of northern Colorado previous to the present trouble out there; a part of central Pennsylvania and I believe the greater part of western Pennsylvania as it applies to employes inside of the mine.

Q. About what does that closed shop include in numbers of your men?

Witness: In membership?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes.

A. Oh, I would say offhand that it will run over 200,000 men. There may be quite a variation there, and I haven't got time 731 to figure up the number of all the men in those States. That could be ascertained by the mining reports—the exact number.

"Q. Mr. Lewis, Mr. J. C. McKinley, a witness who testified in this case, and said that it was the purpose or one of the purposes and objects of the United Mine Workers to unionize the United States and Canada and to create a minimum price for mining coal, and to do this so that the operators would be able to dictate a minimum price for the sale of their coal; and he further stated that you had declared this to be the purpose of your organization and that you had stated it to be your ambition. What can you say as to this being the object or purpose of the organization, or whether this statement of Mr. McKinley is correct or true?

A. It is true that the purpose of the United Mine Workers is to organize, if possible, all the mine workers in the United States and Canada; it is likewise true that it is the purpose of the organization to endeavor to secure for the mine workers a fair day's pay for their labor. The organization has not itself declared in favor of fixing a minimum wage rate at any time. That feature of it is a declaration that I have made—that I believed that if that were possible we might then make or agree upon a perpetual contract. The idea I had in mind was to do away with these periodical strikes that take place as the result of this agreement. In regard to fixing a selling price for coal for the operators, I do not know of any time that the organization has ever considered in any of its conventions that phase of the situation, nor has it taken into consideration the advisability of formulating any plan that would permit the operators to dictate the minimum selling price of coal either on a uniform or any other basis; and as to whether that is my ambition, I do not know as I have ever publicly expressed an opinion that it was my ambition to bring that about.

Q. He said you told him on a number of occasions that that was your ambition but he could not designate any particular occasion.

A. The fact of the matter is I have never discussed this matter with Mr. McKinley except since I have come to Philippi, and I would not be positive whether in the discussion here in this court room, or on the train, that I have discussed my ideas of that 732 matter; but I have no recollection of saying that it is my ambition and yes I may have said that it was one of my ambitions to bring about the condition to do away with strikes entirely, and that I believed that that was one of the methods to bring that about.

Q. Well, did you say that it was your ambition to bring about such conditions by the agency of the United Mine Workers as to enable coal operators to dictate the price of coal?

A. No; the matter of saying anything about operators dictating the price never to my recollection was referred to either in conversation on the train or anywhere else with Mr. McKinley."

Witness is familiar in a general way with the price paid for mining coal in union territory during the past four years, and in some instances it would be regarded as fair, in others not. The purpose of the United Mine Workers is to secure a fair mining price for all work in and around the mines, taking into consideration the conditions existing in the various districts and sub-districts; the organization has never sought to establish a uniform mining rate throughout the country; there are as many rates throughout the country as there are veins of coal. Under the old system it was usually considered in the ordinary vein, free from any faults, that three tons of coal would be an ordinary day's work of screened coal; and for that the organization endeavored to secure for the miner—not because of his special skill but because of the hazardous nature of his occupation—a wage rate equal if not better than that of the average skilled mechanics. In negotiating a wage contract it is always considered that the men cannot demand or hope to establish a wage rate and deprive the miner owner of earning a fair profit on his investment.

As to using the Hocking rate as a basing rate in Ohio: The Hocking district had a vein of coal uniform in thickness—anywhere from six to nine feet—and the operators and miners of that district arranged wage contracts, before the institution of the interstate joint movement. It is used as the basing district because the coal from that district comes into direct competition with the coal from western Pennsylvania and Indiana in the general markets of the northwest. The Hocking district was fixed as the basing district of Ohio, because it supplied the general market. The rate in the Hocking district is taken as the basing rate in negotiating for the balance of Ohio in working out the details; all of the details of the mining rates must be worked out in accordance with the physical condition of the veins and the prices that the operators receive for the coal they sell; when an agreement is reached on a rate in the Hocking district, the same pick mining rate is agreed upon in the thin vein section of the Pittsburg vein, and in the bituminous district of Indiana. The details of the agreement for each district are worked out at home in these districts.

If it were the purpose to fix a rate in the Fairmont territory, where there are three different veins, as well as differentials, the Fairmont district would be taken as the basis point for the state; the Pittsburg vein would be taken upon which to base the right, because it is a general vein and there are such large quantities of that coal shipped to the eastern markets. In arranging a mining rate for the Fairmont district, the differential against Fairmont would be taken into consideration; that must always be done; then if it is shown that the Fairmont operators receive less in the aggregate for their coal than the operators in other places, that also would have to be taken into consideration. If that were not the case, but it were shown that owing to the physical condition of the vein, it cost more to produce a ton of coal in the Fairmont district than it did in other districts that would have to be taken into consideration, because it always goes back to the ability of the operator to earn a profit on the investment in the mines. So, in the Fairmont district, it would not necessarily be true that the rate for mining the Pittsburg and Freeport veins would be the same. The question would have to be considered, so far as the Freeport vein is concerned, by basing it upon the selling price of the coal, the cost of production and the ability of the operator to earn a profit in developing his property.

The purpose of the American Federation of Labor, with which the United Mine Workers are affiliated, is to endeavor to bring all the international and national organizations of labor in this country into one family or federation of unions, but taking nothing away from the power and authority of the national or international union to regulate its own affairs. The American Federation have affiliated with that organization, small unions in isolated localities of some particular trade probably of a few hundred, that could not have any national organization because the industry is confined to one locality, and in those instances the American Federation of Labor does assist these men in arranging their conditions, employment hours of labor and wages.

734 Aside from that the American Federation exercises a great deal of influence, so far as the executive council is concerned, in endeavoring to convey to the minds of the American people the real purposes of the labor movement, and of course in that connection if there are laws sought to be enacted that would be inimical to the interests of the laboring people, then the legislative committee at Washington and in the various states of the country will look after them, and where laws have been enacted that are directly inimical to the interests of the laboring people, they seek or endeavor to have those laws amended or repealed just the same as other societies or corporations are looking after legislative matters that affect them.

As to permitting men to remain at work in order to protect mining property, while a strike is on, witness says:

"For a number of years a class of men who are known as pumpers, engineers and firemen were not members of the United Mine Workers and for that reason we were not concerned as to what they did because we had no jurisdiction over them. We had no right to tell them to continue to work neither had we the right to ask them to stop working. In the development of this joint movement and system of arranging wage contract, I believe I made it clear that we had a very serious strike in Illinois by the hoisting engineers, who are the men who work in the mines and haul coal out or hoist it out of the shaft. A contract had been signed up with the miners for several months and the hoisting engineers went on strike throughout the entire state. We had no jurisdiction over them; we could not order them back to work; and unfortunately we had no men that we could advise to be employed to take their places, because, you understand, in mining camps there are only one or two or three men of that kind living around the mine. When that occurred it was put up by the operators to our organization to put those men back to work notwithstanding the fact that they were not members of our union, and our officials did make it possible for those men to go back to work. The next time that we took up the question of making a contract in that state this question came up and the operators were plainly told that if we were to direct that class of men then they should be members of our organization. They were willing to be members of our organization but the operators had always protested against it. That is really how those men became members of the United Mine Workers, and along with that is incorporated in our contracts clauses not stating that these men may work, 735 but they are required to work and protect the property even though there is a strike growing out of the disagreement over wages."

As to strike benefits paid out between 1900 and 1910, witness says: In some of the districts they pay out to men on strike $3.00 per week per member. Those strikes may be the result of a mine foreman violating a contract just as much as a miner. It is paid out usually in goods and not in cash; that is to prevent the possibility of the men spending it for drink, if he were so disposed; also if families are evicted from houses tents are provided and ground is leased; the usual basis is allow a dollar for the head of a family, fifty cents for the wife, and twenty-five cents each for the children, per week.

The railroad strike at Pittsburg, in 1877, occurred before the formation of the present miners' organization; from information had at the time witness thinks that strike was a spontaneous uprising of disorganized men; the result was that it was one of the most disastrous strikes in its effect in the history of the country. The men who were engaged in that strike had the sympathy of thousands of other men in Pittsburg outside of the railroad interests; the strike reached such proportions as to require the authorities to declare martial law in Allegheny County. Property was being destroyed in every direction. The proportion of organized labor to unorganized labor at that time was very much less that it is now, or as compared with what it was in 1907.

During the coal strike of 1897, the number of men engaged in it was about 150,000 men, more or less; there were less than ten thousand members in the United Mine Workers at that time.

No organizer has power to order a suspension or a strike at any mine at any time either before or after the mine is organized; that power rests with the international executive board, so far as national strikes are concerned, and with the district boards in district strikes, provided they consult the international authorities. The sub-district has no power to order a strike without first consulting the management of the mine and investigating the causes that may lead up to a strike. If an organizer declares that he will shut down a mine after it is organized, he cannot carry such a threat into effect and be in conformity with the laws of the United Mine Workers. Such a statement would be mere idle declaration or boast. If he did get the members to join the union and the mine were not unionized by entering into contractual relations, he would not be carrying out the purposes of the organization if he got the men to quit. He 736 would be defeating its first declaration—conciliation; he would destroy the second—arbitration; if he did such a thing, it would not be possible, witness thinks, to unionize the mine with those men; it would not be possible to carry out the policy of the United Mine Workers, because the policy and purposes of the organization had been set aside in advance by that method. Under such a course as that, it might be possible but hardly probable, to organize a non-union mine, such as the Hitchman mine. It might be that the operator was getting a high price for his coal, and required coal at the time, and he would meet the men and sign an agreement, and it would carry with it the organization, but not necessarily the unionizing of that mine.

Asked as to the difference between unionizing a mine and organizing, the witness says: "There is a great deal of difference, although it is not generally understood by the American People. For instance, to illustrate: Take a mine across the river here that has been in operation for ten years, employing two hundred men. If I would go over there and would be talking to those fellows or would start to work in the mine myself, I would say, 'Boys, how long have you been here in this condition?' Some of them might say: ten, fifteen or twenty years. 'Are you reasonably satisfied?' 'Yes.' 'Wouldn't you like to get more wages?' 'Why sure we would.' 'Well, now, if you fellows will listen to me we will go ahead and we will all join the union, and we know this company wants coal, and we will go ahead and join this union and demand an advance in wages and they will pay it to us.' I will say that I know they will pay it because I know something of the conditions. Now, I persuade all those fellows to join the union and make this demand and they concede it instantly because it is better to pay the five cents advance than to lost fifteen or twenty cents profit. Now, that mine is organized but that mine is not unionized, because to be a union mine the men must understand the principles of organization; they must understand its laws and they must understand its objects. In other words, they must be educated in the principles of the organization to be a union mine, and that would be organizing the mine. You can join church and not be a christian."

737 D. H. SULLIVAN.

Age 53; residence, Coshocton County, Ohio; serving second year as president of District 6, United Mine Workers; was elected district vice president in 1899 and served in that position until elected president; there was about a year that witness was a member of the district executive board of District 6; District 6 embraces Ohio, a small part of Beaver County, Pennsylvania, and four river counties in West Virginia—Hancock, Brooke, Ohio and Marshall; before becoming an officer of the United Mine Workers, witness did nearly every kind of work around the mines except weighing coal; worked for quite a time in Mercer County, Pennsylvania, his native state; then in Ohio, where he worked about all the time except for about a year or so in the states of Iowa, Kansas and Missouri.

The preamble and section 2 of article 1, of the constitution, found in "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 1," express the purposes and objects of the United Mine Workers of America.

Witness has been a member of the organization since its formation, but was not present as a delegate when it was formed.

The first miners' organization of which he was a member was along about 1873, and was called the Miners and Laborers Benevolent Association; it was along the same lines as the United Mine Workers, but did not live very long; witness also joined the Amalgamated Miners Association—an open organization, that is, there were no secrets about it; he also joined the Knights of Labor, which was a secret organization; it was largely along the lines of the United Mine Workers except that they did all their work in secret. The Knights of Labor had territorial divisions, and held conventions, for the purpose of carrying out their purposes; there was one branch of the Knights of Labor set aside for the coal miners known as N. T. A. 135. Witness was also a member of the National Progressive Union, which was distinctively a miners' organization.

The United Mine Workers has always been an open organization; any one is at liberty to enter their conventions or local meetings who desires; its literature is for the public as well as for the members; there is nothing connected with it that is sought to be withheld from the public.

Witness is acquainted with John Mitchell, T. J. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, 738 John Zelenka, Lee Rankin and Thomas Hughes, co-defendants in this suit.

W. B. Wilson holds no official position with the United Mine Workers, but is serving his second term as a member of Congress from Pennsylvania; he was a practical coal miner and mined coal in his native state of Pennsylvania before he became connected with the United Mine Workers. Witness first became acquainted with him about 1886 or 1888.

William Green is not officially connected with the United Mine Workers; he formerly held the position now occupied by witness; was a coal miner and worked in a mine near where the witness worked before becoming an officer in the United Mine Workers; is now a member of the Senate of Ohio, serving at present as president pro tem. Was elected at the last election.

Lee Rankin is not now connected with the United Mine Workers; his connection ceased about a year ago when he became superintendent of the Florence mine of the Y. & O. Coal Company, near Martins Ferry; when a man becomes superintendent of a coal company he forfeits his membership. The average man would not want to hold membership in the United Mine Workers, or he would be placed in a very delicate situation. The organization never has undertaken to assert government of control over the superintendency of a mine.

John Mitchell holds no official position with the United Mine Workers, and has not since about March 31, 1908; he was immediate successor to Mr. T. L. Lewis.

The difference between organizing the men at the mine and organizing the mine is that when the miners are organized the work of organizing the mine is only just started. The next proceed to meet with the operator who owns the mine, or operates it, for the purpose of making contracts or agreements. Under the constitution and methods of the United Mine Workers a mine cannot be organized without the consent of the owner, and it is not the object or purpose of the United Mine Workers to do so, and never has been; it has never been attempted as far as witness knows.

After a mine has been organized, the agreement between the employer and the organization is paramount. The constitution of the organization has nothing to do with the workings afterwards; that agreement does not take away from the operator the control of his men. The agreement is in writing and a copy of the one made in Ohio in 1910 is here handed to consul for his inspection. If a member of the United Mine Workers in the territory com-739 prised with District 6, should violate the agreement between the operator and the miners, the management of the mine has a right to discharge him; the discharged man could then have a hearing; it is taken up by the local officers at the mine, and if they fail to reach a settlement it is referred up to the sub-district officers and very often they settle it. Perhaps it comes up to the state but not very often. The reason for these investigations as stated by the witness is that employers of labor as well as employes are very selfish, and are liable to make mistakes. The right of investigation is just as sacred to the employer as to the employe, for often the mine foreman or the mine superintendent has some personal matter against one of his employes and he brings that into the mine and there he places inconveniences upon that employe to the extent that he can bear it no longer, and when he resists he is discharged. The mine owner knows nothing about this personal matter until he learns of it through the investigation. Then very often the mine foreman superintendents are under the influence of liquor and say and do things that injure the business. When the mine owner finds out the true state of facts as a rule he puts the man back to work.

In paying out benefits to members of the union the organization always tries to pay in orders, for the reason that there are men in the organization, just as in other walks of life, who have a weakness for drink, and the organization wants to have the money go where it properly belongs; that is, to go for the benefit of the family of the men who is on strike. The fund is usually in the hands of the sub-district officers for distribution; sometimes it is sent to the local officers if a good reputable man can be found to handle it. It some times happens that the orders for provisions are not accepted in some localities; when that condition is met money must be used.

The preamble and sections 2 and 3 of article 1 of the consituation of District 6 of the United Mine Workers, contained in "Plaintiff's Documentary Exhibit No. 2," is expressive of the objects and purposes of the United Mine Workers of District 6; it has no other purposes. The same is true of the preamble and article 1 of the constitution of sub-district 5, as contained in "Plaintiff's Documentory Exhibit No. 3."

One of the objects of the organization, as stated in section 2 of article 1 of the national constitution, is to ameliorate the condition of employes that produce or handle coke or coal in and 740 around the mines, by the method of conciliation. That embodies the getting of better ventilation in mines, and also the protection of the miner in his working place by having proper timbers there and enough of them for his protection, and also to have a safe traveling way. A safe traveling way is very important on account of electric wires. When a miner is traveling his light may be blown out or he may stumble and fall and come in contact with that live wire and be electrocuted. Those things have to be brought about by conciliation—the operators and miners getting together and agreeing upon a scale of wages and also on conditions of employment by which this work is to be performed.

It is not true as stated in the plaintiff's bill, at page 19 of the transcript of the record, that the defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined and formed themselves into a conspiracy to cause the plaintiff's mine to be shut down, its plant to remain idle, etc. until such time as is shall submit to the demand of the union that it shall unionize its plant, etc. Either as an official of the United Mine Workers or an individual, witness is not in any confederation, combination or conspiracy to unionize the plaintiff's mine against its consent. Witness was in no such conspiracy at any time prior to the granting of the injunction in this case. Witness has not, either as an officer of the United Mine Workers or as an individual, sought to make the plaintiff's mine idle and to remain idle. To do so would be an injury to the United Mine Workers, because if the mines were unionized and then closed down, it would be necessary for the union to keep the men at considerable cost, or find employment for them some place else. If the mine of the Hitchman Company had become unionized, the men would obey the management of the mine, and not the orders of the union. They could not remain in the union and disobey the directions and orders of the operators, against the wishes of the union. There are no rules of the organization whereby a unionized mine must submit its men to the paramount control of the union, and has never known any such rules to be adopted by the organization.

Witness has never, either in a combination or conspiracy, or outside of such such combination, conspiracy or confederation, individually or as an officer of the United Mine Workers, endeavored or attempted to shut down the mine of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company because it is running non-union; never gave any directions to that effect; does not know of any one connected with the 741 union who did give such directions; if any one did give such instructions, he had no authority from the United Mine Workers to do so.

The allegation: "After your orator started up non-union about June 12th, 1906, as aforesaid, efforts were repeatedly made by one or more of the defendants to induce your orator to unionize its mine, and, failing in that, efforts were made by some one or more of said defendants to bring about by inducement, persuasion, threats, and intimidation, and by various means and devices unlawfully to induce your orator's employes to cease working for your orator, and by use of like means, devices, intimidation, threats, persuasion and inducements to prevent men willing to work for your orator not to engage to work, or if having engaged to work, then not to go to work for your orator"; is not true; witness has never used any efforts to have any of plaintiff's employes cease work; does not know of any official of District 6 or of Sub-District 5 who did; if such a thing were done it would be without authority from the proper officers of the organization; neither did witness, either as an officer or an individual, attempt to keep men from going to work there who were willing to work, nor did he authorize any one else so to do, and knows of no one belonging to the organization who was authorized so to do.

The allegation: "Yet your orator says that although it has refused to permit it, still the said defendants, further proceeding to carry out their conspiracy are now endeavoring to unionize your orator's mine, and threaten, and your orator has reasonable grounds to fear that they will, and so alleges, close down you orator's mine and keep it closed until your orator will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor"; is untrue; it is not a part of the policy of the United Mine Workers to threaten to close down a mine if the owner refuses to sign the agreement. If a mine is running non-union the organization would not threaten to close down the mine before the mine is organized or the men organized, because that would work against the interests of the organization; and if the officials succeeded in getting those men to join the union the officials would meet with the operator as often as he would allow them, and try to reach a settlement, and if he were paying the same scale that the union were paying, the organization would be only too glad to have it go that way; of course the union would rather have him sign the scale because that would show his good faith—the operator and miners would be mutually obligated to carry 742 out the agreement by reason of having signed it up together. If he is paying the scale and the men are properly treated in line with the contract, witness would not close down the mine in order to coerce the operator into signing the agreement; it would be an expense to the organization. Witness does not know of a case where the union shut down a mine where the owner was paying as much as the union was paying, and the men belonged to the union; but it always shows good faith to have the contract signed. If they refuse to sign it would be an evidence of bad faith.

Witness is not sure that he was acquainted with the defendant Thomas Hughes in 1906-7. As an organizer Hughes would have no power to unionize a mine; he would have no power whatever to shut it down.

As to the allegation: "And your orator says that while the said defendants have so far been unable to bring about or induce your orator's employes to quit its service, still the said Hughes has recently stated to one of your orator's miners whom he was trying to induce to leave your orator's service and join the union, that he, Hughes, had succeeded in having 125 men at the Hitchman mine sign their names agreeing to become members of the United Mine Workers of America and that just as soon as he got 25 more names he was going to shut the Hitchman mine down;" witness says that Hughes could not as an organizer, have shut the mine down if he had all the men in the mine to join the union.

Witness is acquainted with E. T. Hitchman, and first met him at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, about 1905; at that time Mr. Hitchman was running a union mine at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio; he was also connected with the United Mine Workers as an employe of labor in West Virginia—does not know just how long.

As to the allegation: "Your orator further says that unless enjoined by this court, the said defendants acting individually and agreeing, confederating, combining and forming themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America as aforesaid, will, in pursuance of their unlawful purposes and designs, by enticement, persuasion or coercion, in one form or the other, bring about the shutting down of your orator's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business, and will without the consent and against the will of your orator compel your orator to recognize said defendants and said associations in the further transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal and will compel your orator to contract with its employes through the said 743 defendants as officers of the said associations under such rules and regulations made and enforced by said associations and by said defendant officers as will enable the union to dictate the persons whom your orator shall employ and those whom your orator shall discharge, the wages your orator shall pay, and further will compel your orator to agree that each of its future employes as members of the said United Mine Workers of America shall owe and yield to said union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employes would owe to your orator and that they will thus take charge of, dictate the management of, and virtually control, your orator's business and thereby perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon your orator which distinctly violate your orator's contractual common law, statutory and constitutional rights as a citizen of the State of West Virginia; witness says it is not true; and further, that he would not belong to a labor organization that would take that view.

At this point the witness, Sullivan, was asked and answered questions as follows:

Q. It is alleges in this bill that the defendants (and this term includes yourself) "will by combining, confederating and agreeing, by enticement, persuasion or coercion in one form or the other bring about the shutting down of the plaintiff's mine." What have you to say about anything that you have done to accomplish this?

A. I have done nothing.

Q. Do you know of any of the defendants who are doing it?

A. I do not.

Q. Are you combining or confederating or are you conspiring with any of these defendants to do this?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you doing any of these things to shut the plaintiff's mine down?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you attempting by conspiracy, confederation or combination or by using enticement, threats, coercion or intimidation to compel the plaintiff to contract with the United Mine Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. What if anything are you doing of that nature?

A. Well, as far as that is concerned we are doing nothing. We are not allowed to do anything.

Q. Did you before the injunction was granted?

A. Why, if we could persuade them to join with us we thought we had that right.

Q. Did you try to use argument with the operators, through your representatives, to try to get them to agree to a contract?

744 A. I presume they did; I have always held that we had the right to persuade them.

Witness knows of no one connected with the organization who attempted to bring about such a state of affairs that the employes of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company would owe allegiance to the United Mine Workers that would be paramount to the allegiance they would owe to their employer, in the discharge of their work in the coal mines.

As to the allegation: "Your orator further says that in effecting their said objects of unionizing your orator's mine the said defendants propose and threaten to, and your orator being so informed and believing it to be true, alleges on such information and belief that said defendants will and are about to, indulge in all the many methods of accomplishing their result by the use of threats, intimidation, force, violent or abusive language, picketing your orator's premises, picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to your orator's premises and going to the homes or boarding houses of your orator's employes for the purpose of intimidating or coercing them to leave your orator's employment and to picket railroad and street cars passing to and from or through your orator's premises for the purpose of intercepting your orators in going to or from your orator's premises and for the purpose of intercepting and preventing persons coming to your orator's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering into your orator's employment;" witness says it is not true, knows of no one connected with the organization that has ever done any of these things; did not authorize any one to do so; witness was never in any conspiracy to do any of the things mentioned; knows of none of the defendants who were; knows of none of the defendants who has conspired, confederated or combined with him to do anything of that kind, either now or in 1906 or 1907.

The locals throughout the country—or a great many of them—have an accident and funeral fund; it is for the purpose of taking care of those who get hurt or to bury those who die.

It is one of the purposes of the United Mine Workers to use its organization and membership, so far as they can, to secure legislation relating to mines and mining, so far as it affects the coal industry in the various states of the union where they operate as an organization; there is a wonderful improvement in the mining laws of the state of Ohio since the year 1890, when the United

745 Mine Workers organization was formed. One of the improvements is in regard to electrical power—The use of that has been so regulated by legislation brought about through agitation through the United Mine Workers that it is much safer now than formerly, although there is still room for improvement. That agitation resulted in the formation of a commission appointed by Governor Harris, of three operators and three miners, and those six men got together and selected the seventh—who was the chief inspector of the state; they went into several mines in the different sub-districts of the state to find out the actual conditions. After they made that tour of inspection they got together and unanimously agreed on new bills and changes in the old laws. The three miners who were on that commission were members of the United Mine Workers and practical coal miners; one was an officer of the organization, and the other two were coal miners.

Before the scale expired on March 31, 1906, the Hitchman mine was working on a union basis and under a union scale; it was within the Ohio District, under Sub-District 5; at the national convention at Indianapolis in 1906, the United Mine Workers reaffirmed the scale of 1903; witness's understanding was that Mr. Hitchman had an opportunity of signing the scale at that time, if he wanted to do so; if he had signed it there would be no reason why they should not continue running, so far as the organization was concerned.

Cross-examination:

Upon cross exmination of the witness, Sullivan, the following questions were asked and answers given:

Q. Mr. Sullivan, your business life has been very largely taken up with your work as an official of the United Mine Workers, has it not?

A. Quite a large part of my active life—for twelve or thirteen years anyhow.

Q. That has been your business?

A. For that length of time, actively.

Q. With respect to Mr. Lewis, Mr. Savage, Mr. Zelenka, Mr. Watkins, Mr. Rankin, Mr. Green and the other defendants—possibly with the exception of Mr. Hughes—their business life has been, to your knowledge largely a life connected with the organization and management of the United Mine Workers of America?

A. Well, I think I can say the same for the others that you have mentioned, so far as I know.

746 Q. And in performing the duties of their positions with the United Mine Workers during these years that you all have been connected with that organization, the work they did for the United Mine Workers was their business.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the compensation afforded for their work and the compensation afforded to you for your work, was their means of livelihood and your means of livelihood?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You often met together, I suppose, during those years and during the performance of your duties?

A. Yes, sir; we met pretty often.

Q. And it would be fair to conclude that the directing power of the organization's business was then in the hands of yourself and your associates?

A. Well, now, there were others who were in the office before I was.

Q. Yes; but to the extent that you and they participated together over any given time, your answer would be yes?

A. Yes, sir; as far as our work was concerned.

Q. You have your national conventions and your district conventions and your sub-district conventions, and these conventions enact rules and regulations, and pass resolutions, and elect officers, and the special things that are not covered by the rules and regulations which the convention desires to have carried out, those things are the subject of convention action?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that convention action may be then placed in the hands of some other committee and then finally drift down to the officers you have named in charge of the particular districts and sub-districts, or national officers, or it may go first to the national officers and then to the district officers and then to the sub-district officers and then might get into other sub-district committees, &c?

A. That is, to what do you have reference?

Q. You just carry out the general rules and policy of the organization? Is that true?

A. In the making of their constitutions a constitution committee is selected, you know, and they prepare those constitutions or changes or whatever they are, and then the convention votes on those changes and it is the same way in the state or district and the sub-district.

Q. And after the convention has acted on matters that are not included within the provisions of the constitution, those matters may be referred for attention to some other board or they may be referred to the officers directly?

A. The officers could not change the work of a convention, because if a convention adopts a constitution then the officers could not go out and change the constitution afterwards.

747 Q. I am speaking about the constitution or carrying out the provisions of the constitution. I am speaking of carrying out resolutions, or provisions or directions of the convention which are not embraced in the constitutional provisions at all?

A. In replying to that I will say that the constitution is our guide in handling the affairs of our organization.

The Court:

Q. If questions arise, Mr. Sullivan, after the adjournment of your convention, that require attention, those matters are transacted by the officers, are they?

A. If it is constitutional, why, the old constitution will prevail until a new one takes its place.

Q. I mean in the ordinary routine business you attend to all the routine business that occurs at the convention and make report to the convention afterwards, do you?

A. Yes, sir; after the annual convention is over the constitution is prepared and sent out in book form to the different locals all over the mining districts of the country; and in the same way when the districts have their convention and prepare their constitution, they send it out to the different locals. If there are any changes in the constitution the old constitution will prevail until the new one takes its place.

Mr. Gilchrist:

Q. Do you mean that each convention—national convention—adopts a new constitution?

A. They make changes in the constitution; sometimes there may be changes made; but you take the preamble and that is never changed.

Q. Well, they may amend—make changes and amendments in the constitution?

A. They have the power.

Q. And the same is true of sub-district conventions?

A. Yes, sir; and fraternal societies.

Q. But unless some changes are made the constitution remains the same?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now if at a convention there is no change in the constitution but if some action is taken at the convention relative to the course or action to be pursued with reference to a scale, for instance, that action of the convention is carried out by the officers is it, or by whom?

A. In preparing the scale they select a scale committee. That scale committee makes its report to the convention embodying the demands of different competitive fields. If that is adopted that scale will be taken to a joint convention of operators and miners and that scale will be discussed there; but the operators who are doing 748 business with us will have a scale to hand us, and we exchange our scales.

Q. Now, suppose that a scale has been established at the national convention and then you have had a joint convention with the operators who do business with you, and you agree and your scale is accepted by the operators, whose duty is it then to see that the scale is signed by the operators?

A. The basic scale and the day wage is fixed in the national convention, the Hocking Valley being the basing point for Ohio. When the officers of the district return they call up the chairman or president of the organization—(interrupted)——

Q. Which organization?

A. The United Mine Workers call up the chairman of the operators' association of the Hocking Valley and ask him whether it will be convenient for the companies representing that vein of coal to meet with us in joint conference, and he tells us about when he can meet us and we meet. The day-wage scale is fixed in the national convention; the basing scale is fixed in the national convention; the internal difference- are taken up then—that is, for the bailing of water and prices for narrow work and for the other different kinds of work, which means the rules to govern the scale; (there have been quite a number of rules; I think up to twenty-four); and after they get through there then we take up the different sub-districts in our state just in the same way.

Q. You say "we"?

A. I mean the presidents of the districts.

Q. The president and the vice president and the secretary-treasurer—are those in the main the officers who have charge of that?

A. Yes, sir; I prepared the last scale, with Secretary Savage and Vice President Moore and with the sub-district officers and members of the different locals who were represented on that scale committee, and also the delegation in the joint convention.

Q. Now, with this scale agreed upon in the joint conference, the first step after the adjournment is the carrying out of the scale so far as having the operators in each district sign up is concerned. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that work is taken up by the district officers in each district which has participated in the joint conference or joint convention?

A. Yes, sir; as a rule three state officers and district officers attend the joint meeting at the basing point and fix and sign up a scale for the basing point; then we can divide up after that because the basing point is fixed. We divide up and Brother Savage 749 goes to one sub-district, Brother Moore to another and I go to another, and all go through with our work, because the basing point is fixed.

Q. With the basing point fixed the process is easy of going around to each sub-district, is it not?

A. It is not always easy but I have got a guide to go by. On account of so many different veins of coal, and the different natural conditions, it makes it a very tedious job sometimes to be able to get together. You see in the state of Ohio we have the No. 8 seam of coal and we have the No. 7, No. 6, No. 5 and a little of the No. 4 which was worked for years in the southern part of Mahoning and the northern part of Columbiana; we have also the No. 3. All of these veins of coal have different natural conditions and you have to meet those conditions in order to give every one, as near as you can, an opportunity to run their mines at a profit and pay a reasonable wage to the men who work there.

Q. Were you a member of the national convention of 1906?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of 1907?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of 1908?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of 1909?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of 1910?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of 1911?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In 1906, after the holding of the national convention of that year, were you one of the officers of District No. 6?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What position did you then hold.

A. Vice president.

Q. Who were the other officers?

A. Brother Green was just elected then and he took charge.

Q. William Green, the defendant?

A. Yes, sir; he was just elected that year. Brother Savage was the secretary.

Q. Did you and Mr. Green and Mr. Savage perform your duties in having the scale signed up in 1906?

A. Well, you have reference to Ohio?

Q. To District No. 6.

A. Well, we did but we had quite a job.

Q. Do you mean that you had difficulty?

A. Yes, sir; the 1903 scale was reaffirmed in 1906 making it 95c. a ton for pick mining and of course some of the operators were willing to pay that scale and others were not; consequently we had some trouble in that direction and e-pecially in eastern Ohio.

Q. What did that trouble consist of, in the main?

A. Well the operators of eastern Ohio did not want to 750 pay the scale of 1903, as I understood it, and there was a strike for quite a little while there.

Q. Do you remember how long the strike continued?

A. I do not mind; it seems to me it was about five or six months over there, if I recollect right.

Q. In eastern Ohio?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time was this declared off?

A. I think it was along in August sometime, but I am not able to say just what time. There was about six months, I think, that we had of it but I will not say just at what time because my memory is not good as to that.

Q. The strike took effect April first?

A. Yes, sir; they refused to sign up —that is, to pay the scale.

Q. During that period of time where were you engaged in performing your duties in trying to have the scale signed?

A. Well, I am inclined to believe that I was spending a large part of my time in the other districts—I mean in the other subdistricts of Ohio than No. 5.

Q. Did you spend any time in Sub-District 5 that you now recall?

A. I am inclined to believe that I did but it was a very short time.

Q. Where in Sub-District 5 did you spend that time?

A. Well, if I recollect right, the Lorain Coal & Coke Company and the Belmont Coal Company—with another Company; I do not recollect who they were—wanted to sign the scale of 1903 and I attended that meeting in the McLure House in Wheeling.

Q. Where were these mines doing business that you speak of—In Ohio?

A. Why the Lorain Coal & Dock Company's mine—the railroad on which it was located was the Cleveland, Wheeling & Lorain; now it is owned by the B. & O.; and the Belmont was out on the B. & O. road west of Bellaire. I do not recollect where the other company was, from memory.

Q. Was that in Ohio, too?

A. I think it was in West Virginia.

Q. Whereabouts?

A. If I remember right it was at Moundsville.

Q. The Mound Coal Company mine?

A. It seems to me that it was; I will not say positively but it was at Moundsville, if I recollect right.

Q. Now, what did you do when you made this visit to Sub-District 5, on that occasion?

A. Well we got together.

751 Q. With whom?

A. With Mr. Ed. Johnson, of the Lorain Coal & Dock Company and Mr. Thomas K. Maher of the Belmont company.

Q. And who for the Mound Coal Company?

A. I do not recall the other man; I cannot say; I understood the other man was—that there was a representative of the Moundsville mine but I do not recall his name.

Q. All three were together with you?

A. All three; that was the understanding; of course I paid very particular attention to Mr. Johnson and Mr. Thomas K. Maher, because they were over on our side, and they signed up the scale as agreed upon in Indianapolis and started to work.

Q. When was that?

A. Well, that was along about in—I do not mind, but it seems to me it was along in May sometime.

Q. Sometime along about the middle of May, wasn't it.

A. I think it was along about the middle of May.

Q. Probably about May 17th?

A. It might have been, yes sir.

Q. Now, when was the next time you came down to Sub-District 5?

A. I would not be able to say that.

Q. Were you there at all?

A. It is possible I was but I would not say because I—(interrupted)——

Q. You have a pretty good recollection, haven't you?

A. Well, you take ten or twelve years, and being subject to orders, and going wherever I was ordered to go,—it was very few times as I recollect.

Q. You cannot now recollect any other occasion?

A. No, sir; not just at this time.

Q. Mr. Sullivan, by disposition you are conciliatory, are you not?

A. Well, I have got that name.

Q. But sometimes you remember the injunction, "Spare the rod and spoil the child," I suppose, do you? Are you a believer in that statement—that proverb?

A. Oh, no; I am not really a believer in that.

Q. Mr. Sullivan, have you a copy of your recent strike order?

A. No; I have not.

Q. Is that your name attached to that?

A. My name is attached to that. You have reference to the order in eastern Ohio?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes.

A. (continued). Yes, sir; my name is there; I understand it is there, now, because I have stated time and again that I was 752 willing to co-operate with the national organization in order to bring about a settlement in the Tuscarawas and Carroll county coal fields on the basis of the Columbus agreement and the Cincinnati demands.

Q. And if your name in fact is there, it is there with your permission?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That strike is one to compel the operators to abide by what your organization claims they contracted to do in another portion of District 6?

A. Yes, sir; what they agreed to in Cincinnati—the operators of Ohio.

Q. The men that are employed at those mines now to be affected by this new strike have no grievance that you know of, have they?

A. They would have this much of a grievance; that coal companies are not permitted to sign up for one mine here and leaves another mine right co/se by paying a reduction; or in other words, pay an advance here and across the valley have a reduction. The operators of Ohio would not even stand for that themselves as a rule, because they get after us about us quick as the other fellow.

Q. Part of the programme, then, of your organization is that every operator who deals with you must deal with you altogether or not at all. That is, he must sign up for all his mines or not at all.

Witness: That do business with us jointly?

Mr. Gilchrist: Yes; that is true, is it not?

A. That do business with us jointly. He is expected to do that because he signs to do that. When he signs the contract he signs to comply with whatever that contract calls for. There isn't any provision in the contract that he signs for two mines to pay an advance and does not sign for two more. There are not any provisions of that kind.

Q. And these operators who signed the contracts which you say they have not carried out for their mines in the Tuscarawas field, are now subject to your coercive measures effective upon mines in other portions of district 6 which they own or are interested in?

A. Well, you can call it coercive measures if you wish to, but it is a refusal to carry out a contract after they had signed the contract.

Q. You spoke of Mr. Rankin, the defendant. I believe you said he is now superintendent of a "Y. & O." mine in Sub-District 5. Is that mine effected by this strike?

A. I understand it is.

Q. In your direct examination you were asked whether there was any form of contract which your organization required to 753 be signed when a mine started to run under the rules and regulations of your organization, and said that it was a printed form.

A. Yes, sir; we had printed forms of contracts.

Q. Is that printed form one made for the signature of the individual operator or is it a form for the signatures of a number of operators, together with your officials who meet together for that purpose?

A. As I stated, the operators in the different sub-districts in Ohio desire to sign up in groups. They insist on that and we make a contract with them in a group. There may be times, however, when all the operators do not sign; then, if they do not sign, it may be necessary to sign with individuals.

Q. Now, with regard to signing with an individual: Is there a separate printed form for that?

A. Well, we have quite a number of printed forms—have had—and before we compile all the contracts together, we have these single separate contracts—(interrupted)

Q. A sheet of paper of some kind with the rules and regulations of your organization printed on it?

A. Yes, sir; and the operator's name signed to the contract.

Q. The operator signs his name down at the bottom?

A. And the other operators are signed to the contract and we compile them in book form afterwards.

Q. You mean that the printed sheet which would be presented to the individual operator contains the rules and regulations of the union and purports to have printed as a part of those rules and regulations, and to authenticate them, the signatures of the group of operators who might have met with the officers at some other portion of the sub-district and agreed upon those particular things as the rules and regulations of the union and covering the operation of mining in that sub-district?

A. Yes, sir; that same vein of coal.

Q. Now, on that sheet the individual operator would sign his name at the bottom and the representative of the United Mine Workers—one of these officials you have named—would sign his name, would he?

A. No; those names are all signed beforehand when the groups of operators have signed the contract. The scale is signed by a group of operators and representatives of the mine workers; then if there is an individual, that contract is taken to that individual and he just signs his name with the rest of the operators, that he is willing to comply with that contract with the rest of the operators.

Q. Do I understand you that this agreement is between the group of operators and the officials—those three officials you have 754 named?

A. Or whatever number of officials may be necessary—the scale committee and the officials with them.

Q. Do I understand you that they sign these rules and regulations when they come together in this sort of a quasi convention, on a small scale, and then when the individual operator wants to sign, he is given the same document or the same book in which to subscribe his name, under the signature of those who attended the group meeting?

A. He is asked to sign that contract.

Q. That particular document or book?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, who takes that to the individual operator when he concludes that he will sign?

A. Some officer of the organization will take the contract. Now, here are the rules for the sub-district, here is the scale of prices, here are the names of the operators signing and here are the names of the miners signing.

Q. Now, to illustrate from this book which you have and which contains only printed matter, you have shown me the officials mining scale of Sub-District 5, and then later on follow the general rules for pick and machine mining, and then follow the signatures of the chairman of the meeting and the secretary of the meeting, and then on behalf of the miners appear the signatures of the president of the district and the president of the sub-district, and the vice-president of the sub-district, and the miners' scale committee, and the name of T. L. Lewis, national president, and then on the opposite side appear the names of the president of the operators' association that you dealt with, and of the secretary of the operators' association you dealt with, and then of a committee constituting the operators' scale committee. Now, what I want to get at is this: When that document is completed by the signatures of all those people, those signatures are in writing, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that document then taken to the individual operator when he agrees to sign the scale?

A. Why, not as a rule, with the written names there, because we go and get copies struck off—go to a printing office and get it struck off—may be five or six hundred or a thousand copies—and then that can be sent out to the different local unions and they can make their reports when they go home.

Q. And that would be in book form or on a sheet of paper?

A. Oh, no; just on a sheet of paper.

Q. Then the method would be, when a man signed, to have him just subscribe his name at the bottom of one of these long sheets containing the matter which I have illustrated would be 755 contained in that, as shown by this book.

A. Yes, sir; that is customary.

Q. When you pay benefits, Mr. Sullivan, what do you pay—how much?

A. Well, the constitution of our district says three dollars a week.

Q. You said something about the union not wanting to pay three dollars but wanting to give store orders.

A. We generally try to do that, as far as possible. There are some places where storekeepers sometimes hesitate to take the orders, and there are sometimes men who claim that it would inconvenience them very much to take orders and especially in a case of sickness, and other different things, but wherever we can get our miners to take orders in preference to currency we always feel that we can get better results. It has been our recommendation time and again but of course we have not been able to bring it about absolutely, but wherever we have been able to bring it about we have always found very good results.

Q. And as a matter of practice you do pay money when you pay benefits?

A. Oh, yes; we pay money and pay orders, too.

Q. You only pay orders when you have a shortage of funds.

A. Oh, no; we paid orders right along for nine months—well, I would not say nine months—but seven months—in the Pomeroy bend. We had money but we paid orders right along.

Q. During all the strike of 1906?

A. Not all through it, but we paid orders there, and then we would go around about every two weeks with a check book and take up the orders. We would count the amount we owed to the storekeeper and give him a check, and he went to the bank and got his money.

Q. Does your organization stand in with any storekeepers?

A. No, we do not, but you know there are some storekeepers, like individuals, who look upon labor organizations as though they were something that belonged to his satanic majesty.

Q. Well, they sometimes get pretty close to that.

A. No; if it ever comes to that I will leave it.

Q. Now, getting to a pleasanter subject, you attended some of these joint conferences, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell which ones you attended?

A. Well, I have been attending them, I think, since 1889.

Q. You have attended all of them since that time?

A. That is my recollection.

756 Q. You said that you knew W. B. Wilson.

A. Yes, sir; I know him.

Q. And that he is a member of Congress.

A. I think he is yet; it seems to me he was re-elected that last time

Q. You said also that your organization seeks to have legislation enacted in its behalf?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about or did you ever hear of the Wilson bill?

A. Well, I have heard about it, yes, sir; I haven't paid very much attention to it because I never got a copy of it.

Q. That bill is the one introduced by the Mr. Wilson you speak of?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is known by his name?

A. The Wilson bill.

Q. That bill is a labor bill?

A. That is my understanding.

Q. And its passage is being urged by the American Federation of Labor?

Witness: Now, what bill do you mean? He has one bill that is called the "old age pension bill."

Mr. Gilchrist: No; that is not the bill; it is one relative to the rights of labor organizations, &c.

A. I know that the bill he has in relation to old age pensions—I know he had that up. It was a bill that we thought very important.

Q. This other bill is generally called the Wilson bill and known to the public as that?

A. Well, I do not know as I can say anything about that bill; I would not like to say anything about it because I have not read the bill.

Q. When an operator is running a non-union mine, and his men are unionized, and the operator says that he will pay the scale, do you allow him to run without signing up?

A. It of course would depend to some extent on where he is located.

Q. You might or you might not allow him to run?

A. It depends largely on where he is located. I will say in answer to that, Mr. Gilchrist, that that could not prevail over in Ohio because operators would insist on it—they would insist that he sign up the scale as well as they—and as a matter of course we would have to carry out—if he was willing to sign and willing to pay the scale, they would say, "Why not get him to sign the scale," and they would insist upon his signing the scale just as they had. So, 757 I say, it would depend largely upon the location.

Q. Assuming that the man was not so situated as to call forth the requirement of the other operators that he should sign up, would you permit his mine to run provided he was willing to pay the scale but was unwilling to sign up?

A. Well, if he was located—as I say, it would depend largely on the location of the mine and what his reasons were. Now, if he would say that he would pay the scale pending a settlement—if there was a strike—if he would say, "I will pay the scale pending a settlement over in your district" (speaking for myself), I would be very suspicious of that and I would wonder why he would be willing to pay the scale and not sign the scale; but in order to be sure that I was right I would permit him to work until I would find out later on, because as a rule the man that will say that he will pay the scale but refuses to sign—it is very often the case that there are some parts of the scale that he refuses to comply with.

Q. So that in practice you would be very chary about allowing a man to run *un*less he signed up?

A. I would allow him to run, understand me, but I would be very suspicious of what his intentions were in refusing to sign that scale, and I would visit him very often to try to persuade him to sign the scale.

Q. And being of your persuasive nature you would probably succeed.

A. I have been very fortunate in that way; I will say that.

Q. You are not in favor of strikes at all, are you, Mr. Sullivan?

A. I wish I had the power to remove the occasion and cause of strikes. I am very much opposed to strikes; I hate the name "strike."

Q. Why do you oppose strikes?

A. Oh, it looks as though intelligent people ought never to resort to that, on either side.

Q. It involves a great deal of misery, I suppose?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And a great deal of ill feeling?
A. As a rule.
Q. And violence and bloodshed and different things of that kind?
A. Not in our district.
Q. Well, it does sometimes?
A. Not in our district. I will say that we had a strike on in the Crooksville district for seven months and five days and the operators never reported to me that there was any part of their property injured. In fact, they would sooner leave their property in the care of the striking miners as a rule, than in the care of somebody else.

758 Q. Where there is a strike—where there is a mine that is being operated independently and in opposition to your organization, and your men are idle around the mine, that condition frequently results in disorder, does it not?

A. In reply to that, Mr. Gilchrist, I will say that I do not recall of having any report come to me of a violation of law on the part of an individual member of our organization or any group of our members during a strike. It appears strange but it is nevertheless true, in Ohio, and I attribute this to our long acquaintance in this joint movement. There seems to be a commercial friendship between both sides and it has gone along until there has got to be a personal friendship. While we differ in opinion we will have a warm feeling for each other.

Q. The operators in your district who are members of that joint conference arrangement have not undertaken during the existence of a strike to run non-union, have they?
A. Oh, no; they never attempted it.
Q. Now, up in the Irwin field—you know about that, I suppose?
A. I have heard of it.
Q. Have you ever been up in that section?
A. I was never up there.
Q. Have you ever been in any section where a union mine was on a strike and the miners were there, and the management had undertaken to run non-union and defy your organization?
A. Well, no; I cannot say that I have; only there were one or two mines in the Pomeroy bend that undertook to do that but I staid on the ground and cautioned our men all the time.
Q. So as to keep them out of trouble?
A. Yes, sir; but I do not know as I would have needed to do it because they all appeared to be very good citizens.
Q. Mr. Sullivan, you were asked whether you were in any conspiracy to unionize the Hitchman mine. You took refuge, did you not, under your construction of the word "conspiracy"?
A. Why, I said then and I say now that I have never entered into a conspiracy of any kind, not only in my own work as an officer of a labor organization but in any other thing, in my life.
Q. Do you remember the occasion of the strike at the United States Coal Company over in Jefferson county?

A. I recollect that; it was in 1906.
Q. Do you recall that there was disorder there—great disorder?
A. I recall it but we were not responsible for it.
Q. Then the disorder did occur?
A. Yes, sir; but it was the men that the coal company brought in there, who were very bad citizens, and when the soldiers were 759 brought in there, as I understand, they went and disarmed those people right away and made them stay where they properly belonged; and I will say to the credit of the soldiers that they even divided their victuals with the children of the striking miners.
Q. You did not recall that occasion when you said that you had never known an occasion where there had been disorder?
A. Well, I was not there. I recall it through the official work, but I was not there. You asked me, if I recollect, if I had ever been at a place of that kind. I never was at Plum Run or Bradley during that strike.
Q. Hav- you had to your knowledge similar occurrences in your district?
A. Not that I know of; I do not recollect of any; there may have been but it was not during my time, that I recollect of.

(End of Cross examination.)

Redirect examination:

In 1906, when the organization desired to get the employes of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company to join the union, it did nothing to prevent the company from selling its coal north and northwest, or to prevent its properly competing with the coal of the Ohio coal producers. Witness had no such object in view, either as an individual or as a member of the Union Mine Workers; the organization had no such object in view, for that would be punishing its own members.

Witness understands that there are mines in the Kanawha field that are run on a union basis; is slightly acquainted with Mr. Davis, president of that district; Mr. Davis attended the last annual convention at Columbus; District 17 had several delegates there; witness recalls meeting a man by the name of Morris there, and thinks he is secretary-treasurer of District 17; witness is not advised as to how many members there are in that district.

Witness has no ill feeling against Mr. Hitchman, President of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, and hopes that he never will have; had no ill feeling against him in 1906; has not any ill feeling against any operator who may differ with him.

I, Alston G. Dayton, United States District Judge for the Northern District of West Virginia, presiding at the hearing in the 760 aforementioned case of Hitchman Coal & Coke Company v. John Mitchell, et al., do certify that the foregoing narrative of all the oral evidence given upon such hearing has been examined and approved by me; and further, that wherever in said narrative the original testimony has been inserted in full in the form of questions and answers, it has been so inserted at the request of counsel and by my order. And the said narrative is directed to be filed in the Clerk's office and to be incorporated in the transcript of the record in this cause on appeal.

Given under my hand this 10th day of July, 1913.

ALSTON G. DAYTON,
U. S. District Judge, N. D. W. Va.

Opinion.

(Filed Dec'r 23, 1912.)

In the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE COMPANY, Plaintiff,
vs.
JOHN MITCHELL and Others, Defendants.

Upon Final Hearing.

George R. E. Gilchrist, of Wheeling, W. Va., for Plaintiff.
Charles E. Hogg, of Morgantown, W. Va., for Defendants.

DAYTON, District Judge:

On September 21, 1909, I filed a written opinion in this cause, reported in 172 Fed. 963. I there stated the purposes and objects of the bill and the proceedings had thereon and in the cause to that date. I do not, because of the necessary length of this opinion made necessary by the gravity and importance of the questions involved, deem it expedient to reiterate the statement of the case there made, but refer to this prior opinion therefor. Suffice it to say that, to my order refusing to modify and in part dissolve the injunction based upon the reasons set forth in that opinion, an appeal was taken by the served defendants to the Circuit Court of Appeals for this Circuit. That Court, on March 11, 1910, dismissed such appeal 761 for want of jurisdiction. 100 C. C. A. 137, 176 Fed. 549.

The parties then proceeded to mature the cause for final hearing. The evidence was taken in open court before me. This evidence and the record in bulk is now estimated to be equivalent to between seven and eight thousand pages. Briefs of counsel filed are equivalent to near eight hundred more such pages, and the learning, research and legal ability displayed by counsel on both sides in these briefs are such as to command not only the court's gratitude but its highest admiration. The sincere purpose to aid, in every possible way, the true and right determination of the cause on the part of these counsel deserves special commendation.

I have given several months' consideration and study to the questions involved. Because of their importance, I have, upon this final hearing, deemed it proper to review, as briefly as possible, the origin of labor Unions in England and the legislation and judicial decisions touching their rights, privileges and obligations in that country as well as under our Federal and local State laws and judicial decisions.

Without tracing the distinction, recognized in England, between Gilds and combinations of common laborers from which spring substantially the Labor Unions of today, it is sufficient to say that the emancipation of the serfs, in the time of Edward III., increased largely the number of laborers and the competition in the labor market, but in the middle of the 14th century when the plague carried off 2,000,000 souls, near half the population of the realm, conditions became reversed—labor became very scarce, food rose in price and higher wages were demanded by labor. In consequence the Statutes of Laborers were passed in 1349 and 1350 fixing wages absolutely for the summer months and authorizing the justices of the peace to fix them for the winter ones. These acts further designed to accomplish the other purpose of tying down the liberated serfs who had become laborers to the soil. A laborer was required under pain of imprisonment to remain in his parish and it was made an offence to refuse to work or to receive or offer higher wages than those fixed by the statutes. These Statutes were passed clearly in aid of the agricultural interests of a Kingdom with limited resources in that regard, seeking to supply food products for its people. They looked especially to the interest of the consuming public and not to those of the laborer. In the reign of Henry VIII, the Monasteries were suppressed and, in consequence, a large number of unemployed persons were turned out to wander over the country. Thereupon the Statute of Apprentices was enacted "in great hope, that being duly executed, it shall banish idleness, advance husbandry and yield unto the hired, both in the time of scarcity and in 762 the time of plenty a convenient proportion of wages." This Act confirmed the former ones regulating work and wages and in addition fixed the hours of labor and required the laborer to secure from the Master a certificate that he had completed his work for him before seeking work in a new district. These Acts fell into desuetude by the beginning of the last century and State regulation of wages became superseded by contractual relationships between master and servant. The result was that labor, which had before that time opposed state regulation of wages, changed front and began petitioning Parliament for such regulation and the enforcement of the Apprentice Act. Human nature is the same substantially yesterday, today, and forever. It was very natural that laboring men, seeking to better their condition in life, should a century ago, clamor for the legislative regulation when work was dull and the laborers many, which they had opposed, the preceding century, when harvests were plenty and laborers few. It is just as natural today that from the vast army of laborers engaged in the coal mining industry constantly depressed by over production, demands should come for legislative enactment of wage scales minimum at least, and in the absence of such legislation, efforts on their part should be made by combination, to achieve the same result. The question always recurs whether either method can best supersede the natural law of supply and demand. The English court at the time manifestly thought not for when organized trade societies, about 1800, instituted actions and sent petitions to Parliament to enforce the Apprentice Act (fixing wages) they held that the Act only applied to industries existing at the time of its passage in 1563, thereby rendering it practically ineffective, and, in 1813, Parliament formally repealed it. During these two and a third centuries the Apprentice Act, fixing wages, necessarily forbade labor combinations having for their purpose the securing of wages beyond the limit fixed by the law.

In addition the common law doctrine of "restraint of trade" rendered such combinations illegal. In 1797 an Act reaffirmed in 1800, known as the Combination Act, was passed, making unlawful every combination seeking to secure advance of wages, to change or decrease the hours of work, to prevent any employer from hiring any one he chose, to prevent workmen hiring themselves, to induce workmen to leave their work to attend any meeting called to advance any of these objects or to spend any money for these purposes.

It is important to pause here and bear in mind that the three charters granted to Virginia in 1606, 1609, 1611-12, all expressly provided that the laws and ordinances enacted by it should 763 conform to those existing and in force in England; that under its six State Constitutions (1776, 1830, 1850, 1864, 1870, and 1902) the fact has always been recognized that the common law of England in force prior to the Revolution was the basic law of the State save and except so far as repealed or modified by either constitutional or legislative enactment; that in the first constitution of West Virginia (1861-3) it is enacted:

Such parts of the common law and of the laws of the State of Virginia as are in force within the boundaries of the State of West Virginia when this Constitution goes into operation, and are not repugnant thereto, shall be and continue the law of this State until altered or repealed by the legislature.

The same provision was incorporated in the Constitution of 1872.

This being true, it is all important to the correct determination of the questions here involved to determine (a) just what the common law was at the time prior to the birth of Virginia as regards these labor organizations and (b) how far that law has been repealed or modified by legislative enactment in Virginia and West Virginia. While there have been very many conflicting decisions in the different states of the Union, it seems to me that the questions are essentially local in character and must be determined by local law. It is certainly an inherent power of each state to determine for itself how law and order shall be maintained and crime punished. This power necessarily carries with it the right to determine what assemblies meeting within its limits are lawful or unlawful, for what lawful purposes organization may be had and for what purposes it may be unlawful to organize and operate within its limits. This inherent power in the State can only be superseded by the very limited power of the National Government to interfere provided for by the Federal Constitution. For this reason it seems clear to me that I must determine what constitutes a lawful organization in West Virginia by its laws and not by either statutes or judicial decisions of other states. What may be lawful in one may be unlawful in another, what may be criminal in one may be permissible in another. In this view of the matter the subsequent legislation and decisions in England become immaterial except so far as they may aid us in defining the true principles of the common law existing prior to 1776 and still existing in this State. It will be sufficient to say that the Combination Act of 1800 was, in 1825, repealed by the English Parliament, and conspiracy alone became the combination liable to prosecution.

For common law conspiracy, a number of the members of 764 trades unions were prosecuted for combining to raise wages and for other of their declared purposes, and convictions were had. In 1856 Crompton declared "that all combinations tending directly to impede and interfere with the free course of trade were not only illegal but criminal." In 1859 Parliament passed an Act more closely defining the offence of "Molestation and obstruction" used in the Act of 1825. It rendered peaceful persuasion to induce workmen to abstain from working, in order to raise their wages, lawful. Was this act necessary because prior to it such persuasion for such purpose under the common law was unlawful? If so has that common law rule been abrogated in West Virginia by subsequent legislation? These questions must be considered later. Under this act of 1859 it was held by the Queen's Bench (1867) by Cockburn, C. J.: "I am very far from saying that the members of a trade union, constituted for the purpose not to work, except under certain conditions, and to support one another in the event of being thrown out of employment, in carrying out the views of the majority would bring themselves within the criminal law, but the rules of the society would certainly operate in restraint of trade, and therefore, in that sense, be unlawful." The labor Unions thereupon secured the passage of the Act of 1871 providing that "the purposes of any trade union shall not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade be deemed to be unlawful, so as to render any member of such trade union liable to criminal prosecution for conspiracy or otherwise." Was this act secured to repeal another common law rule existing prior? If so, has such common law rule been abrogated in West Virginia? If not could Congress, by virtue of its power to regulate Inter-state trade, traffic or commerce interfere with or prevent this State's enforcement of it as regards Intra-state trade? This Act of 1871 was the result of the long agitation preceding which had resulted in the appointment of a Royal Commission by Queen Victoria in 1867 and which commission had made ten preliminary Reports and its final one on March 9th, 1869. As a result the Government introduced a bill to legalize Trade Unions so far as they, being combinations, were in restraint of trade, and in addition the bill included certain clauses which made criminal certain acts of theirs. Objection was made by the Unions to these criminal provisions. The result of the long agitation that followed was that the bill was cut in two, one being 34 & 35 Vict. c. 31 known as the Trade Union Act of 1871, above referred to, the other the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1871 (Stat. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 32). By four years of agitation the Unions secured the appointment of another Royal Com-765 mission which reported in 1875. Following this report Parliament repealed the Criminal Law Amendment Act 1871 (Stat. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 32) and passed the Criminal Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (Stat. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), and in 1876 amended the Trade Union Act, 1871, by an Act known as the Trade Union Act (1871) Amendment Act, 1876, and the two together, it was provided, were to be cited as the "Trade Union Acts 1871, and 1876." The "Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875," was amended by an Act known as the "Trade Disputes Act, 1906," and it was provided that it and the "Trade Union Acts 1871 and 1876" together might be cited as the "Trades Union Acts 1871 to 1906." These embrace the existing Statutory law of England touching Labor Unions.

The Trade Union Act of 1871 provides:

2. The purposes of any trade union shall not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, be deemed to be unlawful, so as to render any member of such trade union liable to criminal prosecution for conspiracy or otherwise.

3. The purposes of any trade union shall not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, be unlawful so as to render void or voidable any agreement or trust.

4. Nothing in this Act shall enable any court to entertain any legal proceedings instituted with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of any of the following agreements, namely:

1. Any agreement between members of a trade union as such, concerning the conditions on which any members for the time being of such trade union shall or shall not sell their goods, transact business, employ, or be employed.

2. Any agreement for the payment by any person of any subscription or penalty to a trade union.

3. Any agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union—

(a) To provide benefits to members, or,

(b) To furnish contributions to any employer or workman not a member of such trade union, in consideration of such employer or workman acting in conformity with the rules or resolutions of such trade union; or,

(c) To discharge any fine imposed upon any person by sentence of a court of justice; or,

4. Any agreement made between one trade union and another; or,

5. Any bond to secure the performance of any of the above-mentioned agreements.

But nothing in this section shall be deemed to constitute any of the above-mentioned agreements unlawful.

766 5. The following Acts, that is to say,

(1) The Friendly Societies Acts, 1855 and 1858, and the Acts amending the same;

(2) The Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1867, and any Act amending the same; and

(3) The Companies Acts, 1862 and 1867, shall not apply to any trade union, and the registration of any trade union under any of the said Acts shall be void, and the deposit of the rules of any trade union made under the Friendly Societies Acts, 1855 and 1858, and the Acts amending the same, before the passing of this Act, shall cease to be of any effect.

Sec. 6 then provides that any seven or more members of a trade union may register such trade union "provided that if any one of the purposes of such trade union be unlawful such registration shall be void."

Section 7 authorizes a registered union or any branch of it under the Act to purchase and lease land not exceeding one acre in the name of trustees, to sell, exchange and mortgage the same; Sec. 8 vests all land and personal property of the union or of its branches in the trustees selected therefor and their successors; Sec. 9 authorizes such trustees to sue and be sued touching the property rights of the union; Sec. 10 limits personal liability of such trustees to funds actually received by them as such; Sec. 11 requires the treasurer of the Union to render to the trustees accounts of moneys, bonds or securities received by him, at such times as the Union rules may prescribe, and, if required, to turn over to the trustees balances in his hands and all books, papers and property of the Union; Section 12 provides for legal enforcement and criminal punishment of any officer, member or other person fraudulently obtaining possession of, withholding or misappropriating funds or property of the Union so registered. Sec. 13 provides the rules of registration to be (1) by an application with printed copies of the Union's rules, and a list of the titles and names of its officers sent to the registrar who (2) shall become satisfied that the Union has complied with the requirements of the Act; (3) that no Union shall register under a name identical or so nearly the same as to deceive, with that of another existing registered union; (4) where the Union has been in operation for more than a year before application made for registration a general statement of the receipts, funds, effects and expenditure of such Union to be delivered to the registrar; (5) the certificate of registry unless proved to have been withdrawn or cancelled to be conclusive that the requirements of the Act have been complied with, (6) one of the Secretaries of State to have power to make regulations 767 from time to time touching details of registration, the forms to be used, the inspection of documents kept by the registrar and the fees to be paid for registration; Sec. 14 provides, (1) that the rules of the Union shall contain provisions in respect to the several matters mentioned in the first schedule of the Act, and, (2) that a copy thereof shall be delivered to any person by the Union on payment of a sum not exceeding one shilling. Sec. 15, that every registered Union shall have a registered office. Sec. 16 that a general statement of the receipts, funds, effects, and expenditures of the Union be, on the first of June of each year, transmitted to the registrar together with any alterations in rules or changes in officers of the Union; Sec. 17, registrars to report annually to Parliament; Sec. 18, making it a misdemeanor to circulate with intent to defraud other than the existing rules of a Union. Sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23 relates to legal proceedings for the enforcement of the fines and penalties provided for in the Act and of definitions of terms used and "The First Schedule" defines six matters to be provided for by the Union's rules. (1) The name and place of meeting for business. (2) The whole of the Union's objects, and the purposes for which its funds shall be applicable, the conditions under which a member may become entitled to benefits and the fines and forfeitures that may be imposed. (3) The manner of making, altering, amending or rescinding the rules. (4) A provision for the appointment and removal of a general committee of management, of trustees, treasurers and other officers. (5) A provision for the investment of the funds, and an annual audit of accounts. (6) Inspection of the books and roll of membership by every person having an interest in the Union's funds. The amendments provided by the Act of 1876 do not change these provisions, but enlarge them by, (1) allowing Unions to pay money on the death of a child under ten years of age. (2) providing for transfer of Union's funds from the estate of a bankrupt trustee to a new trustee. (3) requiring registration by registered Unions in all countries where the Unions operate. (4) regulating the withdrawal and cancellation of registration certificates. (5) allowing one under twenty-one but over sixteen years of age to become a member of a registered Union and providing how funds due him may be paid by the Union. (6) providing how a registered Union may change its name. (7) that two or more Unions may amalgamate and the proceedings necessary thereto. (8) and how a Union may dissolve.

The Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, provides:

An agreement or combination by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation or furtherance 768 of a trade dispute shall not be indictable as a conspiracy if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime.

An act done in pursuance of an agreement or combination by two or more persons shall, if done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, not be actionable unless the act, if done without any such agreement or combination, would be actionable.

Nothing in this section shall exempt from punishment any persons guilty of a conspiracy for which a punishment is awarded by any Act of Parliament.

Nothing in this section shall affect the law relating to riot, unlawful assembly, breach of the peace, or sedition, or any offense against the State or the Sovereign.

It makes it criminal for (1) an employe of a municipality, alone or in combination with others, to break his contract of employment if he has reasonable cause to believe his doing so will deprive the inhabitants of the place wholly or to a great extent of gas or water, (2) to break a contract of hiring when there is reasonable cause to believe the doing so will endanger life, cause serious bodily injury, or expose valuable property, real or personal, to destruction or serious injury. For a master legally bound to furnish his servant with food and clothing to fail to do so where such failure is likely to impair seriously the health of the servant. It then provides:

Every person who, with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing or to do any act which such other person has a legal right to do or abstain from doing, wrongfully and without legal authority—

1. Uses violence to or intimidates such other person or his wife or children, or injures his property; or,

2. Persistently follows such other person about from place to place; or,

3. Hides any tools, clothes, or other property owned or used by such other person, or deprives him of or hinders him in the use thereof; or,

4. Watches or besets the house or other place where such other person resides, or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place; or,

5. Follows such other person with two or more other persons in a disorderly manner in or through any street or road, shall on conviction thereof by a court of summary jurisdiction, or on indictment as hereinafter mentioned, be liable either to pay a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, or to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labor.

769 [Attending at or near the house or place where a person resides, or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place, in order merely to obtain or communicate information, shall not be deemed a watching or besetting within the meaning of this section. (Repealed by section 2, Trade Disputes Act, 1906.)]

The remainder of its provisions relate to the legal proceedings to be pursued in its enforcement, to definitions of its terms and to its application to Scotland and Ireland.

The Trade Disputes Act, 1906, provides:

1. The following paragraph shall be added as a new paragraph after the first paragraph of section three of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875:

'An act done in pursuance of an agreement or combination by two or more persons shall, if done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, not be actionable unless the act, if done without any such agreement or combination, would be actionable.'

2. (1) It shall be lawful for one or more persons, acting on their own behalf or on behalf of a trade union or of an individual employer or firm in contemplation of furtherance of a trade dispute, to attend at or near a house or place where a person resides or works or carries on business or happens to be, if they so attend merely for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information or of peacefully persuading any person to work or abstain from working.

(2) Section seven of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, is hereby repealed from 'attending at or near' to the end of the section.

3. An act done by a person in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute shall not be actionable on the ground only that it induces some other person to break a contract, of employment or that it is an interference with the trade, business, or employment of some other person, or with the right of some other person to dispose of his capital or his labor as he wills.

4. (1) An action against a trade union, whether of workmen or masters, or against any members or officials thereof on behalf of themselves and all other members of the trade union in respect of any tortious act alleged to have been committed by or on behalf of the trade union, shall not be entertained by any court.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the liability of the trustees of a trade union to be sued in the events provided for by the Trades Union Act, 1871, section nine, except in respect of any tor-
770 tious act committed by or on behalf of the union in contemplation or in furtherance of a trade dispute.

In giving this very limited review of the origin and progress of English legislation touching trade unions, I have not stopped to cite authorities. It will be sufficient for me to say that by aid of counsel I have had before me and have consulted the English works, Greenwood on The Law Relating to Trade Unions, Chalmers-Hunt on Trade Unions, Davis' Labour Laws, Wright's Criminal Conspiracies, Webb's History of Trade Unionism, Schlosser and Smith Clark's Legal Position of Trade Unions, Webb's Industrial Democracy, Vol. 14 Enc. Laws of England, The 11th and Final Report of the Royal Commissioners (first Commission appointed) 1869 and Second and Final Report of the Commissioners (second appointed) 1875.

It is somewhat difficult to define the exact status of these Unions under the involved and confusing legislation existing today in England. Their position in the body politic is certainly anomalous. Discussing the Trade Union Act of 1871, Farwell, L. J., in the Taff Vale Case (1901) 1 K. B. 170, says:

A trade union is neither a corporation, nor an individual, nor a partnership between individuals. It is an association of men which almost invariably owes its legal validity to the Trade Union Acts 1871-76 * * * and the Legislature in giving a trade union the capacity to act by agents, has without incorporating it, given it two of the essential qualities of a corporation.

Provisions are made for registered Unions but the acceptance of such provisions is purely voluntary. These registered unions obtain few privileges that are not enjoyed by those unregistered. It is very doubtful whether class legislation of this character could be enacted and enforced in the United States by reason of Constitutional limitations both Federal and State. It is to be always borne in mind that the power to legislate is supreme and unrestricted in the English Parliament, while always limited here by the written Federal and State Constitutions. However we are not called upon to pass upon the constitutionality of such legislation for none such exists under Federal Statute or by laws of West Virginia as we shall presently show. However some limitations in England still exist, under this legislation, upon the acts and proceedings of Union organizations, that tend clearly to establish common law principles 771 existing in this state by which we must be bound. Some of these it seems important to indicate. First—At least, prior to the last Act 1906, which provided by its section three that:

An act done by a person in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute shall not be actionable on the ground only that it induces some other person to break a contract;

it was clearly unlawful for these Unions, by its trustees and officers to induce or procure men to break contracts with their employers. This was distinctly held by the House of Lords in 1901 in the case of Quinn v. Leatham A. C. 495, 70 L. J. P. C. N. S. 76, 65 J. P. 708, 50 Week. Rep. 139, 85 L. T. N. S. 269, 17 Times L. R. 749, and in South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co. (1905) A. C. 239, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 525, 43 Week. Rep. 593, 92 L. T. N. S. 710, 21 Times L. R. 441.

This latter case, as reported in 1 British Ruling Cases 1, will be found to involve closely a similar condition of fact existing here. The Coal Company and seventy-three other plaintiffs brought action against the Miners' Federation, its trustees, officers and certain members of its executive counsel for wrongfully and maliciously procuring and inducing its workmen in the mines to break their contracts of service with the plaintiffs. It appeared that the Federation (a registered trade Union), fearing that the action of merchants and middle men would reduce the price of coal and consequently the rate of wages ordered a "stop day," obeyed by over 100,000 men who took a holiday and thereby broke their contracts of service. Subsequently four additional "stop days" were ordered and the men ceased work in violation of their contracts. It was found this advice to the men on the part of the Federation's Counsel was given without malice. Bigham J. dismissed the action. The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment and awarded damages to the plaintiff (1903) 2 K. B. 545, 72 L. J. K. B. N. S. 893, 89 L. T. N. S. 393, 19 Times L. R. 708. Upon appeal to the House of Lords the Court of Appeal was affirmed and the Federation's appeal dismissed, the Earl of Halsbury, L. C., Lord MacNaghten, Lord James, and Lord Lindley delivering concurring opinions. Good faith was there held to be no justification: "that to combine to procure a number of persons to break contracts is manifestly unlawful." This ruling is in full accord with our American decisions which sustain the right to an injunction against the officers of a labor union to restrain them from inducing members of such organization to strike in violation of their contracts of employment, or which hold them liable 772 in damages therefor. Holder v. Cannon Mfg. Co. (1904) 135 N. C. 392, 47 S. E. 781; Tubular Rivet & Stud Co. v. Exeter Boot & Shoe Co. (1908) 86 C. C. A. 648, 159 Fed. 824; A. R. Barnes & Co. v. Berry (1907) 156 Fed. 72; Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. McKenna, (1887) 30 Fed. 48; Thomas v. Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. R. Co. (1894), 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 788, 62 Fed. 816; Thacker Coal & Coke Co. v. Burke (1906), 59 W. Va., 253, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1091, 53 S. E. 161, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 885. Attached to the report of this last case in 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1091 will be found a very valuable note citing many additional authorities. It would seem clear that section 3, of the English Act 1906 above referred to can only affect the enforcement of this principle in England when a trade dispute is on between the same particular employer and his employes and therefore that no sanction for the claim for the so-called sympathetic strike can be found in it where the breaking of contracts is involved. Second—The Conspiray Act 1875, it will be observed expressly makes criminal all violence and intimidation against any person to prevent him from exercising his legal rights, or against his wife or children, or injury to his property; from persistently following him from place to place; from hiding his tools, clothes or other property or from depriving or hindering in the use thereof; from watching or besetting his house or place of business or the approach thereto; from following such other person with two or more others in a disorderly manner through any street or road.

In detail specification of forbidden acts this English statute possibly has gone farther than many of our American Courts' decisions have gone as regards what shall be considered as intimidation and violence, nevertheless the general principle is the same and is fully recognized in this country as also the right to resort to injunction to stay such violence and intimidation. It is needless to cite the vast number of cases establishing this principle in this country beyond peradventure. Third—It will be noted what stress is laid by this English legislation upon the rules that may be adopted by the Unions. In order for them to have the benefit of registration these rules must be filed with the registrar. All changes therein must be reported and they are to be printed and copies furnished on demand of any one upon payment of a nominal fee. The clear purpose of this publicity is that it may be apparent to the public just how far the Union is lawful in its organization and designs and that the courts, when appealed to, may determine the character of the Union by an examination of its rules. As a result, since these Acts were passed, the English Courts have been called upon to deter-773 mine by such examination whether several of these organizations were lawful or not. From these decisions can be ascertained some very valuable information as to what penalties and obligations can be enforced by these Unions against (a) its own members, (b) against the interests of its members' employers, and, (c) against the interests of the public.

In Chamberlain's Wharf Limited v. Smith (1900) 2 Ch. 605,

The rules of an association, called the Tea Clearing House, the members of which were dock companies and tea warehouse keepers carrying on the business of warehousing tea in bond, provided (rule 11) that every member should charge on teas the respective rates and adhere to the terms and conditions specified in a schedule to the rules, and should not be at liberty to depart from them in any way, except that a discount not exceeding 10 per cent. might be allowed on the said rates. No other discount, no money gratuities, and no advantages, direct or indirect, should be offered or allowed by any member to any merchant, broker, or other person in connection with any matter or thing in any wise relating to the Tea Clearing House agreement.

By rule 14. No subscriber should be entitled to warehouse or deposit tea with, or employ in connection with tea, any dock company or tea warehouse keeper who was not a member of the Clearing House, or to purchase or sample any tea from the warehouse of any non-member.

By rule 15. Any member breaking or failing to observe any of the rules was to be liable to expulsion by resolution of the committee.

The committee passed a resolution expelling the plaintiffs for an alleged breach of the rules and they brought an action against the members of the committee to restrain them from acting on the resolution, on the ground (inter alia) that the plaintiffs had not an opportunity of being heard in their defence. Kekewich J. granted an interlocutory injunction:—

Held, on appeal, that the association was a 'trade union' within the meaning of s. 16 of the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876; that its objects were illegal independently of the Trade Union Act, 1871, and that s. 4 of that Act prevented the Court from directly enforcing the agreement between the members:

Held, also, that by granting the injunction the Court would be directly enforcing the agreement.

The injunction was accordingly dissolved.

774 In Cullen v. Edwin (1903) 88 L. T. 686,

Under the rules of the Amalgamated Society of Tailors it was provided by rule 34, "Trade Regulations," that during slack seasons a fair equitable division of trade shall be compulsory in all shops. That a fair equitable division of trade shall be understood to mean that each man shall get trade to the same value as his fellow man, or as near it as possible. In no shop shall the dual system of piece work and day wage be allowed to exist. No member of this society shall in future be allowed to leave a workshop for the purpose of working outdoors or at home, except by the express permission of his branch committee, such permission only to be granted in case of physical inability to remain in the workshop, and to be in all cases indorsed by a general meeting of the members of the branch. Any member breaking the rules and allowing himself to run out of society and still work for a society shop, the branch shall have full power to deal with the matter as they deem best subject to rules 32 and 33. That a working week shall not exceed fifty-four hours, each district or town to regulate its own time of starting in the morning and leaving off in the evening and that no overtime be worked except in cases of necessity. Time lost on one day cannot be made up on the following or any subsequent day. Members infringing this rule shall be dealt with as the branch directs, subject to rules 32 and 33.

By rule 32 if a member acted contrary to the interests of the society or its rules, he was to be fined or expelled.

Held, that the society was illegal.

This case was heard in King's Bench before Lord Alverstone, C. J., Wills and Channell J.J. all concurring. It was appealed and affirmed by the court of appeal in 1904, 90 L. T. 840, all three of the judges concurring. In his opinion in this case Collins M. R. says:

It is possible for societies to frame rules which contain an element of illegality in them, without at the same time vitiating the whole system. It is possible. It is also possible for them to make rules which are apparently and ostensibly innocuous, and yet may vitiate the whole system, because rightly understood and and considered as a whole, their innocent parts are merely ancillary to that part which is not in point of law deemed to be legal. The question on which side of the line the particular rules of a particular society fall is a question of fact in each case.

775 Again he says:

At common law agreements in restraint of trade are bad, and combinations in restraint of trade are illegal. But the Trade Union Acts have, to a certain extent, and for certain limited purposes, modified the rigor of the common law.

The case of Gozney v. Bristol &c. Trade and Provident Society (1909) 1 K. B. 901 was an appeal from the county court to King's Bench Division and from there to the Court of Appeal—The defendant was to be practically an indemnity company undertaking to pay sick, funeral and death benefits and also benefits to members when on strike. The action was brought to recover such benefits not paid. The County Court held the Society illegal and the action in consequence not maintainable. This action was reversed by the King's Bench and the reversal approved by the Court of Appeal upon the ground expressed by one of the Judges that "this society is just inside the limits of legality" for the reason, as expressed by another of them, that "Provisions to encourage or procure a strike may be illegal. Provisions for the assistance of the victims of a strike may be perfectly legal." In these rules I can find no provisions addressed to the procurement or even sanction of a strike. Channel J. of the King's Bench in his judgment in this case says:

It seems to me that the grounds for suggesting illegality are two. First, there may be illegality in the character of the influence which is exerted, which may amount to unlawful coercion. * * * Secondly, that with which I think we have to do in this case, namely, the doctrine as to restraint of trade. Speaking generally, and without pretending to give an exhaustive definition, that doctrine is that it is unlawful to fetter by agreement the freedom of action of any one engaged in trade, as a trader or an employer or a workman, except so far as such fetter is reasonably necessary for the protection of the person seeking to impose such fetter upon others.

Again he says:

What I think has to be found in order to make the association illegal is that the members agree to submit their own action to the decision of others and to strike or not as directed. That would certainly make the society unlawful, and probably also it would be unlawful if the object is to combine for the purpose of putting pressure on employers and thereby to fetter their freedom of action.

776 In his opinion in the case Fletcher Moulton L. J. says:

To answer this question (of legality of the association) it is necessary to examine the purposes for which the defendant society is formed, and the means whereby it proposes to effect those purposes. If either of these be illegal, it may be necessary to examine more closely into the nature of that illegality to see whether it is of such a kind as to taint the whole constitution of the society and make it an illegal society. * * * It follows, therefore, * * * that the question must be decided entirely by an examination of the contents of the printed book of rules of the society. These rules define its constitution and objects and set forth the detailed rules adopted by it for carrying out those objects.

The case of Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners seems to have been a test one having been appealed to the Court of Appeal and from there to the House of Lords (1910) 1 K. B. 506 and 81 L. J. K. B. 619.

In this case it was held:

Where the rules of a society combined provisions for the militant purposes of a trade union and provisions for the provident purposes of a friendly society, and it was provided by one of the rules that members of the society might be expelled, with the result that they would forfeit all future benefit from the funds of the society, for non-compliance with the decisions of committees directing the militant operations of the society or for violating the recognized trade rules of the district:—

Held, that the main object of the society was illegal at common law, as being in restraint of trade, and that the rules relating to its provident purposes were so inseparably connected with that object as to be affected by its illegality, and therefore unenforceable; and consequently that an action for moneys alleged to have become payable to a member under those rules was not maintainable.

Vaughn L. J. of the Court of Appeal in his opinion says:

It is not every restraint of trade which will render the provisions of an agreement unlawful, in the sense that it cannot be enforced by action at common law. To have that effect a restraint of trade must be such as in some way to prejudice the interests of the community. It may do that in a case where the freedom of contract of an individual is restricted to an unreasonable extent by an agreement which he has entered into, or in a case where the area 777 from which employers, not parties to the agreement, can seek to obtain workmen is unreasonably restricted. It may be observed, in passing, that it cannot be said in the latter case, as it can in the former, that the restraint of freedom of trade arises in consequence of the voluntary action of the party whose freedom is restrained; for, in a case where, for instance, the rules of a trade union prohibit their members from working with non-union men, there is a restraint of trade to the prejudice of employers and workmen other than members of the trade union, quite independently of any action of their own.

And again:

With regard to clause 3, which provides that, where one of the committees of the union therein mentioned considers it to the best interest of the members of the union that they should refuse to work with non-union men, they shall be entitled to trade privileges, it appears to me that this clause does involve a restraint of trade inconsistent with the public interest.

The same observation seems to me to apply to clause 6, the important words of which are those providing that any members who may be withdrawn from their employment on the instruction of one of the committees of the union therein mentioned shall be entitled to trade privileges. The effect of the rules seems to me to be that the members in question must leave work when they are so withdrawn by the instructions of the committee.

Then, again, rule 48, clause 1, appears to me most materal for the purpose of showing that the rules contemplate such a restraint of trade as to render them generally unenforceable in law. [The Lord Justice here read the clause.] In my opinion, that clause, in substance, from beginning to end amounts to such a restraint of trade as necessarily to render its provisions unlawful. It trespasses against the principle of freedom of contract. The workman is not to be allowed to take a sub-contract or do piece-work, or to work in fixing, using, or finishing work which has been made under conditions which the union may consider unfair, and, if he does so, he is liable to be expelled from the union. From every point of view this clause is, in my opinion, of such a character that it must of necessity tend seriously to hamper and restrain trade.

Kennedy L. J. in his opinion in the case says:

The only question before us now is, therefore, as I have said, whether this society is an illegal society at common law. In 778 dealing with that question I will not refer to the rules of the defendant society in detail, as they have been already fully dealt with by the other members of the Court. Speaking generally, what seems to me to be the vice of these rules is that they provide for a restraint of trade, not shown to be reasonable, in that they involve a surrender by the members of the union of their individual freedom of action; for they provide that a member may be expelled from the society, under rule 48, clause 1, with the result that he will forfeit all future benefits, unless he renders passive, or, if required, active obedience to the decrees of certain bodies constituted within the union under the rules.

In his opinion in the House of Lords, Lord Macnaghten in this case says:

The only question, therefore, seems to be this: Is this trade union, apart from the Act of 1871, a lawful association? The answer must depend on a consideration of its purposes as manifested in its rules. It is not every restraint of trade that is unlawful. But I cannot doubt that restraint of trade which is unreasonable, oppressive, and destructive of individual liberty is unlawful. And I cannot help agreeing with the learned Judge of the Court of Appeal that such is the character of some of the rules of this society; and further, that having regard to the constitution of the society, the powers vested in its executive officers, and the blending of its funds for all purposes, it is impossible to separate what is legal from what is not legal.

And in discussing the effect of this Trade Union Act 1871, as suppplemented by the Act of 1876, Lord Robson says:

It is to be observed that the Act did not go the length of abrogating or altering the general law against restraint of trade. It grafted an exception on it in favor of certain classes of persons, but by section 4 it maintained the principle of the old law even against those persons, to the extent of refusing the assistance of the Courts in the direct enforcement of contracts between members of a trade union, when the purposes of the union were in restraint of trade. Had it gone further, and altogether excluded the application of the common law doctrine in this connection, the Courts would have been compelled to give full effect by decree, or injunction, to contracts whereby workmen had bound themselves not to undertake certain legitimate kinds of work, and to refrain, under certain circumstances, from working at their trade at all, except by leave of 779 their union, no matter what their immediate necessities might be. Such contracts would then be as legal as any other by which a man limits his freedom of action for a definite time or purpose, and the prospect of the burden which would thus be cast upon the executive, of actively enforcing great numbers of such contracts in periods of industrial hardship or disturbance, was one from which Parliament might well shrink.

But the operation of section 4 of the Act of 1871 is not confined merely to contracts in restraint of trade. It enacts also that 'Nothing in this Act shall enable any Court to entertain any legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of' (inter alia),

'(3) Any agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union—(a) To provide benefits to members.'

Prima facie, the agreements thus excluded from the benefits of the Act are legal and meritorious, and their exclusion can only be due to the fact that they rest, in some degree, upon a consideration involving a restraint of trade which the law tolerates, but will not directly assist.

See also Mudd v. General Union of Operative Carpenters and Joiners (1910) 103 L. T. 45, and Thomas v. Portsmouth "A" Branch of the Ship Constructive &c. Association reported in the Times Law Reports May 3, 1912, which are to the same tenor and effect.

I have made this review of the English legislation and decisions in regard thereto to make clear the demonstration of these propositions:

First. That these Union combinations under the law must be considered in their three fold relation, (a) to their own members, (b) to those who may employ such members, and, (c) to the public interests.

Second. That in their relations to their respective members they cannot, even under the advanced legislation of England, undertake to require by oath, obligation, constitution, by-law or rule, a surrender by such members of their individual freedom of action; that when they seek to do so they become illegal and, while tolerated in England under her Trade Union Acts, nevertheless there, by reason of their illegality, neither can the Unions enforce such contracts with their members or members with the Unions.

Third. That the question of legality is to be determined from an examination of the Union's Constitutions, by-laws or rules as they may be called, and while some such rules may be lawful, yet if others unlawful in character are of such weight and im-780 portance as to dominate the course of the Union's action, or if the lawful and unlawful ones are so interdependent or intermingled as to render separation, one from the other, impracticable then the organization becomes wholly illegal.

Fourth. That in their relations to the employers of their members, while they may use all peaceful efforts to advance their members' interests, in the way of aiding them to secure better wages, shorter hours of labor and better conditions in which to work, they cannot accomplish these ends by any acts of violence, coercion or intimidation on their part or at their instance. They may not by common law, and in the absence of permissive legislation such as that of the English Act of 1906, interfere with the contracts which their members have entered into and which are existing between an employer and his employees nor by any means induce such employees to break such contract or contracts. To break a legal contract is unlawful, therefore to persuade or induce one to do this unlawful thing is itself unlawful. Further, these Unions have no right, by intimidation or coercion to destroy the inherent right vested in the employer to control his property and conduct his business in any lawful manner he may choose. Such employer may fix the terms and conditions upon which he will give employment; may employ whom he desires, refuse to employ who mit pleases him to deny employment; may discharge (in absence of contract) whom he pleases and refuse to discharge whom he pleases. It is entirely within the right of the Union to advise its members in the absence of contract on their part with the employer to quit their labor for him, to strike in other words, and insist upon other and different terms of employment before they return to labor, but neither the Union or its striking members have any right by intimidation or coercion to prevent other laborers or any of the members of the Union itself from assuming the employment under the employer's terms if they so desire. They may by reasoning and persuasion under such conditions induce its own members and others not to assume the employment where the breaking of no contract is involved, but this is as far as they can go.

Fifth. The relation of these Unions to the public must be considered in dual aspect, (a) as to the non-union laboring class seeking competitive work with the Union's members, and, (b) as to the public generally considered as consumer of labor's product As regards the first class, it is to be remembered that while the membership of organized labor is large the number of non-union laborers in this country and especially in this State is many times greater and it is the law's function and duty to fully, without fear, 781 favor or partiality, protect the rights of the latter as well as those of the former. These rights guarantee to the laborer the absolute right to join the Unions or not as he sees fit. The Unions cannot, under the law, use any means of intimidation or coercion to compel him to do so. The limit of their right in this direction is persuasion. If he joins they cannot compel his continuance in membership. He may withdraw when he desires. The Union members as individuals may voluntarily determine not to work with non-union labor if they so desire, they can cease working themselves on that account, but they can do nothing in the way of intimidation or coercion to compel either other Union men or the non-union men to cease working on the one hand or to prevent the employer from filling their place with other Union or non-union men on the other. The inherent right of the individual laborer to sell his labor, which is his property, in any lawful manner or pursuit and upon such terms and conditions as he may himself determine to be for his personal best interests must be upheld by the law just as fully and freely, regardless of these union organizations, as it is upheld in all the other relations of our civic life. As said by Sir William Erle in his "Memorandum on the Law Relating to Trade Unions" filed with the Eleventh and Final Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1869:

As to combination, each person has a right to choose whether he will labour or not, and also to choose the terms on which he will consent to labour, if labour be his choice. The power of choice in respect of labour and terms, which one person may exercise and declare singly, many after consultation may exercise jointly, and they may make a simultaneous declaration of their choice, and may lawfully act thereon for the immediate purpose of obtaining the required terms; but they cannot create any mutual obligation having the legal effect of binding each other not to work or not to employ unless upon terms allowed by the combination. Any arrangement for that purpose, whatever may be its purport or form, does not bind as an agreement, but is illegal, though not unlawful, on account of restraint of trade, and therefore void. Every party to it, who chooses to put an end to it, is thenceforward as free to claim his own terms for his own labour, as if such arrangement had never been made; and any attempt to enforce, by unlawful coercion, performance of any such supposed agreement, against a party who chooses to break from it and labour or contract for labour upon different terms, is an attempt to obstruct him in the lawful exercise of his right to freedom to trade; and is thus a private wrong; it is also a violation of a duty towards the public—that is 782 to say, of the duty to abstain from obstructing the exercise of the right to the free course of trade. A person can neither alienate for a time his freedom to dispose of his own labor or his own capital according to his own will (see Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 Ell. & Bl. 47), nor alienate such freedom generally and make himself a slave (see the argument of Hargrove in the Negro Sommerset's case, 20 State Trials, 23); it follows that he cannot transfer it to the governing body of a union.

As regards the second aspect, the relation of these organizations to the general public as consumers of the products of capital and labor it must be admitted that, in the absence of special legislation such as that of England, (of doubtful constitutionality at least in this country under the written constitutions, Federal and State, thereof) it is just as unlawful for labor to combine to form a trust or monopoly as it is for capital to do so. The same rule of common law governs the one as the other and the Act of Congress, known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, I conceive to be simply declaratory of this principle. The latest construction of this act by the Supreme Court set forth in the Standard Oil Company v. United States, 221 U. S. 1 and United States v. American Tobacco Company, 221 U. S. 106, is that "it prohibits all contracts and combination which amount to an unreasonable or undue restraint of trade in interstate commerce." By the English authorities, I have hereinbefore cited, it will be perceived that the same doctrine of the "unreasonable" restraint of trade has been applied there as against these labor organizations. Turning our attention to our own country, while it might be interesting to trace the history of these labor combinations in the United States and the decisions of the several states touching their status and rights, it is clearly impracticable to do so within the limits of this opinion. As regards the historical outline too, it has already been well written in an article on "Trade Unions" in 27the Volume of the Encyclopaedia Brittanica (11th Edition 1911) pages 150-153. As regards the court decisions of the several states, it is to be always borne in mind that some of the states have enacted legislation touching these organizations differing in character and extent from each other and that their decisions, based upon and influenced by such legislation, may be found conflicting and confusing as regards each other. For example New York has passed laws excepting trade unions from restrictions on combinations and conspiracies imposed by other statutes or by the common law; and states like Michigan, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Montana 783 and North Carolina have laws excepting them especially from the operation of their Anti-Trust laws. The Texas statute, having a like effect, has been by its Supreme Court, declared unconstitutional. See National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U. S. 115.

On June 1, 1898, an Act of Congress was approved, Ch. 370, 30 Stat. L. 424, providing for arbitration of controversies between common carriers in interstate commerce and their employees. The Act was permissive and not mandatory in character as to whether such arbitration should be submitted to by the parties concerned. Its 10th section, however, provided:

That any employer subject to the provisions of this Act and any officer, agent, or receiver of such employer who shall require any employee, or any person seeking employment, as a condition of such employment, to enter into an agreement, either written or verbal, not to become or remain a member of any labor corporation, association, or organization; or shall threaten any employee with loss of employment, or shall unjustly discriminate against any employee because of his membership in such a labor corporation, association, or organization; or who shall require any employee or any person seeking employment, as a condition of such employment to enter into a contract whereby such employee or applicant for employment shall agree to contribute to any fund for charitable, social or beneficial purposes; to release such employer from legal liability for any personal injury by reason of any benefit received from such fund beyond the proportion of the benefit arising from the employer's contribution to such fund; or who shall, after having discharged an employee, attempt or conspire to prevent such employee from obtaining employment, or who shall, after the quitting of an employee, attempt or conspire to prevent such employee from obtaining employment, is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in the district in which such offense was committed, shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and not more than one thousand dollars.

This section was held unconstitutional and void in United States v. Scott, 148 Fed. 431, Order of R. R. Telegraphers v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 148 Fed. 437 and in Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161.

In this latter case the Supreme Court holds such a provision "to be an invasion of personal liberty, as well as of the right of 784 property, guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States." This leaves the Act of June 29, 1886, Ch. 567, 24 Stat. L. 86, 7 Fed. Stat. Ann. 334, entitled "An Act to legalize the incorporation of National Trade Unions," as our only Federal law in amendment or modification of the Common Law upon the subject of Trade Unions. This statute has been construed by Jenkins, Circuit Judge, in Farmers Loan & Trust Co. v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 60 Fed. 803. At page 816, he says:

It was asserted in the argument with great confidence that the act of congress entitled 'An act to legalize incorporation of national trades' unions' (24 Stat. c. 567) had entirely changed the common law. I think the confidence of counsel in the assertion of the proposition was born of zeal, not of judgment. The statute provides for the formation of national trades' unions, with power to establish constitution, rules and by-laws to carry out its lawful objects, and defines the term 'national trades' union' to be 'an association of working people having two or more branches in the states or territories of the United States for the purpose of aiding its members to become more skillful and efficient workers, the promotion of their general intelligence, the elevation of their character, the regulation of their wages, and their hours and conditions of labor, the protection of their individual rights in the prosecution of their trade or trades, the raising of funds for the benefit of the sick, disabled or unemployed members, or the families of deceased members, or for such other object or objects for which workingmen may lawfully combine, having in view their mutual protection or benefit. The most that can be claimed for this statute is that it removes the common-law disability of combination to raise the price of labor, and to establish the conditions of labor. It contains no suggestion of any right to combine or conspire with a view to injure or oppress or interfere with the rights of others. The organization of labor for the purpose specified in the statute is lawful and commendable, but the statute does not sanction the use of a lawful organization for an unlawful purpose. Nor does it permit such organization to invade the rights of others. Under this act, labor may organize to regulate wages, the hours of labor, and the conditions of labor, and for the protection of individual rights in the prosecution of labor; but such lawful organization cannot be employed to injure property, or for the oppression of others, or to harm the public welfare. There is nothing in the statute which sanctions that which the law, as above declared, condemns.

785 It was also construed in Arthur v. Oakes, (C. C. A. 7th Ct.) 63 Fed. 310, 11 C. C. A. 209, where Mr. Justice Harlan says:

Some reference was made in argument to the act of congress of June 29, 1886, legalizing the incorporation of national trade unions, 24 Stat. 86, c. 567. It is not perceived that this reference is at all pertinent to the present discussion. That act does not in any degree sanction illegal combinations. It recognizes the legal character of any association of working people having two or more branches in the states or territories of the United States, and established 'for the purpose of aiding its members to become more skillful and efficient workers, the promotion of their general intelligence, the elevation of their character, the regulation of their wages and their hours and conditions of labor, the protection of their individual rights in the prosecution of their trade or trades, the raising of funds for the benefit of the sick, disabled, or unemployed members of the families of deceased members, or for such other object or objects for which working people may lawfully combine, having in view their mutual protection or benefit.' Associations of that character are authorized to make and establish such constitutions, rules, and by-laws as they deem proper to carry out their lawful objects. Those objects, as defined by congress, are most praiseworthy, and should be sustained by the courts whenever their power to that end is properly invoked. What we have said about illegal combinations has no reference to such associations, but only to combinations formed with the intent to employ force, intimidation, threats, or other wrongful methods whereby the public will be injured, or whereby will be impaired the absolute right of individuals, whether belonging to such combinations or not, to dispose of their labor or property upon such terms as to them seem best.

The only statute of West Virginia relating to these Trade Unions that could be held to be in amendment or modification of the common law in force in the State, is the Act of the Legislature of 1907, reg. ses. c. 78, sec. 19 (Code Supp. 1909 Sec. 113a1), which reenacted the latter clause of Sec. 113 Code 1906, Code 1899, p. 1053, Sec. 14. This Statute has been construed by the Supreme Court of Appeals in Thacker Coal & Coke Company v. Burke, 59 W. Va. 253, 53 S. E. 161 wherein Brannon, J. speaking for the court, says:

The defendants rely on Code, 1899, p. 1053 Section 14, reading as follows: 'Nor shall any person or persons or combination 786 of persons by force, threats, menace or intimidation of any kind, prevent or attempt to prevent from working in or about any mine, any person or persons who have the lawful right to work in or about the same, and who desires so to work; but this provision shall not be so construed as to prevent any two or more persons from associating themselves together under the name of Knights of Labor, or any other name they may desire, for any lawful purpose, or from using moral suasion or lawful argument, to induce any one not to work on and about any mine. This statute is a penal, criminal statute; for it makes the acts in it specified unlawful, and by section 17 imposes a punishment. This is a criminal act. It does not pretend to create rights between individuals. It prohibits certain acts, and the proviso simply curtails the scope of the enactment by saying that the enacting clause shall not be construed to impair any right already existing, if existing, to join the organizations therein specified or use moral suasion. It is only a curb upon the enactment. It does not affirmatively grant, create, or originate those rights. It does not make them lawful, if before unlawful. And could the legislature authorize any person to violate a contract?

In State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 10 S. E. 285, the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia says:

The rights of every individual must stand or fall by the same rule of law that governs every other member of the body politic under similar circumstances; and every partial or private law which directly proposes to destroy or affect individual rights or does the same thing by restricting the privileges of certain classes of citizens and not of others, when there is no public necessity for such discrimination, is unconstitutional and void.

And in Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co., 221 U. S. 418, Mr. Justice Lamar speaking for the court says:

Society itself is an organization, and does not object to organizations for social, religious, business, and all legal purposes. The law, therefore, recognizes the right of working-men to unite and to invite others to join their ranks, thereby making available the strength, influence, and power that come from such association. By virtue of this right, powerful labor unions have been organized.

But the very fact that it is lawful to form these bodies, with multitudes of members, means that they have thereby acquired a vast power in the presence of which the individual may be helpless. This power, when unlawfully used against one, cannot be met, except by his purchasing peace at the cost of submitting to terms which involve the sacrifice of rights protected by the Constitution; or by standing on such rights, and appealing to the preventive powers of a court of equity. When such appeal is made, it is the duty of government to protect the one against the many, as well as the many against the one.

Further citation of authority would seem to be unnecessary to establish the proposition that under Federal legislation and that of West Virginia the common law is in full force and that the several propositions I have set forth are the principles of law to govern in the determination of this case. Before applying these principles to this particular organization and case, I cannot, in view of the extended quotations from labor leaders and advocates contained in the brief of counsel for defendants, but disclaim the sentiment expressed by such leaders, to the effect that either the legislative bodies or the courts of this country, Federal or State, have been or are unfriendly to labor organizations. The contrary is true. The statute books are full of laws for the benefit of labor, to better their conditions, to insure their health, safety and their lives. Organized labor is entitled to all praise for the effective work done in aid of securing these laws. And the courts of the country have been prompt in fully and effectively enforcing such laws.

All labor unions, organized for lawful purposes, and striving to achieve those purposes by lawful means and procedure, are entitled to the protection of the law to the fullest extent, but on the other hand any and all combinations, labor or otherwise, organized for unlawful purposes, or being lawful in purpose which are prostituted to unlawful proceeding and to the accomplishment of unlawful ends, should be required either to reform their unlawful purposes, cease from their unlawful procedure or cease to exist. And no part of the body politic is or can be more vitally interested in the suppression of labor organizations unlawful in purpose or proceeding unlawfully than the members of such organizations lawful in purpose and procedure. In determining the character of this International Mine Workers' Union assailed in this case, as disclosed by the near 8,000 pages of evidence, for reasons that will more fully appear hereafter, I purpose to reverse the order and consider first its relation to the general public and especially to the citizenship of West Virginia. It appears clearly established that in 1898 this organization had a membership of over 30,000 the bulk of which resided in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois; that in that year 788 they sought and secured a joint conference with an organization of coal operators, the employers of its members, in these states; such conference was had and as a result a distinct agreement was entered into. From the stenographic report (admitted to be correct) of the "Proceedings of Joint Conference of Coal Operators and Coal Miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana," subsequently held in Cincinnati, March 8-29, 1910, filed in this cause as "McKinley's Exhibit No. 1" the purport of this Chicago Agreement is fully disclosed. In reply to certain propositions presented by the defendant here, Mr. Lewis, then President of the Union, Mr. Maurer of Ohio read on behalf of the operators a statement from which I quote:

The answer of the operators to the proposition of the miners, in order to be thoroughly understood, makes it necessary to recall the history of wage agreements, and trace with brevity the conditions under which we have from time to time met as operators and miners and effected such agreements, so as to show connectedly the factors which have controlled both parties up to the present time.

In the years prior to any substantial agreement the conditions of the mining industry were very unsatisfactory in their influence upon both the operators of the mines and the miners in the various competitive districts. A remedy for this state of chaos was earnestly sought by both parties, and resulted in the early '80's in agreements between the operators and miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. In 1886 the institution of contracts between miners and operators was effected. These contracts operated with varying degrees of success and failure for some years and until about the year 1894, when these relations were dissolved. The conditions again took on an aspect of demoralization, which continued with varying degrees of intensity, numerous strikes, lockouts and consequent loss in wages and profits and sometimes injuries to property, until in the year 1898.

During this period the conditions were such, both as to the price received for coal by operators and the price paid to the miners, that it became imperative for the interests of each to re-establish in some form the former agreements. At this time the basing price of the Hocking district was 56 cents per ton for screened lump coal. For a short time immediately preceding that year, the mining rate was 51 cents. The working hours in the districts, parties to the early agreements, were from nine and a half to ten hours per day.

The chief evil was the fact that districts which did not recognize the United Mine Workers and had no agreements with them produced coal much more cheaply than those districts which sus-789 tained contractual relations with that organization. Some of the more important factors influencing these conditions were different methods of producing coal, varying costs of mining, different hours of labor, different sized screens, not mentioning various other elements.

In order to correct these most harmful conditions a joint convention of operators and miners of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, at the solicitation of the miners' officials, was called to meet at Chicago in January, 1898. At this convention an interstate joint agreement was established. After a long session of deliberation and negotiation, continuing over a period of about three weeks, the basing price for mining in Ohio and Pennsylvania was increased from 56 to 66 cents per ton, an advance of practically 18 per cent, and both the existing price and method of screening and weighing of coal was made uniform throughout the entire territory covered by the terms of the contract. As a result of the Chicago convention a representative meeting was subsequently held at Columbus, at which a uniform day-wage scale was established for inside labor. All of these concessions made by the operators were of substantial benefit to the miners.

In addition to the advance in the price of mining and the other important concessions enumerated, the action of this convention had an effect of the most far-reaching and salutary character, not alone for the mine workers, but for the entire labor world, in the recognition of eight hours as constituting a day's labor, this being the first recognition of the eight-hour day by any large body of employers in the United States.

The granting of the eight-hour day by the operators, after making these numerous other important concessions, was with the distinct understanding and explicit promise of the miners to give to the operators of the four contracting states adequate protection against the competition of the unorganized fields. From year to year they have been called upon to fulfill that promise.

The operators, parties to that agreement, at the time of its execution felt that it was absolutely necessary to the safety of their investments that they be protected from the encroachments upon them by their competitors of the unorganized fields. The tonnage of the non-union fields entering into the competitive market, particularly of West Virginia and Kentucky, at that time was not so large, as it was aggressive and threatening, the total tonnage entering directly into competition from those fields being approximately 600,000 tons. Since, however, coal from this unorganized territory coming into direct competition with Ohio and Pennsylvania has so increased that a fair estimate places this competitive tonnage at 8,000,000
790 tons, which does not include the tonnage from non-union fields adjacent to the Pittsburg district. The markets in western and northern Ohio, eastern Indiana, and Michigan, from year to year have been encroached upon by coal from the unorganized districts until at the present time nearly 50 per cent of the coal consumed in these markets is supplied from fields operated with non-union labor. To find a market for the union tonnage displaced in the territory named, the mine owners of Ohio and Pennsylvania within the past five years, have made heavy investments and built and equipped large coal docks to secure the markets at the upper lake ports; but these operators now find the non-union coal rapidly commanding a heavy percentage of this market, when, at the time of the Chicago agreement the non-union fields had but a small fraction of this trade, and unless these conditions are corrected the markets so secured will soon be replaced by the tonnage from West Virginia and Kentucky.

Though in the very heart of the consuming territory, on account of the wide difference between the price of labor in the organized fields of Ohio and Pennsylvania and the unorganized fields of West Virginia, Kentucky and the fields adjacent to the Pittsburg district, Ohio and western Pennsylvania are rapidly losing the markets at their very doors.

It is evident to any candid observer that such unfair conditions should not be imposed upon the operators and miners of the unionized territory. That the interests of operators and miners are mutual in every respect does not admit of controversy. Each is equally concerned in rescuing this business from its present peril.

Finally, we ask for the fulfillment of the pledge of 1898 upon which we made to the miners so many important and costly concessions. Though that promise has not been kept, we have continued for twelve years to make additional concessions by increasing the mining price from 66 cents agreed upon at that time to 90 cents, and in other respects conceding demands without any compensating concessions upon the part of the miners, until we now find ourselves at the limit of financial safety. The operators can make no further concessions. It is now, in our view, not only to the interest of the miners, but their duty, as well, to do their share to meet these conditions.

The Chicago agreement and its purposes as set forth by Maurer were subsequently admitted. In proof of this I quote from the remarks of Mr. Green, a defendant here, as follows:

Our friend, Mr. Maurer, in the well prepared statement he has submitted to this convention, referred to an obligation he 791 claims was assumed by the United Mine Workers of America in the meeting at Chicago in 1898. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we agreed that to a certain extent that was right; but I do not believe it was ever understood that one party to this contract was obligated exclusively to carry out that promise. I believe it was intended to be a mutual understanding and that both sides would co-operate in trying to organize West Virginia and other non-union districts in order to extend this business like basis of adjusting our differences to those fields.

Let me point to the fact that the United Mine Workers of America have diligently and aggressively attempted to carry out the promise made in Chicago in 1898; that they have done everything in their power to redeem any promise they may have made to organize West Virginia. Since 1898 our organization has at various times spent hundreds of thousands of dollars trying to unionize West Virginia. We have also sacrificed human life in the attempt to redeem that promise. In view of the fact that we have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars and that our organizers, our members who have gone there as missionaries in an attempt to redeem that promise have sacrificed their lives and their liberties, we should be given credit for what we have done. I want to ask the operators how much money they have spent and what they have done to aid us to organize West Virginia.

Is the fact that we have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars appropriated from the small earnings of our people in the Central Competitive Field, and the fact that we have sacrificed the liberty of some of our members any evidence that we have tried to redeem that promise? Does not that show that we have honestly, sincerely and diligently attempted to redeem it? I believe, gentlemen, that if the operators had done one-half as much as the miners have done, if they had even co-operated with us in what we have done, West Virginia would be organized and the operators and miners of that state would be here today participating in this joint movement.

The "plea in the nature of confession and avoidance" contained in the last paragraph of Mr. Green's argument had been advanced by Mr. Lewis and was urged by him in these words:

We want to say, and we say it kindly but positively to the gentlemen on the other side of the house, 'Get together' and organize, not only in Ohio and West Virginia—and I know a lot of you have influence enough over there, if you do as much work as we do, to organize them.'

792 But at the same time, it is manifest that he recognized the danger of the public declaration of such purpose for, prior in the discussion, he had said:

If I have a proper conception of this movement it means the uplifting of the industry. If I have a proper conception of this movement it does not mean that either operators or miners can publicly say, 'We will organize West Virginia in order that the miners of Ohio or Indiana can get more work.' That has done more to prevent the organization of West Virginia than anything I know of. Coupled with that is the attitude of Ohio and Western Pennsylvania, probably of Indiana, and I know of some Illinois operators who have gone to West Virginia and have built human fences around their properties. I mean by that that they surround their properties with pickets, men who, even when the organizers of the United Mine Workers want to walk along a country or township road passing through the properties, is met at the property line and compelled to state what his business is before he can walk on the public highway. Men will say that that is not possible in a free country, but I say it is possible. It is possible in some mining districts in this country, and I believe they are in the United States, because they are in West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and a few places in Pennsylvania.

I further quote from the remarks of Mr. Feehan of Pennsylvania, another member and representative of the Union, as follows:

We are unwilling that the non-union operators and miners of West Virginia or of any other coal field shall set the standard of prices and the standard of living for the intelligent operators and miners engaged in the mining industry in the states that are represented here. I believe that is the honest opinion of all the operators who are present. It is unnecessary for me to refer to the fact that many of the operators who are represented here in this joint conference have interests in West Virginia and in other non-union coal fields whose products are going into the markets they are complaining of. It is true that they have contributed, with the other operators who are engaged in the industry in those states and districts, to keep the organization from obtaining a hold or becoming a factor in the industry of those fields, of which they complain. If they will withdraw their objections to the establishment of the organization in those fields, I am sure they would not be confronted with 793 those conditions, and we would be able to remove the evil in a very brief time. The practices resorted to by the non-union operators of West Virginia are un-American.

Also from Mr. Maurer's reply:

We have a condition confronting this convention as grave as confronted the convention that met in Chicago in 1898. We have this great tonnage from the unorganized fields of West Virginia and Kentucky that is absolutely taking away from us our markets and taking away the employment which belongs to you. It is a condition that not one of us must meet, but that both of us must meet, not only for our protection but for your protection as well. The cost of living is only incident to it, and the mine-run basis is only incident to it. Every man who swings the pick will agree with me that we can pay you more for mining coal than we can get for the product of your labor. And I am going to put up to you, I am willing to concede to this convention, that West Virginia is not organized; that for ten or twelve long years the miners have done everything in their power to organize that field, and that they did it diligently and earnestly is admitted, nevertheless that field today is unorganized. Nobody is to blame. Neither the operator nor the miner is to blame for that condition; but it is a condition that we must meet and each one bear his share of the burden. Eight million tons of the coal from that unorganized state is today taking away from you the product of your labor, and taking away from the operator every cent of profit he ever had in the business. You cannot correct that. You may say to us, 'You must get together and agree upon prices; you must get the West Virginia operators in and agree upon a price.' Why, every man who stands here knows that if the operators in the State of Ohio attempt it they do so in violation of the Valentine law and that the penitentiary stares them in the face. Every miner here knows that if in the States of Ohio and West Virginia the operators were to attempt anything of the kind, they would violate, not only the Valentine law of Ohio, but they would violate the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. It is easy to tell us what to do, but you should also tell us how to do it. Does any miner here believe that the operators of the State of Ohio have not tried to get the best price they can for their commodity? We have some interest in our business, we have our money invested in it, and I assure you that for two years the miners and the railroads have got every cent there was in it, and more too.

However, we stayed in the market, we gave you employment.

Now it is up to the miners of this state to meet those con-
794 ditions and bear their share of that burden. I want to tell you here that if the miners of the State of Ohio insist on an increased price of their coal they will lose every bit of business they have on the Great Lakes. You have already lost your commercial business. Who supplies Michigan today with commercial coal? Who supplies Detroit? Who supplies Toledo? Who supplies Marion. Who supplies Columbus, right in the heart of the Hocking District? Who supplies Eastern Indiana? Who supplies all of Western Ohio? Tell me, tell me, you miners from the Hocking Valley who have seen your mines lay while West Virginia coal in train load lots has gone past your mines! Tell me, you miners in Eastern Ohio, who have stood idly by and watched Fairmont coal in train load lots taking your markets! Ninety per cent of that market is supplied by West Virginia coal from the non-union fields. I say to you the cost of living does not enter into this. I say to you these other elements did not enter into this. I say to you that the best price we can get for our coal under competitive conditions will not admit of it.

You miners who mined coal in the State of Ohio, and, if you please, in Western Pennsylvania, know that every bit of the trade I refer to was formerly supplied by Ohio and Pennsylvania even down to the gas business, but it is now supplied by West Virginia.

And from Mr. Lewis' rejoinder:

Now the argument is made that we ought to turn our attention to West Virginia and stop the competition from that state. I admit that argument is good; but in order for that argument to have strength it is necessary for the operators at home to stop the kind of guer-illa warfare they have among themselves.

Mr. Maurer has very well said—and I am glad he has brought the subject up—that we say to the operators, 'Get a better price for your coal in order that you can pay us a better price for our labor.' Then he supplements that statement, and very properly, by the statement that if they were or organize to get better price for their coal they would be haled into court under the provisions of the Valentine law of Ohio and possibly sent to the penitentiary. Probably we would too. He supplements that statement by asking us to tell them how to get a better price for their coal. I am going to tell you. First, stop making war on the railroads. The poor fellows need help! And this proposition is going to be no joke. I recognize what the mining industry is; I recognize that it is more im-795 portant than transportation. I recognize that the Valentine law of the State of Ohio was put on the statute books by a lot of political demagogues who believe they were working in the interests of the dear people—and they did it once for the dear people and about twenty times for themselves! I recognize that this industry does not occupy the plane among the industries of the country that it ought to occupy, because we have met in joint conventions year after year and discussed our wage relations instead of devoting some of our time to going out and telling certain people to keep their hands off our business. The railroad companies of this country say to the mine owners, 'We want our fuel at a certain rate.' The mine owners, in order to get a part of the fuel trade of the railroads, put down the prices in some instances to cost, not because of competition, but because of your desire to get a part of that trade. Then after securing a part of that trade the official representatives of the railroads are in so close touch with the leaders of the manufacturing industries of our country that the steam trade, as we call it, buys fuel almost at as cheap a price as the railroad company. Then in order to make ends meet somebody must pay a better price, and it is usually the domestic consumers, the masses of the people. And that is where the political demagogues get their work in, because they are the people who have votes and that is why they have anti-conspiracy laws placed on the statute books.

Mr. Chapman, of Ohio, an operator, contributed to the discussion some figures as follows:

It is an admitted fact that there is a difference today of between 40 and 50 cents per ton in the cost of production of coal in the union fields of Ohio and the non-union fields of the trade east and south of us in West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama, and three of those states, gentlemen, are competitors in the markets of Ohio coal—West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee.

The production of West Virginia for 1907 was 40,043,311 gross tons, 44,091,000 being net tons. In 1908 the production was 44,091,000 net tons. In 1909 the production was 44,495,000 net tons.

Ohio's production for 1907 was 32,365,949 net tons; in 1908, 26,287,800 net tons, and in 1909, 27,756,172 net tons.

There are some more interesting statistics connected with this proposition. The following are the numbers of days the miners worked in West Virginia during the years from 1904 to 1909: 1904, 209; 1905, 213; 1906, 237; 1907, 234; 1908, 211; 1909, 192;

796 making an average of 216 days of ten hours per day, or a total of 2,160 hours' work each year. Reduced to eight hours per day would be an average of 270 days each year. Ohio worked in 1904, 154 days; 1905, 171; 1906, 175; 1907, 204; 1908, 157; 1909, 165 days, an average for the six years of 173 days, or ninety-seven days less than the average work in West Virginia on the eight hour basis.

And then said:

Now, gentlemen, it is useless, after the discussions that have taken place here by the gentlemen who preceded me, to discuss at any great length the market that the non-union fields have taken from Ohio in the past. It has been well said that they are putting coal into Columbus, into Michigan, into Detroit, taking the markets that heretofore have been enjoyed by Ohio coal. In the city of Athens, Ohio, which is within three miles of several of the large producing Hocking Valley mines, West Virginia coal is being sold. The gentlemen who are familiar with the situation have informed me that over 2,000 tons of West Virginia coal was sold there between the first of September and a short time ago. Even in the town of Logan, one of the points where Hocking Valley gathers its trains to start its coal out to the markets they have, West Virginia is taking that market. The gentlemen who were in the Toledo convention and returned on the Hocking Valley train, if they had their eyes open, would have seen full solid trains of Norfolk and Western coal passing up over that road to Toledo. There was not a single car of Hocking Valley coal in the trains. At the town of Bowling Green, twenty miles south of Toledo, when I came through a few weeks ago, I saw every car of coal standing on the side tracks were loaded with West Virginia coal.

Think of the proposition, gentlemen! Toledo, the central point at which several Ohio coal roads brings everything and 60 per cent or more of the coal being consumed there is from West Virginia! The Pennsylvania people have a road coming in there, the Wheeling and Lake Erie have a road coming in there, the Toledo and Ohio Central goes in there, the Hocking Valley goes in there, and the D. T. & I. goes in there on a direct line. Now just consider that proposition for a minute, and is it any wonder that Ohio coal operators and interests are in the condition they are today with that state of affairs?

It is well said by Mr. Lewis and Mr. Penna that people buy their fuel where they can buy it cheapest. I am not through with the proposition. I want to bring you to the city we are now holding 797 this convention in and give you a few figures. In 1897 Pittsburg shipped by river 1,401,000 tons of coal to the city of Cincinnati. The Kanawha region shipped by river 717,000 tons of coal. The Kanawha fields shipped by rail 704,000 tons. The other interests from West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee shipped here 275,400 tons. Now we will come to the year 1908.

Pittsburg District shipped 535,000 tons to the city of Cincinnati in 1908 as against 10,041,000 (manifestly a mistake—should be 1,401,000) in 1897. Kanawha shipped by river 867,000 tons in 1908, as against 717,000 tons in 1897, and Kanawha shipped by rail in 1908 1,848,000 tons, as against 462,000 in 1897. The Pocahontas District, the Tennessee and Alabama fields shipped in 1908 by rail 1,512,000 tons to the city of Cincinnati as against 275,400 in 1907.

The reasons why West Virginia coals are able to supplant those of Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois, operations in which both sides of this conference were so vitally interested, are contributed by both operator and mine representative.

By Mr. Chapman, operator:

It is not surprising that West Virginia is on a mine-run basis. Why? Because a large per cent of all the fine coal that is produced in that state is made into coke. They even crush the lump coal after the- produce it to make coke, which is — much more valuable product to them and yields them more returns than the raw coal will. We haven't any of those coals in Ohio or Indiana and they have none of them in Western Pennsylvania outside of the coking coal as it is known there.

By Mr. Feehan, mine representative:

There is one point I want to bring out that has not been made clear, and that is the disadvantage the operators of Eastern Ohio are put to in competing for the markets against the operators who have interests in West Virginia, and that is the character of the veins. In West Virginia, it is not an uncommon thing to have them develop from six to ten feet of clean coal. There is no slate to remove; it is easily mined; it is a good grade of coal; it can find a market; and when you take into consideration the cost of producing a ton of that coal compared with the little five-foot vein of coal in Eastern Ohio with its many impurities and its thick slate, and the Pittsburg District, with its weak roof, where in many cases it is difficult to operate a machine, as well as many other natural disadvantages the 798 operators have, herein lies the cause of the competition more than in the cost of labor. The cost of labor is not the important factor that is crowding the eastern Ohio operators out of the market on the lakes or elsewhere. It is the natural disadvantages that is doing it. There is one advantage the operators in Eastern Ohio have, and that is their geographical situation. They are nearer the lake markets and other markets, and I believe they have an advantage of from 15 to 25 cents a ton in freight rates. I understand that when the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission goes into effect they will have even greater advantages in freight rates. It is fortunate for them that they have these advantages. Were it not for their advantages in the matter of freight rates I am positive that many of the veins of coal now being worked in Ohio and elsewhere would be abandoned, and they would wait until the big veins with the greater natural advantages in West Virginia were worked out before they would again operate there. These factors have not been seriously enough considered heretofore.

By Mr. Chapman:

In 1907 and 1908 the miners earned more money in West Virginia at the prices they were paid there than were earned in Ohio.

In fact they earned from one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars more to the man. That tells the tale concerning that matter. * * *

The coals of West Virginia are said to be mined at about one-half the cost of producing Ohio coals and the West Virginia product has taken the Ohio markets to the full extent permitted by the difference in transportation expenses, leaving Ohio coals only such markets as may be near the mines, and as the means of transportation increases by which West Virginia coals are put farther into Ohio markets, the prospect of the Ohio mines is not bright.

I quote further from the remarks of Mr. Savage, one of the defendants here, as follows:

Mr. Savage, Ohio: I was surprised a minute ago to hear that some of the operators were not in sympathy with the men in trying to get a readjustment of their freight rates in Ohio. I know as one miner we did all we possibly could in giving testimony before the commission in Columbus, and from what I heard then I believed, and I believe now, that the operators were absolutely right in asking for this readjustment. I believe I can assure you that we will help you in every manner that we can to get that readjustment.

799 But we would ask you, on the other hand, if we are willing to help you—and by helping you we agree we are helping ourselves—if you operators from Ohio and Pennsylvania will lend us the same assistance in West Virginia in getting the mining price up so that competition will not prevail. When we ask that what do we find? Operators have told me in years past that they were willing to have the miners organized in Ohio, but they were not willing that their miners should be organized in West Virginia. We find as great opposition on the part of the operators from this State who have mines in West Virginia as we find from the operators resident there. If we are going to work along the line of mutual benefit, let us make West Virginia a union state. Go down there and practice what you preach in Ohio. Help us get the protection of the law in that State and I think we can organize the miners. Instead of helping us, what have you done? You have done nothing but retard the progress of our organization in that State. The reason they have assigned to me for their attitude was that the calibre of the men employed in the mines of West Virginia was such that if they were organized it would be impossible to control them. I believe that a large percentage of those men are as intelligent as we are, and once they understand the benefits of the organization and the benefits of the contract we enter into, they will observe thos contracts as religiously as the miners in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana or any other State.

And finally from Mr. Zerbe of Ohio, an operator:

A very considerable amount of censure and criticism has been put upon some operators who are here because of the fact that they have gone to West Virginia and found investments. I will remind the other side of the house that the men who have gone into Virginia are business men; they are engaged in the coal industry, and they bring the commodity from one state or another to furnish fuel for such contracts as they take. They have found by experience that you as an organized body are not treating them fairly where they are circumscribed in the production of this commodity. They find that you are putting upon them burdens in the organized fields that do not exist in the unorganized fields. By reason of the fact that you cannot control in the producion of this commodity, although we are willing to admit you have made an effort, their market is being taken from them or restricted or narrowed, and many of them in self-defense find it necessary, in order to carry out contracts and fulfill their obligations to those who take this 800 commodity from them, to go to West Virginia and invest in properties there that they may continue a business for which they are obligated. * * *.

We might argue this up one side and down another for a year and we would be no nearer a solution of this proposition. We are, when we get through, right up against the one proposition we cannot get through which has been created by the competition brought to bear against us by the operators and the miners of West Virginia in the unorganized field.

It is impossible to deny the conclusions to be drawn from all this. By reason of the natural advantages in the way of superior veins, roofs and quality, West Virginia coals can be mined for something like fifty per cent less than those of Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois, and then even, her miners can make better wages; the officers and members of this Union are almost wholly resident of Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois; in 1898 as an organization they entered into a direct contract with the operators of that field for and in consideration of an eight hour labor day and other concessions, to organize the West Virginia miners and, by reason of the control they would have under the Union's laws over such miners when so organized, "protect" these operators in Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois from the existing open competition even then threatening the markets of such operators especially in the West and the Lake regions. For the purpose of carrying out the agreement, this labor organization has, in the language of the defendant, Green, one of its officers, "at various times spent hundreds of thousands of dollars trying to unionize West Virginia" and "sacrificed human life in the attempt to redeem that promise." Was this in the interest of and for the bettering of mine laborers in West Virginia? It is impossible to see how it could be for in this conference between the operators and the Union representatives in March, 1910, as we have shown, direct statistics were given by Mr. Chapman and not controverted, showing that the West Virginia miners, unorganized, were getting more work and more wages than miners in this Unionized field in Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois. In illustration of this, it seems to me that I may properly refer to conditions as they exist today, as disclosed by a public report made to the Governor of the State of West Virginia by a commission appointed by him to investigate and report upon such conditions. The members of this commission were Bishop P. J. Donahue of the Catholic Diocese of this State, Capt. S. L. Walker of the State Militia and F. O. Blue, State Tax Commissioner, men of the highest character and integrity. From this report and current history, it appears 801 that the effort to unionize West Virginia still continues and has more recently been directed to the Paint Creek and Cabin Creek fields in Kanawha County; that such efforts have led to such a condition of riot, bloodshed and general lawlessness as to require the Governor of the State to twice put the district under martial law to save life and property. I quote from the report as to the condition of the miners:

To this inquiry we have devoted special attention within the limits of the time and opportunity at our disposal, and after careful personal investigation, supplemented by a great body of formal sworn testimony sifted and tested by severe and exhaustive cross examination, this Commission has arrived at the unanimous conclusion that the general surroundings of the miners on Paint Creek and Cabin Creek respectively are very good, when compared with those of the miners of the few unionized plants on the right bank of the Kanawha and with those of the miners throughout the state and the nation. We have gone into their houses and carefully examined them. They are above the average of miners' homes in most places.

And as to wages:

A careful consideration of the evidence adduced leads us to the following conclusions:

(1) The average annual wage of miners in West Virginia for the years 1905-11, inclusive, is $554.26.

(2) The average annual wage of the miners on Paint Creek and Cabin Creek is from $600.00 to $700.00.

(3) The average wage on Paint Creek and Cabin Creek (non-union) is fully equal to if not greater than that of the miners in the very limited number of unionized plants in the state on the opposite bank of the Kanawha River.

These figures may appear small and inadequate, but, slender as they are, they exceed the average wage obtained in Illinois, a unionized state, which is but $510.86 a year. We have been unable to secure any official figures as to the average annual wage in the unionized states of Indiana, Western Pennsylvania and Ohio. But we are informed by experts and we believe that the average wage in the two states first mentioned probably falls a little below that prevailing in Illinois; while the annual wage in Ohio, owing to local mining conditions, falls a little below those of Western Pennsylvania. This classification, in the order of the rewards of labor, puts West Virginia at the head of the list. If we inquire into these 802 figures more closely we find they are very substantially affected by several causes, among which comes first the unwillingness of a large number of the miners to work more than four days a week at the most. A minute examination of the payrolls discloses the fact that sixteen or seventeen days in the month constitute a high average, and that many engaged in the mines decline to labor more than twelve or fourteen days. This is particularly true of some of the native born miners and many colored men and results in the necessity of keeping twenty or thirty per cent more miners in a given operation than would be required if steady application to work were the rule. At several of the mines in the districts under investigation were found men wholly illiterate and without any special knowledge or skill, other than that acquired by their daily experience, earning four to five and in some cases seven six dollars a day of eight or nine hours; men with savings bank accounts of one or two thousand dollars and others who had purchased out of their savings small farms or other properties adjacent to the mines.

And as to the causes of the trouble:

This arises, in our judgment, from the efforts of the United Mine Workers to organize the union in the whole chain of plants along said creeks. Their desire is to make the present strike region the place for the insertion of the thin edge of the wedge of Unionism with the ultimate aim of organizing the whole state. The frank declaration on oath of Mr. Thos. Cairns, Local President of District No. 17, would appear to put this intention beyond the region of doubt. The United Mine Workers' association contends that this is essential to the well being of the seventy-six thousand or more miners of West Virginia. That by this means and this alone can their lot be improved, their rights safeguarded, and the standard of living so raised as to bring it up to a level befitting a citizen, howsoever lowly, of this republic. All classes of people, recognizing the force of the adage, "In union there is strength," do so organize. Even the operators themselves form associations; "Why," say the toilers, "should we also not unite in lawful combinations?" The operators cannot and do not resist this right as a general proposition, but their claim is that the peculiar industrial conditions in West Virginia would render it ruinous and therefore impossible for them to recognize the Union. The geographical position of this state is such, together with the small consumption within her own borders, that of her total coal output of over sixty millions of tons, she markets barely ten per cent within her own borders and 803 ninety per cent or more must be hauled to the market through the competing territories of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois known as the four competitive states; that the operators of said states have always on the floors of Joint miners' and mine-owners' conventions shown fierce and undisguised hostility to this state, endeavoring in every way to crowd her out of the market, and going the length of stating by the mouth of one of Pennsylvania's leading operators, that the opening of mines here at all was "an economic blunder." Resort has even been had to the Interstate Commerce Commission, resulting in reduction of rates to the material advantage of the competitors of West Virginia operators in freight differentials. It has been claimed, too, and with some appearance of probability, that the operators of the said four competitive states are hand in glove with the United Mine Workers in their attempts to unionize West Virginia so that the representatives of the coal interests of this state must go with their relative small representation into conventions to regulate conditions and prices and would come home having rates imposed upon them which, taking into consideration the heavy differentials in railroad hauls, would practically put them out of business and close every mine in the state. They decline, they say, to be wiped out in such fashion: they claim the right to settle their own affairs within the borders of their own state. Even if they come to terms with the district authorities of the United Mine Workers here in West Virginia those terms may not be approved at the headquarters at Indianapolis, and all the labored attempts at amicable adjustment may fall through. Further they claim that the few Unionized mines in West Virginia do not and cannot obtain anything like an adequate return on the capital invested. And so, to probe this deplorable situation down to the bedrock of facts, the geographical position of West Virginia is largely responsible for all this industrial strife. Our retarded manufacturing development is also a contributing cause. The consumption of coal within our borders, as elsewhere noted herein, particularly by manufactories, is almost negligible. No state in the nation has more inviting natural resources nor offers greater inducements to manufacturing enterprise than West Virginia—great areas of superior coal for steam and coke, splendid timber of many species, almost inexhaustible supply of natural gas and unlimited water power awaiting to be utilized in the arts of industry. It is impossible not to recognize the merit of, and to sympathize with, many of the contentions on both sides of this unhappy quarrel. Most assuredly each party believes unreservedly in the justice of its claim.

It is in the attempted enforcement of them that each has 804 passed the limits of justice to say nothing of Christian charity and broad humanity. Two facts loom big over the smaller ones developed in this bulk of testimony—the desperate efforts and often unwarranted and unlawful acts of the United Miners to force the union into the disturbed districts, and the equally desperate, unwarranted and unlawful acts of the operators and their agents to keep the union out. Thus, for months before the actual break, union agitators, many of them strangers, attempted to invade Paint Creek and Cabin Creek to persuade the miners to join the union. They called meetings of the workers and described to them the hardships and injustice of their lot and the oppression under which they suffered. The wildest theories concerning the rights of property and the means of production were propounded and advocated, and doctrines closely verging upon anarchy were upheld with such effect that men, who before were living peaceably and in comparative prosperity, purchased Winchesters, revolvers, blackjacks, and other murderous weapons to shoot down the coal "barons" and their myrmidons. Mild eyed men, seventy-five per cent of them with usually cool Anglo-Saxon blood in their veins and with instincts leading to law and order inherited down through the centuries, gradually saw red, and with minds bent on havoc and slaughter marched from union districts across the river like Hughestion, Cannelton and Boomer, patrolled the woods overhanging the creek bed and the mining plants, finally massing on the ridges at the head waters and arranging a march to sweep down Cabin Creek and destroy everything before them to the junction. Meanwhile, the operators hurried in over a hundred guards heavily armed, purchased several deadly machine guns and many thousands of rounds of ammunition. Several murders were perpetrated and all who could, got away; men, women and children fled in terror and many hid in cellars and caves. If ever there was a case for some strong measure like martial law, the conditions prevailing on Monday, September 2, 1912, the eve of the proclamation, presented it. In fact, in the opinion of expert witnesses on the scene, martial law, and martial law alone, was the only measure to meet the desperate situation. We believe, partly on the evidence adduced, and in part from the personal knowledge of two members of the Commission who were on the ground, one in active military service, that but for such proclamation taking effect on Tuesday, September 3rd, at daylight, there would have been great destruction of property and loss of life in the strike zone. The enormous quantities of Winchesters, revolvers and other weapons up to machine guns captured from both sides and brought to camp at Paint Creek Junction also 805 bore mute, but eloquent, witness of the height to which the passions of the opposing forces had mounted.

Now these propositions, trite and fundamental as they are, will assist us to apportion the blame for the strike and the subsequent disorders on Paint Creek and Cabin Creek and the close neighborhood:

First. Every man has a right to quit his employment and seek other work for any grievence he has or injustice which he may conceive to have been done to him, but

Second. He has absolutely no right to obstruct, molest, threaten or otherwise prevent another man from taking the position he has of his own accord abandoned. Organized society and natural law can never yield one jot or tittle on that head. To do so would be to acquiesce in the regime of brute force—a veritable reign of terror.

Third. Labor has the right to organize for its benefit, protection, increase of wages, and better living conditions, and to have recognition of such organization, but Fourth. Its organization has no right to coerce by threats or violence any one to become affiliated with it when he does not desire to do so; nor to assault or put in bodily fear one who desires to labor without belonging to it; nor to destroy property of the employer who does not desire to contract with it; nor to violate its contract with its employer without cause.

There is abundant evidence before us that a reign of terror was attempted to be organized in the strike district and outside of it. It is true that the officers of the United Mine Workers professed to counsel moderation and a strict observance of law and order on various occasions, but there is testimony tending strongly to show that harangues delivered in public, and of which stenographic reports have been submitted as exhibits, incited the miners to violence and in some cases to murder. These harangues were in some instances delivered in the presence of officers of the United Mine Workers' Association and from platforms upon which they stood and from which they, too, spoke; but the murderous and anarchistic utterances referred to were never disclaimed or disapproved by them either at the time or subsequent to their delivery. Furthermore, there is some evidence tending to show that officers stood by without interfering or protesting while non-union men were brutally beaten. Again, the warning to other miners from outside not to come into the strike region published for many weeks in their local organ and also filed as an exhibit and amounting in effect to a grave threat throws a strong light on the actual situation. We fear that the net result of the action and utterances of those acting and speaking under the apparent sanction and approval of the officers of the 806 United Mine Workers was to foment bitter feeling and to incite to serious breaches of the peace. In all this, even granting that they were not acting against any express law set down in the statute books, yet they were acting against the fundamental principles of right and justice.

These commissioners also examined the mining conditions existing in the Fairmount and Norfolk and Western regions of the state. I cannot extend this opinion by quoting further from it but am justified in saying that they found and report such conditions to be in effect very superior to those obtaining elsewhere in unionized fields; conditions under which men have remained in continuous employment for fifteen to twenty years; have saved money and purchased homes and farms; have furnished to them houses comfortable, with electric lights, some with shower baths, good sanitation and water supply, and with wages such as to enable the foreign born miners in the forty-four operations of the Consolidated Coal Company (Fairmont field) to send from $125,000 to $150,000 annually to their dependent relatives in Europe.

All the evidence in this voluminous record goes to show pretty conclusively that the fourteen years' struggle of this labor organization since it entered into the compact with the operators of Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois in 1898 to unionize the operations in West Virginia has not been in the interest either of the betterment of mine labor in the State or of upholding that free commerce in coal between the states guaranteed by Federal law, but to restrain and even destroy it in West Virginia for the benefit of these unionized competitive States. It may be unfortunate for those states that nature has favored West Virginia, Kentucky and other southern states by giving them better coal and less expensive mining conditions, but this does not warrant the operators and miners there to combine and confederate for the purpose of depriving the consuming public of the right to purchase the better coal at the lower cost, if desired. Such a combination is clearly a common law conspiracy, too far reaching to be reasonable, in restraint of trade, as well, in my judgment, a direct violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust law. It is further, in my judgment, a combination or conspiracy against the rights of the many thousands of non-union miners in West Virginia who are entitled to enjoy the advantages in their labor that nature has given them.

But the question at once arises, how could this Union carry out this contract with the operators of Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois to substantially restrain or suppress coal 807 mining in West Virginia, Kentucky and other states by unionizing them? This brings us squarely to an examination of its constitution, manual, obligations, by-laws and rules, by which, according to the English decisions, the legality or illegality of such combinations is to be determined. Turning to these, which are in evidence and not denied, we find that when a miner is initiated into this organization he is required to take an obligation for life as follows:

I do sincerely promise, of my own free will, to abide by the laws of this Union; to bear true allegiance to, and keep inviolate the principles of the United Mine Workers of America; never to discriminate against a fellow-worker on account of creed, color or nationality; to defend freedom of thought, whether expressed by tongue or pen, to defend on all occasions and to the extent of my ability the members of our organization.

That I will not reveal to any employer or boss the name of any one a member of our Union. That I will assist all members of our organization to obtain the highest wages possible for their work; that I will not accept a brother's job who is idle for advancing the interests of the Union or seeking better remuneration for his labor; and, as the mine workers of the entire country are competitors in the labor world, I promise to cease work at any time I am called upon by the organization to do so. And I further promise to help and assist all brothers in adversity, and to have all mine workers join our Union that we may be able to enjoy the fruits of our labor; that I will never knowingly wrong a brother or see him wronged if I can prevent it.

To all this I pledge my honor to observe and keep as long as life remains, or until I am absolved by the United Mine Workers of America.

This obligation is required under assurance beforehand that it will require "nothing contrary to your civil or religious duties," yet it does in fact require him to alienate for life or until the Union absolves him "his freedom to dispose of his own labor or his own capital according to his own will * * * make himself a slave" contrary to all law, English, American and common, and in express violation of the bill of rights set forth in the Constitution of West Virginia. It binds him never to accept employment in place of a fellow member "idle for advancing the interests of the Union or seeking better remuneration for his labor" no matter how anxious he may be to secure work, how well satisfied he might be with the wage offered, and how much he may need the work by reason of a starving family on his hands to support. It further binds 808 him "to cease work at any time I am called upon by the organization to do so," regardless of the dire consequences that may result to him and those dependent upon him. It may well be said that such provisions under the law cannot be enforced. No, not legally, but practically it is different. His refusal to comply with this obligation subjects or may subject him to such social ostracism on the part of his fellow members as to compel obedience. They may taunt him with being without honor or integrity, they may call him

"black sheep," "scab" and other opprobrious epithets given new meanings in the English language because of just such conditions arising under the operations of these labor combinations, and they may and do drive him out of work and the community as shown by the facts set forth in many decisions of the courts of this country. But this is immaterial from a legal standpoint for, as I have shown, the law distinctly bans such obligations as unlawful and, therefore, the requiring them on the part of these labor organizations is unlawful. But to further show how complete control the Union thus obtains and how complete the surrender to such control on the part of the member is I quote further from the Constitution of its national organization as follows:

Article I.

Sec. 3. This organization shall be composed of International, District, Subdistrict and Local Unions.

Sec. 4. The International Union shall have jurisdiction over all Districts, Sub-Districts and Local Unions, which shall be governed by this constitution.

Article II.

Section 1. The officers of the Union shall be one President, one Vice-President, one Secretary-Treasurer, and an Executive Board to be composed of one member from each district under the jurisdiction of United Mine Workers, each district to elect its member of the International Executive Board, the President, Vice-President and Secretary-Treasurer to be members of the board by reason of their position.

Article IV.

Sec. 11. The funds of the organization shall be used for the purpose of assisting those who are in need from idleness or distress, when the payment of the same has been approved by the International Executive Board.

809 Article VII.

Cards.

Section 1. Local Unions shall provide each member with a Due Card, upon which the dues and assessments paid by the member shall be entered, which shall be his receipt for the same.

Sec. 2. Due Cards shall not admit any person to membership from one local to another, and to protect the membership of individuals who are unable to pay their dues because of no Local existing where they reside, the International, District and Sub-District Secretaries shall, upon the payment of dues and assessments by said member, issue the usual cards for the same; provided that this shall not apply to a member living in a locality where a Local Union is in existence.

Sec. 3. No person a member of the organization, who holds a Due or Transfer Card showing him to be a member in good standing, shall be debarred or hindered from obtaining work on account of race, creed or nationality. Cards properly filled out and signed by the officers of miners' unions in foreign countries shall be accepted in lieu of initiation fees.

Sec. 4. Any member desiring to leave the mine where his Local is located and work elsewhere, shall immediately make application to the Secretary of the Local for a Transfer Card, and if he has paid all dues and assessments, the President and Recording Secretary shall issue a Transfer Card to him, which shall be attested by the Financial Secretary, providing the Local Union is in good standing with the International, District, and Sub-District Unions, which shall be accepted in any District, and in case such person cannot produce a Transfer Card he shall pay the regular initiation fee. All Transfer Cards shall be deposited as the laws of the District where work is secured may direct.

Sec. 5. When a person who has not been a member of the organization three months or more secures a Transfer Card from a Local Union in a District where a dispensation has been granted said Transfer Card shall not be accepted by any Local in a different District from the one in which the Local issuing the same is located, unless said Transfer Card is accompanied by an amount equal to the difference between the initiation fee by said member and the initiation fee provided for in the District where the card is deposited.

$10 Sec. 6. No card shall be issued to any member when the Local is three or more months in arrears to the International, District or Sub-District for dues or assessments. Officers of any Local Union issuing cards in violation of any Section of Article VII shall be fined $10.00 for each card issued, the fine to be collected in the same manner as dues and assessments.

Sec. 7. The transfer Card must show that the member receiving it has paid all dues and assessments for the month in which it was issued, and must also show at what class of labor he was employed.

Sec. 8. When a Transfer Card is issued to any member, it must be deposited by him with some Local Union or with the International Secretary-Treasurer within three months after the last day of the month in which it was issued to him, else the card will become void and he can only become a member again by initiation as a new member.

Sec. 9. When a member presents a Transfer Card to a Local Union at any mine where he works or desires to work, the Local Union must accept the same and admit him to membership in that Local, unless the local issuing the same is not in good standing as shown by the monthly report of the Secretary-Treasurer, or the person to whom the card is issued has not been a member of the organization for three months as provided for in Section 5 of this Article, and shall collect from him all dues and assessments from the time between the last day of the month in which the card was issued and the date of depositing the same.

Sec. 10. The Sub-District or International Secretary-Treasurer shall not accept a Transfer Card if the member is where he can deposit with a Local Union.

Sec. 11. The International Secretary-Treasurer shall prepare and send out monthly a statement of all Locals three months or more in arrears for dues and assessments, and no Local Union shall refuse to accept a Transfer Card from any Local unless it appears on said list as being in bad standing. Local Unions on strike shall be exempt from the provisions of this section.

Sec. 12. All Transfer Cards shall be made in book form, with two stubs attached. The books to be numbered, and each card in the book to be numbered and bear the number of the book. The stubs to be printed in conformity with the card itself. The 811 card and one stub to be filled out by the Recording Secretary and certified to by the President and Financial Secretary of the Local Union granting the same; one stub to be retained by the Local issuing the card for future reference, the other stub to accompany the card and must be immediately filled out by the Secretary of the Local where the card is deposited and returned by him to the Secretary of the Local that issued the card.

Sec. 13. The President, Financial and Recording Secretary of the Local Union shall keep a record of all Transfer Cards bought by, issued by and deposited in their respective Local Unions. The Auditing Committee shall compare their records every three months, and in the presence of the Local Union destroy all Transfer Cards that have been deposited that there is no dispute about.

Article XII.

Sec. 2. Districts may adopt such laws for their government as they may deem necessary; provided they do not conflict with the International Union.

Article XIII.

Sec. 2. Sub-Districts may adopt such laws for their government as they may deem necessary, provided they do not conflict with International and District constitutions or agreements entered into.

Sec. 3. All Local Unions within the territory of Sub-Districts already organized in any District, shall contribute and become a part of the same and comply with its laws, before they are entitled to pass-word or representation in either International or District organization.

Article XIV.

Section 1. Local Unions shall be composed of miners, mine laborers and other workmen, skilled and unskilled, working in and about the mines, except mine manager, top boss and persons engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors, and shall be given such numbers as the International Secretary-Treasurer may assign them.

Sec. 2. All Locals shall be under the jurisdiction of the International, District, and Sub-District Unions, and may make such 812 laws for their government as they deem necessary, provided they do not conflict with the International, District and Sub-District Constitutions or agreements entered into. Any Local Union or members thereof violating this section shall be subject to a fine of not less than five dollars.

And to further show how this Union undertakes to control the freedom of its members to work when and for whom they please, also its determination to destroy the right of the employer to conduct his own business as he pleases and to discharge and employ whom he pleases, I quote these sections of Art. X of this Constitution:

Section 1. When trouble of a local character arises between members of a Local Union and their employers, the officers of said Local shall endeavor to effect an amicable adjustment, and failing in this they shall immediately notify the officers of the District to which the affected Locals are attached, and said District officers shall immediately investigate the cause of complaint; and failing to effect a peaceable settlement on a basis that would be fair and just to aggrieved members, finding that a strike would best serve the interests of the locality affected, they may order the inauguration of a strike, but no local strike shall be legalized or supported by a District unless its inauguration was approved by the officers of the District or by the International Executive Board, upon an appeal taken by the aggrieved members from the decision of the District officers; any Local Union striking in violation of the above provisions shall not be sustained or recognized by the International officers.

Sec. 3. When any member of the United Mine Workers is suspended or discharged, it shall be the duty of the Mine Committee to immediately investigate the case, and if the member discharged is not guilty of an offense justifying the same, the grievance shall immediately be reported to the Sub-District and District President in writing, under the seal of the Local, and, if, upon investigation, the report of the Local Committee is found correct, the Sub-District and District President shall immediately insist upon the reinstatement of the suspended or discharged member.

Sec. 4. The International officers shall, at any time they deem it to be the best interests of mine workers in a District that is idle, for just and sufficient reasons, order a suspension in any other District or Districts that would in any way impede the settlement of the District affected; provided, that such action would conserve to the best interests of the United Mine Workers of America.

813 I also quote the following from the Constitution of District No. 6:

Article 1.

Sec. 1. This organization shall be known as District No. 6 of the United Mine Workers of America.

Sec. 2. One of the objects of this organization is to unite all employees in and around the coal mines of Ohio and the Pan Handle District of West Virginia.

Article VIII.

Section 1. In case of trouble arising in any local with the employer, it shall be the duty of the local officers to try to effect a settlement; failing in this the grievance shall be presented to the sub-district president in writing, who shall investigate the grievance or dispute and settle, if possible. Should he fail, he shall consult the District President who shall settle the dispute either by suspending work or such other methods as they may deem best. In case of a direct violation of agreements, the sub-district president or Local Union affected are authorized to order a suspension of work.

Sec. 2. When it becomes necessary for the District President to close a mine, or when a mine or mines from some other legitimate cause has been forced to close down, said officers may, if they deem it wise, close every other mine in district, or may distribute those idle men into any other mine or mines in the district in which said mine or mines so closed may be situated.

Article IX.

Section 1. The initiation fee in District 6 shall be $10.00, and all persons applying for and securing work in the mines who are not practical workers shall pay $10.00 initiation fee. Any person applying for work at any organized mine shall present a United Mine Workers' card. In case said person cannot present such a union card he shall pay the regular initiation fee.

Sec. 6. All persons employed as check-weighmen shall be members of the United Mine Workers for a period of six months before they are elected to such position. Notice shall be posted near 814 the weigh sheet at least three days before the election of a check-weighman, and no persons are entitled to vote except those who are assessed to pay him his wages.

Sec. 12. When a miner's son becomes old enough to work in mine he shall be given the preference over other applicants for work.

Sec. 15. Any member of our organization working in or around the mine, working on idle days or extra time, in violation of our Constitution or agreements, shall be fined $2.50 for each offense.

Sec. 17. That a fine of $10.00 in each individual case where it can be proven that a member of the Union leaves his district for West Virginia, or any other unfair mines, and remains there one month or more without having deposited his transfer card and returns without giving a satisfactory account of why he has not deposited his transfer card; and the fine to be collected by the Local Union where he works.

And these from the Constitution of Sub-District 5 of District 6:

Article I.

Section 1. This organization shall be known as Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America.

Sec. 2. The object of this organization is to unite the mine employees of Belmont, Jefferson, Tuscarawas, Harrison and Carroll Counties in Ohio, and that part of Stark County, South of Canton, other than the Massillon Seam, and Hancock, Brooke, Ohio and Marshall Counties of West Virginia, to ameliorate their conditions by methods of conciliation, arbitration or strike.

Sec. 3. All men are eligible and must be members of the U. M. W. of A. who work in and around the mines.

Article IX.

Sec. 2. That a fine of $10.00 in each case where it can be proven that a member of our Union leaves his district for West Virginia or any other unfair mine, and remains one month or more without depositing a Transfer Card, and returns without giving a satisfactory account of why he has not deposited his Transfer Card, and a fine to be collected by the Local Union where he is working.

815 Sec. 3. Any member of our organization working in or around the mine, working on idle days or extra time, in violation of our Constitution or agreements, shall be fined $2.50 for each offense.

It very clearly appears from a study of these rules that (a) they undertake to require members of the organization to surrender their individual freedom of action; (b) to coerce non-union miners to join the union, whether wishing to do so or not, for they must be members "who work in and around the mines"; (c) to control or rather abrogate and destroy the right of the employer to contract, with the men independent of the organization; (d) to exclude his right to employ non-union labor if he desires; (e) to limit his right, in the absence of contract, to discharge whom he pleases, when he pleases, and for what reason he sees fit; and (f) to assume the right on the part of the organization, through its officers, to control the employer's business, to shut down his mine by calling out the men in obedience to their obligation, whenever it is deemed to the interests of the union regardless of the employer's interests or the effect that such action may have upon him, as regards loss, damage and necessary violations, on account thereof, of his existing contracts with others. To such extent in this direction does such assumption of power and control go, that it is directly provided that such suspension of operations may be ordered, even though there be no dispute between the employer and the union, but solely because such dispute exists between the union and some one or more of his rival operators in business in the same district. In all these particulars these provisions violate the law guaranteeing, under our free government, the rights of both the labor and capital involved, and, further, the rights of the public consuming the product of such labor and capital. But still further, and what manifestly is of far more vital importance, under the power so assumed by this close and compact organization, and by reason of these obligations and rules enforced by it upon its members, it is more than probable, that if allowed to unionize and control the mining operations in West Virginia, it will be entirely able to fulfill its express contract of 1898 with its co-conspirators, the operators of Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois, and "protect" them from the competition of West Virginia coals, restore to them their lost markets and practically destroy the coal mining industry of this state, to accomplish which the union has admittedly already spent hundreds of thousands of dollars and sacrificed human life, as yet to no avail. It is not to be assumed that because I have not discussed other of the rules and purposes of this organization 816 that I have ignored their meritorious and beneficent character; nor that I have not considered the very natural and human instinct inspiring the officers and members of this union, resident in other states and laboring under physical disadvantage in mining conditions, to regard their personal interests as paramount. Most of its officers have testified in open court before me and have fully convinced me that they are men sincere in the conviction of the integrity of their action, perfectly frank and truthful in their testimony, self-educated and who have by their own effort rightly acquired the leadership in their life work. So far as I am concerned, the law requires me to consider these rules of the organization and ascertain whether any of them are unlawful in character. If so, whether the unlawful ones dominate the actions and purposes of the organization, or whether the purposes contemplated by the unlawful ones are so intermingled with those designed by the lawful ones as to render separation impracticabe. If such domination of the unlawful prevails or such separation cannot be made, then under the authorities I have cited the organization becomes unlawful. In view of the undisputed testimony in this case I am constrained to believe both unlawful conditions exist as to these rules. They go far beyond those held to be unlawful, dominating and inseparable by the English cases which I have cited. They have permitted the officers of this organization to expend, by their own admission, hundreds of thousands of dollars of the funds derived from members bound by these rules, in an unlawful conspiracy to restrain trade upon such a large scale as to involve the whole vast coal mining industry of West Virginia.

The final question arises how is this plaintiff, the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, affected and what right has it to complain and appeal for injunctive relief?

The evidence establishes these facts: Plaintiff is an operating coal mining company in the West Virginia field. Its mines are situate in what is known as the Pan Handle just across the Ohio river from Ohio, and this union assumes jurisdiction over this territory, incorporating it with some five counties in Ohio, in Sub-District 5 of District 6 of its organization. Plaintiff started operations in 1903 as a non-union mine. At this time a company having some stockholders identical with those of plaintiff, and others not such stockholders of plaintiff, was operating a union mine at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio. The officials of the union notified the plaintiff that if its mine were not unionized the Mount Pleasant Mine mine would be shut down by it.

On April 1, 1903, the demand of the union was conceded by 817 plaintiff and it became a union mine. The next day a strike was called by the union and plaintiff's men went out and remained out twenty-one days. This strike cost plaintiff $7,242.00. Its occasion was a dispute as to the scale price for run of mine coal and was compromised by the union accepting an advance of about one and a half cents per ton for run of mine coal over what the company had been paying and much less than had been demanded when the strike was called. The miners resumed work on May 23d, 1903, and worked until April 20, 1904, when another strike was called about the run of mine coal, the union officials not being satisfied with the prior year's compromise and insisting on what was called the average as distinguished from the tonnage basis. The plaintiff yielded and the average basis was established. This strike lasted until June 15th, 1904, fifty-five days, and cost plaintiff $17,000. On April 1, 1905, the union demanded a return to the tonnage basis, as being more profitable to the miner than the average one. This demand was conceded by plaintiff and the tonnage basis was resumed. A national strike was called for April 1, 1906. In anticipation of it, plaintiff sought to protect its fuel trade by arranging with the union officials for the men to continue work for that purpose, offering to pay the scale prices demanded by the union. This was at first agreed to upon condition that no commercial and only fuel engine coal should be mined. This permission was later withdrawn and the men ordered to strike, which they did on April 16, 1906. The men did not want to quit work and tried to get permission from their union officials to continue loading engine coal, for the reason that, if they were not allowed to do so, the B. & O. Railroad Company would haul in non-union coal and have it loaded into their engines from plaintiff's tipple and bins under the terms of plaintiff's contract with the railroad company. The union was notified too by plaintiff that if the men were called out on strike the mine would not be run union again. This availed nothing. The strike was called, coal was hauled from an Ohio union mine with which settlement had been made by the union, by the railroad and loaded on its engines over plaintiff's tipple. This strike continued until June 12, 1906, fifty-six days, and cost the plaintiff $24,500. This national strike was finally settled in July, 1906, by the adoption of the 1903 scale, which plaintiff from the start had offered to pay. But in the meantime the Hitchman miners had been promised benefits by the union which were not paid, and they were incensed because the Ohio coal had been allowed to be hauled and loaded on its engines by the railroad over plaintiff's tipple and because plaintiff's proposition to pay the 1903 scale had not been accepted.
818 Thereupon a mutual agreement was entered into between plaintiff and these individual miners to the effect that the men should abandon the union and the company should operate the mine non-union. This was on June 12, 1906, and the agreement was evidenced by memorandum cards signed by the men, reading as follows:

"I am employed by, and work for, the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, with the express understanding that I am not a member of the United Mine Workers of America, and will not become so while an employe of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company, and that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company is run non-union, and agrees with me that it will run non-union while I am in its employ. If at any time while I am employed by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Company I want to become connected with the United Mine Workers of America, or any affiliated organization, I agree to withdraw from the employment of said company, and agree that while I am in the employ of that company I will not make any effort amongst its employes to bring about the unionizing of that mine, against the company's wish. I have either read the above or heard same read."

The men surrendered their charter to the union and on June 25th, 1906, secured a charter from this State as a corporation under the name of the Independent Mine Workers of West Virginia. Prior to April 1, 1903, when the mine ran non-union, the company had no trouble whatever with its men, and since June 12, 1906, when it started non-union again, it has run continually without trouble. During the three years and two months from April, 1903, to June, 1906, when unionized, it had three strikes called that suspended its operation for a total of 162 days at a total cost or loss of $48,742.00.

In March, 1907, the sub-district convention of the union resolved "to take up the work of organizing every mine in the sub-district as quickly as it can be done." In accord with this resolution officials of the union, defendants here, called on the plaintiff's management and expressed their desire to reunionize the Hitchman mine. The company's officials declined the suggestion. The mine officials asked that the matter be referred to the company's board of directors. This was done and the board of directors declined to have anything to do with the union and so notified its officials. Reports were put in circulation among plaintiff's men to the effect that the mine was going to be unionized and that they had better join the union if they wanted to retain their jobs. Early in September, 1907, the defendant Hughes was sent by the union into the Pan Handle 819 territory to organize the non-union mines and compel recognition by them of the union. As a result of his work he secured twenty-two men to join the union and quit work at a mine known as the Glendale, which was owned by the same stockholders and run by the same management as the Hitchman. He also succeeded in organizing the Richland mine in that territory, and when its operator refused to recognize the union, shut it down. According to his statements, he succeeded in securing enough men at the Hitchman mine to agree to join the union to enable him to unionize it, and was about ready to and intended to shut it down if its management did not recognize the union. Thereupon the plaintiff company applied for and obtained the restraining order and temporary injunction in this cause. It is also established that Hughes and other officers of this union were beforehand fully informed of the contracts existing between plaintiff and its employes. These facts very clearly demonstrate such interest in this plaintiff in the premises as to warrant its appeal for aid from this court of equity. I conclude, therefore, that this organization, known as the United Mine Workers of America, is an unlawful one because, (a) of its principles as set forth in its constitutions, obligation for membership, and rules, which (1) require its members to surrender their individual freedom of action; (2) seeks to require, in practical effect, all mine workers to become members of it whether desirous of doing so or not; (3) seeks to control, and restrict, if not destroy, the right of the mine owner to contract with its employes independent of the organization; (4) to exclude his right to employ non-union labor if he desires; (5) to limit his right to discharge, in the absence of contract, whom he pleases, when he pleases and for any cause or reason that to him seems proper; (6) assumes the right on its part, by and through its officers, to control the mine owner's business by shutting down his mine, calling out his men upon indefinite strike in obedience to their obligation to the union, whether the men desire to quit work or not, whenever the union's officers deem it to be for the best interests of the union, regardless of the rights and interests of the mine owner, and regardless of his direct loss and damages and such indirect loss and damage as may be incurred by him by reason of the resultant violation of contracts by him with others. Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436. I further conclude that it is an unlawful organization because, (b) of its procedure and practices in that (1) it seeks to create a monopoly of mine labor such as to enable it, as an organization, to control the coal mining business of the country, and (2) has by express contract joined in a combination and conspiracy with a body of rival operators, resident in other 820 states, to control, restrain, and, to an extent at least, destroy the coal trade of the State of West Virginia. It has spent fourteen years' time and hundreds of thousands of dollars in effort to accomplish this unlawful purpose. The rules of law relating to the responsibility of individual members concerned in such combination and conspiracy are plain and well defined. Great latitude in establishing conspiracy by the admission of circumstantial evidence is allowed, circumstances tending in slight degree to a determination of the truth are allowed to be proved. Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 40 L. ed. 269. The acts and declarations of co-conspirators in execution of a conspiracy are evidenced against others of their number. Id.

"Where two or more are associated together for the same illegal purpose, any act to or declaration of one of the parties, in reference to the common object, and forming a part of the res gestæ, in its execution, may be given in evidence against the others." American Fur. Co. v. United States, 2 Pet. 358, 7 L. ed. 450.

On the question whether a combination is lawful or not, declarations of those engaged in it, explanatory of acts done in furtherance of its objects, are competent evidence after the combination has been proved. Wiborg v. United States, 163 U. S. 632, 41 L. ed. 289; Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 19 L. ed. 106. See also Sprinkle v. United States, 141 Fed. 811, decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals for this circuit, and Ellis v. Dempsey, 4 W. Va. 126, where these principles are fully upheld.

In the very recent cases (decided June 10, 1912) of Hyde v. United States, 225 U. S. 347, 56 L. ed. 1114, and Brown v. Elliott, 225 U. S. 392, 56 L. ed. 1136, it is held:

There may be a constructive presence in a state, distinct from personal presence, by which a crime committed in another state may be consummated, and render the person consummating it punishable at that place. Overt acts performed in one district by one of the parties who had conspired in another district * * * give jurisdiction to the court in the district where the overt acts are performed as to all the conspirators. Until a conspirator affirmatively withdraws from a continuing conspiracy there is conscious offending that prevents the statute from running.

The law just as clearly lays down the rules to determine what is an unreasonable restraint of trade.

"From the principles, which underlie all the cases, the inference must be necessarily drawn, that if there be any sort of business, which from its peculiar character can be restrained to no extent whatever without prejudice to the public interest, then the courts would be compelled to hold void any contract imposing any restraint, however partial, on this peculiar business; provided, of course, it be shown clearly that the peculiar business thus attempted to be restrained is of such a character that any restraint upon it, however partial, must be regarded by the court as prejudicial to the public interest." West Virginia Transportation Co. v. Ohio River Pipe Line Co., 22 W. Va. 600, 625.

821

In deciding the case of United States v. Addyston Pipe and Steel Co., 29 C. C. A. 141, 158, 85 Fed. 271, 288, Judge Taft said that coal was an article of prime necessity. And in the case of Pocahontas Coke Co. v. Powhatan Coal and Coke Co., 60 W. Va. 508; 56 S. E. 254; 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268; 116 Am. St. Rep. 904, it is held that coal is properly classified under the head of necessaries.

The case of Pocahontas Coke Co. v. Powhatan Coal and Coke Co., supra, also holds—

"A contract, combination, or trust among various producers and sellers of a commodity, the direct and necessary or natural effect of which is to restrain competition and control the prices of such commodity, is in unreasonable restraint of trade, and void at common law, because contrary to public policy.

In determining whether or not a contract or combination is in unreasonable restraint of trade, the subject-matter of the contract or combination, the situation of the parties, and all the circumstances attending the transaction should be considered.

In determining whether or not a contract or combination is in unreasonable restraint of trade, it is immaterial whether or not the commodity which is the subject-matter of the contract or combination is of prime necessity, if the commodity is an article of legitimate trade or commerce.

In determining whether or not a contract is in unreasonable restraint of trade, all the powers of the contract should be considered, and its character determined, not alone by what has been done under it, but by what may be done under it when all of its powers shall have been fully exercised.

It is no defense to the illegality of a contract or combination which is in unreasonable restraint of trade to show that the prices of the commodity which constitutes its subject-matter have not been changed, or even that such prices have been lowered.

822 Unreasonable restraint of trade, which is only partial, is illegal.

In order that a combination or trust may be in unreasonable restraint of trade, it is not necessary that a complete monopoly be formed. The combination or trust is in unreasonable restraint of trade if it tends to monop-ly and is to the injury of the public."

The Supreme Court of the United States has held to the same view of the common law so far as the common law was considered in deciding the case of Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, et al. v. United States, (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 55 L. ed. 619; and the case of United States of America v. American Tobacco Co. et als., and American Tobacco Co. et al. v. United States of America, (1911) 221 U. S. 106; 55 L. ed. 663; 31 S. C. 632.

In Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, it was held that the Sherman Anti-trust Act "prohibits any combination whatever to secure action which essentially obstructs the free flow of commerce between the States, or restricts, in that regard, the liberty of a trader to engage in business;" and this includes "restraints of trade aimed at compelling third parties and strangers involuntarily not to engage in the course of interstate trade except on conditions that the combination imposes" and that it "makes no distinction between classes. Organizations of farmers and laborers were not exempted from its operation, notwithstanding the efforts which the records of Congress show were made in that direction" and that "a combination of labor organizations and the members thereof, to compel a manufacturer whose goods are almost entirely sold in other States to unionize his shops and on his refusal so to do to boycott his goods and prevent their sale in States other than his own until such time as the resulting damage forces him to comply with their demands," is a "combination in restraint of trade."

I further conclude that this Union, in pursuit of its unlawful purposes to secure control and the monopoly of mine labor, and to restrain, suppress, if not destroy, the coal mining industry of West Virginia in the interest of their co-conspirators, rival operators and producers in Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Illinois and Indiana competitive fields, have sought and still seek to compel the plaintiff, the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, to submit to contractual relations with it as an organization, relating to the employment of labor and production contrary to the will and wish of said company; that its officers, in pursuance of such unlawful effort to monopo-823 lize labor and restrain trade, and with knowledge of the express contracts existing between this plaintiff and its employees, have unlawfully sought to cause the breach of the said contracts on the part of its said employees. It is admitted in the testimony of Lewis, Sullivan and Savage that, if this injunction is dissolved, such efforts will be repeated. I do not stop now to further consider the law declaring efforts to secure the breach of contracts unlawful. I have fully considered this question in my former opinion in this case to which I now refer.

It therefore necessarily follows that the plaintiff had by reason of the damage and loss it had already incurred and the damage and loss threatened and imminent to it in futuro, just right to appeal to this court of equity for injunctive relief; that by reason of its unlawful organization, purposes and practices, as hereinbefore set forth, this organization, combination or Union, as now constituted, is unlawful and under the law, therefore, has no right to seek plaintiff's employees to become members thereof or to become party to its unlawful purposes and practices.

The injunction will be made perpetual.

Decree Perpetuating Injunction.

And at another day, to-wit: On the 18th day of January, 1913, the following order was made and entered of record, to-wit:

(Filed June 24, 1913.)

In the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE COMPANY
v.
JOHN MITCHELL et als.

Now comes the plaintiff by George R. E. Gilchrist, its solicitor, and moves to strike out from the file in this cause the praecipe filed by the defendants in the Clerk's office on June 7, 1913, indicating the portions of the record to be incorporated into the transcript upon their appeal from the decree entered in this cause on the eighteenth day of January, 1913, and for reasons for such motion plaintiff says that while said praecipe shows that said defendants propose to appeal generally from said decree of January 18, 1913, yet they propose to incorporate into the record only part of the record which was before and was considered by the trial court in its arriving at and in its rendition of its said judgment and decree, and that said omitted parts of said record are material and essential and should be before any appellate court which is to or may review the said decree of said trial court.

Plaintiff further assigning grounds for its said motion to strike, says that it is not competent to defendants to file such a præcipe and avail themselves of any of the benefits otherwise allowed upon the filing of a proper præcipe.

Assignment of Errors.

(Filed July 10, 1913.)

In the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia.

In Equity.

HITCHMAN COAL & COKE COMPANY, Plaintiff,
vs.
JOHN MITCHELL and Others, Defendants.

Assignment of Errors.

The defendants, T. L. Lewis, individually, William Green, individually, George Savage, individually and as Secretary-Treasurer of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, A. R. Watkins, individually, John Zelenka, individually, and Lee Rankin, individually (called the served defendants), John P. White, as President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America, Frank J. Hayes, as Vice-President of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America, Edwin Perry, as 842 Secretary-Treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America, John Moore, as President of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, John Zelenka, as Vice-President of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, John Albasin as President of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, William Roy, as Vice President of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America, and William Applegarth, as Secretary-Treasurer of Sub-District 5 of District 6 United Mine Workers of America (the last eight above named persons hereafter called the substituted defendants), John Mitchell, W. B. Wilson and Thomas Hughes (the last three above named persons hereafter called the unserved defendants), come now on this the — day of July, 1913, and say that the Court erred in its decree rendered in the said cause on the 18th day of January, 1913, and file the following as their assignment of the errors committed by the entry of said decree:

First. The Court erred in perpetuating the injunction awarded in this cause upon the motion of the plaintiff.

Second. The Court erred in not dissolving the injunction awarded in this case upon the motion of the served defendants.

Third. It does not appear from the whole record that the amount in controversy as to any of the defendants exceeds two thousand dollars.

Fourth. On the theory of the case made by the plaintiff, the matter in controversy is its right to operate its coal plant on a non-union basis—that is, without a contract between it and its employes made collectively with them as members of the United Mine Workers of America—and there is no competent evidence to show that this right exceeds in value the amount of two thousand dollars as compared with its right to operate its plant under contracts with its employes made individually with its employes.

Fifth. The record nowhere discloses any acts imputed to the defendants threatening imminent substantial pecuniary loss to the plaintiff.

Sixth. It is not shown by the whole record that the defendants were attempting to unionize the plaintiff's mine, by the use of force, fraud, violence, or other unlawful means, against the consent of the plaintiff.

843 Seventh. It does not appear from the whole record that the defendants or any of them were attempting to unionize the plaintiff's mine against its consent by any means whatsoever.

Eighth. The whole record does not disclose any attempt on the part of the defendants or any of them, to unionize the plaintiff's mine, except by and with its consent.

Ninth. The record does not disclose any unlawful acts or act threatened or done by the defendants, or any of them, to the material injury of the plaintiff; and especially any injury exceeding two thousand dollars.

Tenth. In finding and declaring that the United Mine Workers of America is an unlawful association or organization.

Eleventh. In finding and holding that the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America and the International Union United Mine Workers of America is an unlawful instrument; and that the various parts, sections and clauses thereof, set forth in the plaintiff's bill, and in the opinion of the learned Court below, delivered on the final hearing of this cause, are contrary to law, and under which the defendants could not associate themselves together or unite for the purposes contemplated by said constitution.

Twelfth. In further finding and holding that the constitutions of District 6, and of Sub-District 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, are unlawful instruments; and that the various parts, sections and clauses thereof in the plaintiff's bill set forth, and especially mentioned in the opinion of the learned Court below delivered on the final hearing of this cause, are against the laws of West Virginia, and under which the defendants cannot associate themselves together for the purpose and in furtherance of the objects contemplated by the said last named constitutions.

Thirteenth. In finding and holding that any of the parts, sections or clauses of any of the said three constitutions referred to and identified in assignments numbers eleven and twelve herein made are unlawful.

Fourteenth. In finding and holding that certain parts, sections and clauses of each of the said three constitutions, being in 844 themselves lawful, are so connected with and dependent upon the unlawful parts thereof, as to render each of the said three constitutions wholly unlawful and under which the defendants cannot lawfully associate themselves together for the purposes and in furtherance of the objects contemplated by each of the said three constitutions.

Fifteenth. In finding and holding that the defendants and other members of the United Mine Workers of America, constitute a combination or conspiracy under the Act of Congress known as the "Sherman Anti-Trust Law."

Sixteenth. In finding and holding that the defendants are in conspiracy or combination with the coal operators of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, known as the central competitive field, to unionize the coal field of West Virginia and against the consent of the operators in the West Virginia field, because there is no allegation of such conspiracy or combination made in the bill filed in this cause.

Seventeenth. In finding and holding that the defendants as members of the United Mine Workers of America are in a combination or conspiracy with the operators of said central competitive field, to unionize plaintiff's employes without its consent, as there is no such allegation of such combination or conspiracy made in the plaintiff's bill.

Eighteenth. In holding that the defendants had not the lawful right to use argument, reason and persuasion to solicit, invite or peaceably induce the plaintiff's employes to become members of the United Mine Workers of America; or to use any lawful means to have the employes of the plaintiff become members of the said labor organization.

Nineteenth. In overruling every one of the exceptions of the served defendants numbered from I to CXIV, inclusive, to certain documentary and oral evidence of the plaintiff, as noted in the said final decree, and in not sustaining each and every one of said exceptions, for the reasons set forth in said written exceptions.

Twentieth. In finding and holding that the defendants were attempting to interfere with the contracts existing between the plaintiff and its employes, and attempting to induce said employes to break said contracts.

Twenty-first. In holding the existence of jurisdiction under the circumstances of this case, to declare the United Mine Work-845 ers an unlawful organization upon any ground whatsoever.

Twenty-second. In holding that the plaintiff had entered into lawful contracts with its employes—contracts not in contravention of public policy—and that the plaintiff is entitled to be protected by a court of equity in the enforcement of its said contracts.

Twenty-third. In declining to hold and adjudicate that the various contracts entered into between the plaintiff in this suit and its employes, was contrary to law, and against public policy, and illegal and void.

And the said substituted defendants say that the Court erred, with special reference to themselves, in the said decree as follows:

(a) In rendering any decree at all against the said served defendants.

(b) In perpetuating the injunction awarded in this cause against the said substituted defendants.

(c) In granting any relief to the plaintiff against the said substituted defendants without making them parties to the plaintiff's bill, and without issuing and serving process upon them to answer said bill, and without affording them an opportunity to make defense thereto.

(d) The rendering of a decree against the said substituted defendants and perpetuating the said injunction as to them operates to deprive them of their liberty without due process of law, in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

And the said unserved defendants say that the Court erred, with special reference to themselves, in the said decree, as follows:

(aa) In rendering any decree against the said unserved defendants.

(bb) In perpetuating the injunction awarded in this cause as to the said unserved defendants.

846 (cc) In granting any relief to the plaintiff against the said unserved defendants without serving process upon them to answer the plaintiff's bill, and without affording them opportunity to make defense thereto.

(dd) In overruling the motion of the unserved defendants to dismiss the suit as to them, upon their special appearance for the sole purpose of making such motion.

(ee) In rendering a decree against the said unserved defendants perpetuating the said injunction against them, the said Court depriving them of their liberty without due process of law, in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

(ff) In rendering a joint and several decree against the said T. L. Lewis and the other served defendants in the said cause, adjudging that they individually do pay the costs of said suit.

No. 1220.

JOHN MITCHELL, Individually; T. L. LEWIS, Individually; W. B. WILSON, Individually, et al., Appellants, versus

HITCHMAN COAL AND COKE COMPANY, a Corporation, Appellee.

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia, at Philippi.

[Argued February 12, 1914. Decided May 28, 1914.]

Before Pritchard, Knapp and Woods, Circuit Judges.

Charles E. Hogg (Charles J. Hogg on Brief) for Appellants, and Geo. R. E. Gilchrist, for Appellee.

PRITCHARD, Circuit Judge:

The plaintiff corporation presented its bill for injunction October 24, 1907, to the Honorable Alston G. Dayton, United States District Judge, in the Circuit Court for the Northern District of West Virginia, against John Mitchell and nine others, alleging itself to be a corporation under the laws of West Virginia, and the defendants to be citizens and residents of several different States other than West Virginia; that nine of said defendants first named are Presidents, Vice-Presidents and Secretary-Treasurers, re-
851 spectively, of the United Mine Workers of America; and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; and of sub-district 5 of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; and the defendant, Thomas Hughes, an organizing agent of said organization; that plaintiff is the owner of about 5,000 acres of coal, has a mine and mining plant on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, that is mining and shipping a daily output of about 1,400 tons of coal, largely under contracts, between 500 and 600 tons to the railroad for its daily engine fuel, has large contracts for future delivery; that prior to April 1st, 1906, it operated its mine by employment of men affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America, but, on that day, a strike was ordered by the officers of the Union, and, on April 16, 1906, the men so employed, in obedience to the demands and orders of defendants, went out and ceased to work. It is charged that this strike was ordered because certain other operators refused to sign the scale demanded by the Union, and so far as plaintiff was concerned it was wholly without justification or excuse because it distinctly agreed to pay the scale price and any increased price fixed thereby from April 1, 1906, the date of the strike order, whenever it might be fixed and agreed upon, with which proposition the miners themselves, whose labor was involved, were entirely satisfied; that notwithstanding this, at the instance of defendants, its mine was shut down from April 16, to June 12, 1906, to its great financial loss and embarrassment by reason of its inability to comply with its existing contracts. The bill then sets forth in detail in effect that on the last named date in order to be able to run said mine it entered into a contract with its men whereby it agreed with them to run its mining operation wholly upon non-union basis, refusing absolutely to employ any union men, and whereby the men on their part agreed not to join or become members of this union and to work for plaintiff as non-union men; that plaintiff has since that time been running its mine under this contract with its men to the entire satisfaction of both, paying its men as high wages as paid in any of the union mines. It then charges the officers and 852 agents of the Union with full knowledge of the existence of this contract, to have repeatedly sought to have plaintiff violate it and agree to reunionize its mine, which plaintiff has refused to do, whereupon such union officers and agents are seeking by inducements, threats and intimidation, to induce plaintiff's employés, bound by said contract with it, to leave its service, break their contract, join the union and also to prevent other men from engaging in its employ, and this, it is charged, with the unlawful purpose to prevent any but union men to work in its mine, compel it to employ none but union men and to submit its business and its property to the jurisdiction and control of said union and its officers. The bill then proceeds to charge the United Mine Workers of America and its subordinate organizations to be unincorporated organizations, having unlawful purposes and designs to create a monopoly and trust in coal mining labor, and in support of these allegations sets forth in extenso, what purports to be excerpts from the constitutions and by-laws of the supreme and subordinate unions, together with the obligation required to be taken by its members and extracts from the proceedings of its national conventions. A distinct conspiracy on the part of defendants as individuals is charged to secure, by reason of their positions as officers of this union, the abandonment by the men of their contract with plaintiff, their joining the union, the inability of plaintiff to employ others, and the entire shutting down of its mine to its irreparable loss and injury.

The answer contains a general denial, which is substantially as follows:

That the United Mine Workers of America and its sub-ordinate associations or branches, by its officers, agents, employés and servants, have sought, and are seeking, by inducements, threats and intimidation, but without physical force, "to cause plaintiff's employés to leave its service and to cause others who have engaged to enter its service to break their engagements of service and not to work for plaintiff, and to prevent others from working for plaintiff, and all with the avowed and actual purpose of compelling plaintiff 853 to recognize said organization, and to force plaintiff to employ none but persons who are members of the United Mine Workers of America."

They deny that any of the expressed objects of the United Mine Workers of America are unlawful.

They deny that the appellants have entered into a combination or conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, to unlawfully to persuade, entice and procure appellee's employés to break, violate and disregard their several contracts with the appellee, with the avowed purpose of compelling appellee to reunionize its plant without its consent, and deny that they have formed a conspiracy to compel, by threats and intimidation, appellee's employés to join said union.

They deny that Zelenka reported, and caused this report to be circulated among appellee's employés, that Zelenka, Green and Watkins (appellants), after a conference with appellee's general manager, had agreed with such general manager, that appellee's employés were allowed to join the United Mine Workers of America and deny that they caused the further statement to be circulated among said employés that they must join the union, or else they would be out of a job at an early day; and deny that they caused to be circulated a statement that only union men would be permitted to work at appellee's mine, and that those of appellee's employés who did not join the union would not be permitted to get a job any place else.

And they deny that the appellants are endeavoring to unionize the appellee's mine, and that they threaten to close down appellee's mine and keep it closed until appellee agrees to sign the scale and employ none but union labor; and they deny that the national organization of the United Mine Workers of America and its district and sub-district organizations are under their constitutions violating either the common or statutory law of the State of West Virginia.

And they deny that the appellants will, unless enjoined, by enticement, persuasion or coercion, bring about the shutting down of appellee's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business; and deny that they will compel the appellee to recognize the ap-854 pellants as members of said labor organization, and will compel appellee to contract with its employés through appellants as officers of said organization, and they deny that they are about to indulge in any of the methods of accomplishing their purpose by the use of threats, intimidation and other unlawful means alleged in said bill.

Presented with this bill were some twenty-eight affidavits in support of its allegations. A temporary restraining order was granted until the next regular term of court to be held at Parkersburg, January 14, 1908, for which date plaintiff's motion for a temporary injunction was set down for hearing. This hearing, on motion of defendants, was continued until May 26, 1908, when plaintiff presented more than twenty additional affidavits and argued its motion for temporary injunction, counsel for defense stating they "did not desire to be heard in opposition to said motion so far as the granting of a temporary injunction at the time was concerned and not consenting but objecting thereto." The temporary injunction was on that day granted in exact accord with the terms of the restraining order.

Answers were filed, exceptions entered thereto, motions as to certain unserved defendants to have said bill dismissed as to them were made and a motion by defendants, disclaiming "any intention of conceding the truth of the allegations of the plaintiff's bill whereby fraud, coercion and intimidation or violence in any form whatsoever is imputed to them," was made to dissolve the injunction, "on the face of the bill and exhibits," in so far as said injunction restrained said defendants or any of them from the use of argument, reason and persuasion, to induce the employés of the plaintiff or any of them to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches; so far as it restrained them from interfering or talking to any person or persons in the employment of the plaintiff, or about to enter the employment of the plaintiff, for the purpose of inducing such persons to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches, in a peaceable and law abiding manner and unaccompanied by intimidation, force, fraud, violence, or coercion; also in so 855 far as it restrained defendants from visiting the homes of plaintiff's employés for the purpose of inducing them by reason, persuasion and argument, unaccompanied by force, fraud, intimidation, violence, or coercion, to become members of the United Mine Workers of America or any of its subordinate branches; in so far as it restrained defendants from going near the premises of plaintiff for the purpose of talking with or inducing the employés of plaintiff to become members of the United Mine Workers of America; in so far as it restrained from unionizing or attempting to do so plaintiff's mine, if by "unionizing" is meant action on the part of defendants to induce the employés of plaintiff to become members of the United Mine Workers of America by the use of argument, persuasion and reason unaccompanied by force, violence, coercion or intimidation; and also in so far as it restrained defendants from interfering with plaintiff's employés if by the term "interfering" is meant that defendants shall be precluded from interviewing and visiting plaintiff's employés for the purpose of inducing them to become members of the union.

This motion was deferred until further orders from the court, and on the 21st day of September, 1909, the court filed an opinion in which it held, among other things, that the defendants were not entitled to have the injunction modified, and a decree in pursuance thereof was entered on the 6th day of October, 1909, from which an appeal was taken to this court, and same was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 176 Fed., 549.

On the 23rd day of December, 1912, the court filed another opinion, and in pursuance thereof entered a final decree perpetuating the injunction theretofore granted, from which defendants took an appeal to this court.

The final decree entered herein was based upon the assumption that there was a conspiracy on the part of the defendants to unionize the plaintiff's mine without its consent, and to bring about the breaking of the contracts existing between the plaintiff and its employés, as well as to secure the breaking of the contract between appellee and its employés which had thereafter been entered into;
856 also to induce the employés to leave its service. These acts are inhibited by the injunction.
